The Chair understood the gentleman from Texas as opposed to the bill.

Mr. CONGER. Ah; but the time was given by the gentleman from Maryland.

The SPEAKER. Five minutes of it—to be in opposition.

Mr. CONGER. But it was given out of the fifteen minutes in favor of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland occupied ten min-utes. He then yielded to the gentleman from Texas, who, as the Chair understood (because he so stated in distinct language) took issue with the gentleman from Maryland. The Chair therefore regarded the gentleman from Texas as speaking against the proposition.

Mr. CONGER. Then there is no opportunity for those who think the money of the Government should be invested in Government bonds, and not scattered about in other securities, to say a word on that subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas occupied the floor fifteen minutes principally on that point.

Mr. McMILLIN. And his amendment looks to that.

The SPEAKER. So that the criticism of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] is not a valid one.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Texas desired to remove the provision of law confining investments to first-mortgage bonds so that they could be distributed over every kind of security, in the discretion of the Secretary.

Several Members. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Michigan is correct, the Chair misunderstood the gentleman from Texas. The Chair understood that gentleman to speak directly to the point that all moneys intended for the sinking fund under the Thurman act should be invested in Government securities.

Mr. CONGER. I understood that by the amendment sent up it was in the discretion of the Secretary to make investments in any security.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be again read.

Mr. CONGER. I think that is the reading of it.
Mr. McLANE. I wish to avail myself of the five minutes

Mr. COX. Is it in order to read the amendment now f
The SPEAKER. This whole proceeding is preliminary to the consideration of the bill. The amendment, the Chair thinks, ought to be read for the information of the House if there is any misunderstanding about it. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the word "States," in line 15, page 2, down to and including the word "prefer," in line 17 of the same page, being as follows: "or in the first-mortgage bonds of said companies respectively, as the Secretary may prefer;" and insert in lieu thereof "of such kind as may be deemed by him most profitable to said fund."

Mr. CONGER. So that the investments might be made in securities of such kind as might be deemed by the Secretary "most profitable." The SPEAKER. Such kinds of United States indebtedness, how-

Mr. CONGER. By the amendment the investments might be in mortgages on real estate, or anything else.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order. The only opposition which the gentleman from Texas makes at this stage of the proceeding is against the bill of the gentleman from Maryland. No amendment is now in order. The House has not yet by a two-thirds vote resolved to consider this bill at all. I think that at this stage the reading of the amendment is out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has allowed the amendment to be read as part of the debate.

Mr. COX. Part of whose debate? The gentleman from Texas occupied fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that the amendment could not be offered until the rules had been suspended to consider the bill.

Mr. COX. Certainly not.

The SPEAKER. That the Chair has already said.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Perhaps I am a little mystified by the remarks of the gentleman from Texas and by those made on the other side of the House. The gentleman from Texas, as I understand, approves the bill provided his amendment be adopted. I ask him whether that is not the fact?

not the fact?

Mr. WELLBORN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas certainly took issue with the gentleman from Maryland on the bill.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I think that was a misunderstanding.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas stated in distinct words that he took issue with the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Mr. Speaker, there is evidently a misunderstanding or mystification. Adding the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas, he will approve the bill. The principle of the bill meets his approbation; the gentleman from Texas will, I am sure, admit this.

sure, admit this.
Mr. WELLBORN. That is correct.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Now, Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me a moment, this sinking fund is money earned by the railroad companies, money belonging to them. The act of Congress compels them to pay so much money into the sinking fund from their earnings. It is the money of the companies to begin with. Now, the question at issue between the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Maryland is, as I understand, simply as to the investment of that money. His amendment provides for investing the sinking fund in Government bonds, while the text of the bill provides for said investment in Government bonds or first-mortgage bonds of the railroads. The principle of the bill is satisfactory to the Government, to the Secretary of the Treasury, and to the railroads, and should, I think, be to this House and the people. There is no objection anywhere to the principle of the principle of ciple.

As to the investment I have simply to say this. The sinking fund is established to pay first the first-mortgage bonds of that railroad. The gentleman from Texas thinks only part of the sinking fund is so appropriated. If that point is worthy of consideration—and I thought it was settled that the money in the sinking fund can only be first appropriated to the payment of the first-mortage bonds of that Pacific Railroad Company; if that is so, then it is most just the money should be invested in them and those bonds placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, in answer to the gentleman from West Virginia, let me say those bonds run for thirty years from the date of their issue. They were issued in 1864, if I remember dates aright, and mature in 1894. They bear 6 per cent. interest in gold. They have fourteen years yet were issued in 1804, if 1 remember dates aright, and mature in 1894. They bear 6 per cent. interest in gold. They have fourteen years yet to run. It is now easy to see that paying 20 per cent. premium for them to-day, the Government will get 6 per cent. additional interest on those bonds. They have fourteen years yet to run and bear interest 2 per cent. in excess of Government bonds. Twice fourteen is 28 per cent.; those bonds, therefore, will receive 28 per cent. in the fourteen years more interest while those bonds if so purchased are fourteen years more interest while those bonds if so purchased are in the hands of the Treasury than if the sinking fund is appropriated to buy the Government four percents. Therefore it is left by that bill to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury to decide which shall be the most economical and return the most money to the sinking fund, whether he shall invest in the four percents, or in the 6 percent. first-mortgage bonds, for which the Government is bound to provide by the sinking fund.

Mr. CONGER. Does the law establishing the sinking fund provide that first-mortgage bonds shall be paid out of the sinking fund?

that first-mortgage bonds shall be paid out of the sinking fund?

Mr. NEWBERRY. That is what the sinking fund is established to pay, and nothing else.

Mr. CONGER. I supposed it was to secure the Government for its indebtednes

Mr. NEWBERRY. It is not; the Government subordinated its firstmortgage bonds to the first-mortgage bonds of the railroad company by act of 1864.

Mr. McLANE. If I had time to reply to the gentleman from Texas, I could show him that he entirely misapprehends the nature of this sinking fund. I have already explained that only one half of the compensation for troops or mails goes into that fund. The other half of the revenues from those sources is reserved to the credit of the United States for these bonds and interest; and the Supreme Court of the United States has recognized the right of the United States to that half, and the other half belongs to the company. The sinking fund is thus created, every dollar of which is due to the first-mortgage bonds before it can pay the United States bonds, as I have fully explained already.

Mr. COX. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. The time has expired provided by the rule for debate on either side.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will answer a question I wish to ask him.

Mr. McLANE. I thought I had five minutes longer. The time taken up by points of order I hope has been deducted.

The SPEAKER. The time for debate allowed under the rule has

The SPEAKER. The time for debate allowed under the rule has expired.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to ask the Chair whether, after the rules have been suspended, we will not be called upon to vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas?

The SPEAKER. If the rules should be suspended, to consider, then, unless the gentleman from Maryland having charge of the bill should demand the previous question and it should be sustained, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas to move his amendment. The Chair is advised, however, that the gentleman from Maryland proposes to allow the amendment of the gentleman from Texas to be offered. to be offered.

Mr. SCALES. Do I understand the gentleman to say he will de-

Mr. SCALES. Do I understand the gentleman to say he will demand the previous question?

Mr. McLane. No; I am going to allow the amendment to come in, and then shall demand the previous question.

Mr. SCALES. I do not see why the rules should be suspended if we are not to have debate. If time for debate be allowed I will vote to suspend the rules; otherwise I shall not.

The question recurred on the motion to suspend the rules.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 75.

So (two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

NEW YORK INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to move to suspend the rules for the purpose of reporting from that committee and passing with two amendments a bill (S. No. 1160) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of peace and the recognition of American Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and the products of the soil and mine in the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the year 1883.

The bill was read, and then the Clerk read the following proposed amendments of the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

In section 2 add to list of commissioners as follows: "Charles L. Tiffany, John A. Stewart, Abram S. Hewitt, Daniel F. Appleton, David Daws, Orestes Cleveland, Horace Porter, Henry M. Alexander, Fletcher Harper, Charles G. Francklyn, Thomas C. Acton, Rich M. Hoe, Jackson S. Schultz, Edward Clark, Norvin Green, William B. Dinsmore, Dennis C. Wilcox, Benjamin B. Sherman, Samuel B. H. Vance, Samuel D. Babcock, Henry Hilton, Andrew H. Green, Robert Gordon, Allen Campbell, Samuel B. Parsons, Francis A. Stout, J. Peabody Wetmore, John R. Voorhies, Leighton Williams, George G. Haven, Stephen O'Brien, Charles Solomons, Henry Draper, Philip Collins."

Add the following to section 20:

Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require the governor of any State to appoint the commissioners provided for in section 2, nor shall said commissioners nor any of them incur any liability for their failure or refusal to accept such position or perform the duties thereof.

Mr. CONGER. May I inquire if all of these gentlemen are in the

Mr. CONGER. May I inquire if all of these gentlemen are in the city of New York?

Mr. COX. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. Every one of them?

Mr. COX. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. I was a little fearful that they may have wandered outside, for some of these international members of that committee—

Mr. COX. It was the intention of the gentlemen who started this project to confine the names to those men who took a specific interproject to confine the names to those men who took a specific interproject to confine the names to those men who took a specific interest in it. But there was a rivalry between two organizations, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs wisely took gentlemen from both of these organizations and named them in the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to inquire how many—

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SHALLENBERGER in the chair.)

The gentleman from Georgia will state his point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to know what is to be the rule in reference

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to know what is to be the rule in reference to debate on this bill. It seems to me to be a very important measure. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule is, as the Chair understands it, that debate may extend for one-half hour, to be equally divided between the friends and opponents of the measure, on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Michigan can take his quarter of an hour if he desires it, or longer, as I shall not consume any of the time myself. I merely wish to state to the House that there is no appropriation in this bill. There is no responsibility on the part of the United States connected with this bill, and there is no provision for a future appropriation to come out of the Treasury under this bill. Mr. BLOUNT. I insist upon enforcing the rule in reference to dethe motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. CAMP. The vote on that is to be taken by tellers. I ask that there be appointed tellers on the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule requires the vote shall be taken by tellers, if demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed Mr. Cox and Mr. Conger as

Mr. COX. The House evidently does not understand the quantum on which it is to vote.

Mr. CONGER. I have made no objection to the suspension of the rules, and do not see why I should be appointed.

Mr. COX. This bill does not take a dollar out of the Treasury—

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to debate, and demand the regular order. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 112, noes 17.

Mr. BLOUNT. No quorum has voted.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported-

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion to suspend the rules, on which debate for fifteen minutes is allowed on each side.

Mr. COX. For myself, Mr. Speaker, I do not care about debating this question. I yield to my colleague from New York, [Mr. COVERT.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proposed amendments

The Clerk read as follows:

It is moved to amend by inserting in the title of the bill the following words: "or on Long Island," so that if amended, the title will read: "In the city of New York or on Long Island." Also insert in the eighth line of the first section, after the words "city of New York," the words "or on Long Island."

Mr. COVERT. I will not ask the further reading of the proposed amendments. The object of the amendments is to allow an alternative as to the place of location.

Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to retard or in any manner embarrass the prompt passage of this bill, or rather of a measure of this general character. I simply desire to call the attention of my colleague [Mr. Cox] and of the House to a suggestion which it seems to me ought to be considered at this time.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the gentleman from New York permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. COVERT. Not now, for my time is limited. I shall be glad to answer when I have finished my suggestion.

At this early day none of us can tell with any degree of certainty the proportions and the magnitude which this proposed exposition. may assume. The time for its occurrence is fixed three years hence. It will be the aim of its projectors undoubtedly to make it in every respect worthy of the time and in every regard worthy of the people by whom and among whom the exhibition shall be held.

In this view of the matter the question of proper ground room for the accommodation of those in attendance and for the proper arrangement of articles for exhibition, becomes a question of vital importance. The city of New York is a city great and grand in everything except in the matter of its area. Its teeming population is compressed within narrow limits, and there is within the city lines but small verge and scope, it seems to me, for the proper carrying out of an exposition such as is proposed by this bill, and such an exhibition as is hoped for by its promoters. Apart from the Central Park, I know of no appropriate place within the whole limits of the city where space enough can be secured for the purposes contemplated here. And even the park, spacious and complete as it is for its legitimate purposes, would be insufficient, with its appliances of shade-trees and ornamental walks, for the real objects and purposes of the commission. But just across the East River, connected with the city by a score of avenues of travel, lies Long Island, with an area large enough for every possible requirement of this character. Lying on the opposite bank of the East River are Brooklyn and Long Island City; beyond are numerous villages and outlying localities, at any one of which this exhibition might be held.

A little further removed, but very accessible, is Stewart's Garden City, lying in the midst of a level plain, and most admirably adapted for the purposes of the proposed exposition. To meet these conditions, I have prepared an amendment to the pending bill, and I ask ment of articles for exhibition, becomes a question of vital impor-

for the purposes of the proposed exposition. To meet these conditions, I have prepared an amendment to the pending bill, and I ask the consent of my colleague, [Mr. Cox.] having this measure in charge, to the consideration of this amendment at this time. It is not compulsory in its character. It will be noticed that the bill limits the place of holding the exposition within the boundaries of New York City. My amendment simply gives elasticity to this restriction. It permits the holding of the exhibition on Long Island. It is in the alternative simply and is intended to give the commission the power to hold the exhibition there if they shall find that they would be "cribbed, cabined, and confined" by holding it in New York City. It is proposed to give them this power without driving them to the possible, and it seems to me probable, necessity of coming again to Congress for a supplemental bill to give them this power. I sincerely hope, sir, that the rule may be relaxed and that the proposed amendment may be considered at this time.

Mr. WARNER. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York in charge of this bill how much money this is going to call for in future?

future?

Mr. COX. I have already stated that there is no appropriation in this bill of any money out of the Treasury. There is no responsibility on the part of the United States for a dollar if the bill is passed.

on the part of the United States for a dollar if the bill is passed.

Mr. ATKINS. Are you never going to ask any for it?

Mr. COX. No, sir; the bill expressly denies it. We will never ask for any money from the Treasury.

A Member. What! never?

The SPEAKER. There are certain amendments reported by the committee to this bill. The motion, therefore, will be to suspend the rules and pass the bill, as recommended by the committee.

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to make a suggestion here. I am in favor of this bill. I am in favor of anything which adds to the progress and greatness of our country. The gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. COVERT] spoke of New York being great in every respect, spoke of its metropolis as being a great city and a city of great ideas. Now, that city and that State, as represented upon this floor a few years ago, showed its distinguished greatness and generous ideas by opposing the centennial exposition, the appropriations for carrying it out, and all Government aid to it because it was to be held in Philadelphia and not in New York. I want to ask my friend from Illinois—I see Mr. Springer looking at me—I wish to ask him whether he has looked through this bill with that care that he usually gives to such matters; whether he has listened to the reading of it, and Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to make a suggestion here. I am in favor whether he noticed if there is to be any appropriation made under it? Had he not better at this early day in the consideration of the present proposition move to insert positively and absolutely that no money shall ever be appropriated by the United States Government to pay expenses hereafter which may be incurred in its progress?

I went to say in all friendship and in all kindness to patriotic men throughout the country, that the State of New Jersey, the State of Penns; Ivania, and the State of Delaware—

Mr. IAWLEY. And Connecticut.

Mr. IfAWLEY. And Connecticut.
Mr. O'NEILL. Yes; and Connecticut.
Mr. O'NEILL. Yes; and New Hampshire.
Mr. O'NEILL. Yes; and New Hampshire; that those five States of this Union alone contributed, as States, to the great exhibition which celebrated the centennial of the birth of the nation in Philadelphia-five States only, the State of New York not being among them.

Mr. MORSE. Massachusetts did.

Mr. O'NEILL. Not as a State directly. I want to warn those who may embark in this enterprise, who may take the stock liberally, that some day they may come here and ask to be helped. I acknowledge the greatness of New York as a commercial center; I acknowledge the readiness of personal effort and the greatness of individual ability in that city in trying to accomplish anything for the personal benent of individuals who take part in enterprises; but, sir, Philadelphia worked for six years, not for the benefit of the individual, but for the glory of the country, to accomplish what she completed on the 10th day of May, 1876, and invited the whole people of the nation there; and the people of the whole earth came to see what her individual enterprise and the liberality of the State and city had accomplished, with the aid of subscriptions from but five other States. New York was wanting there. Now, to-day Pennsylvania is not wanting in giving her support to the passage of the bill creating and organizing this commission.

Before I take my seat I will ask the gentleman from New York another question. Of course in listening to the reading of a long bill, such as this is, it is impossible not to miss something. I ask him if this bill is framed to any extent upon the bill passed for creating a this bill is framed to any extent upon the bill passed for creating a commission for the centennial exposition?

Mr. COX. Many of the provisions we copied from that bill; but not the nineteenth section, which denies all possible responsibility now or hereafter for any debt or obligation possible to be incurred on the part of the United States. It denies that hereafter there shall be any appropriation; so that the bill comes here with clean hands.

Mr. O'NEILL. Just as our bill came here with the cleanest of clean hands; and just as that enterprise was started by Philadelphia and Pennsylvania and was carried successfully through and ended with the cleanest of clean hands. Nothing in America, nothing in the whole world in the line of these expositions, ever showed a cleaner record than was shown when the affairs of the centennial exhibition were wound up.

record than was shown when the analys of the centennial exhibition were wound up.

Mr. COVERT. Let me make a suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I call the attention of my friend from Pennsylvania and the House to a precedent adopted only a short time ago in this House. I had the honor to report from my committee a bill authorizing the holding of an international sheep and wool exhibition in he city of Philadelphia, to be held in 1880. The bill gave the sanction of the Government to that enterprise, the same as this bill does to the exhibition in New York.

exhibition in New York.

Mr. O'NEILL. I wish the gentleman from New York [Mr. Covert] to understand that I am not opposing this bill. I could not in view of the past oppose the idea of having expositions of American industry anywhere. I want to make a suggestion to the gentleman from New York, and to the gentlemen named in the bill. Let them as they proceed with this movement consult with those who were foremost in carrying on the centennial exhibition in Philadelphia. Let them go and take advice from them, and they will find them a set of pure-minded gentlemen who had nothing at heart but the interests of the country and the showing its great development in one hundred years.

Mr. COVERT. When we do go to consult some of the distinguished citizens of Penyslvenia, they are not these.

citizens of Pennsylvania, they are not there.

Mr. O'NEILL. They are always there. I am for the bill of course.

Mr. FIELD. I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill to accept an amendment which I will indicate. I propose to strike out these words, which I find on page 5, line 9, of the printed bill:

And it shall be lawful for any municipal or other corporate body existing by or under the laws of the United States or of any State to subscribe and pay for shares of said capital stock and.

Now, it is not competent for Congress to authorize a municipal corporation of a State to subscribe for such stock, and it is not fit that Congress should undertake to do it. I doubt too whether it is competent for Congress to authorize a body incorporated under the law of a State against its act of corporation to subscribe for such stock. of a State against its act of corporation to subscribe for such stock. There are then left the municipal and other corporations existing under the laws of the United States. There are in this District, I do not know what corporations, but some insurance companies, some savings-banks or trust companies perhaps; and some existing elsewhere. I doubt whether it is good policy to authorize all these corporations or the city of Washington to subscribe for this stock. I suggest the words which I have read be stricken from the bill, and I send to the desk an amendment proposing to strike them out.

Mr. COX. I have no objection to that amendment.
Mr. BAYNE. Do not strike out those words. Let them remain.
Mr. COX. I do not think they can do any harm.

Mr. HAWLEY. It does no harm to leave in those words. simply a permission for the international commission to accept such subscriptions. Whether the corporations shall subscribe or not is a matter for themselves to determine under the laws which incorporate them

Mr. GARFIELD. This does not empower a corporation to do anything. It simply allows the commission to accept anything which thing. It simply allows the commission to accept anything which may be offered by any corporate body.

Mr. FIELD. It allows every corporation incorporated by laws of the United States to subscribe for shares of this stock.

Mr. HAWLEY. That does not amount to anything.

Mr. FIELD. It may amount to considerable.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is surplusage; nothing else.

Mr. BAYNE. Better leave it in.

Mr. COX. Although that may be found in the printed bill which the gentleman has in his hand, it was stricken out by the Senate.

Mr. FIELD. I did not know that.

Mr. COX. It is already out of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let the section be read.

Mr. FIELD. It is very plain that section 9 in the printed bill is not in the bill as sent to us by the Senate. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] says that the bill sent us by the Senate does not contain the provision I have alluded to—

Mr. COX. I have already said so.

not contain the provision I have alluded to—
Mr. COX. I have already said so.
Mr. FIELD. Then I withdraw my amendment.
The SPEAKER. The question then is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments recommended by a committee of the House.
Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to call the attention of my friend from New York to the question of the power of Congress to incorporate a purely local company in the State of New York. I dislike very much to make an argument against this bill and will not attempt to do so, because I am not unfriendly to the object sought to be promoted by it; but it does seem to me that we ought to hesitate before we enter upon a course of legislation which recognizes the constitutional power upon a course of legislation which recognizes the constitutional power of the Congress of the United States to incorporate a company in a State, that company having no connection whatever with the opera-tions of the Government in any form. I do not understand that it has ever been contended that the power existed in Congress to create corporations except in cases where the corporation itself was to become an instrument in the hands of the Government for the execution of some one of its delegated or implied powers. I have never understood anybody to go beyond that.

Certainly Mr. Webster, whose opinions upon constitutional law were supposed at one time to have some value in this country, always conceded that an attempt on the part of Congress to create a corporation having no connection whatever with the execution of any of the powers of the Government would be unconstitutional and void.

of the powers of the Government would be unconstitutional and void. The Supreme Court of the United States, in an opinion delivered by Chief-Justice Marshall, who certainly was not disposed to restrict the powers of Congress or of any department of the General Government, expressly held that Congress had the power to create the United States Bank, solely because that institution, when created, was one of the instruments by and through which the fiscal operations of the Government were to be conducted; in other words, that Congress had no power to create a corporation merely as an end, but as a means toward the execution of some other power which had been conferred upon it by the Constitution. been conferred upon it by the Constitution.

I have before me the argument of Mr. Webster in that case, and the decision of the court, which I will not now take time to have read; but I desire to call the attention of the House, and especially of my democratic friend from the city of New York, [Mr. Cox.] to this proposition, and to ask him to explain to this House upon what principle it is that Congress can create a corporation in the State of New York for the purpose of transacting business in that State and having no connection whatever with the Government or with the meraticus of any of its departments.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would ask the gentleman upon what principle he would discriminate between this bill and the general banking law, as to the power of Congress?

Mr. CARLISLE. The national banks are depositories of the Government funds.

ernment funds.

Mr. HISCOCK. Not all of them.

Mr. CARLISLE. But by the very law which created them the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to designate certain national banks as depositories of the public funds, and may designate all of them.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the gentleman contend that the constitutionality of the general banking law depends upon that fact?

Mr. CARLISLE. I do not. The Supreme Court of the United States has apparently decided that Congress has the power to create national banks for the purpose of giving a currency to the people, because Congress has a right to furnish a currency to the country. The gentleman will find it so decided in 8 Wallace, I think.

But here is a proposition to create a corporation having no connection, directly or indirectly, with the powers of the General Government; no more connection with those powers than has a turnpike company, or a plank-road company, or a trading company, in the State of New York, or the State of Nebraska, or any other State. I submit to the House, without entering at length upon an argument, that if Congress can pass this bill, it may also pass bills creating all other kinds of corporations throughout the length and breadth of the country.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to one fact ?

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly. Mr. PRICE. As a matter of course I do not enter into a contro-Mr. PRICE. As a matter of course I do not enter into a controversy about constitutional law with my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. Carlisle.] But I would say with reference to the national banks that the law authorizes the establishment of national banks without any circulation, and without being public depositories. Neither of these things enter into the constitution of a national bank unless the bank itself shall so elect.

Mr. CARLISLE. Now, in the case of these—
Mr. COX. I claim the floor. My friend from Kentucky asked me a question.

Mr. CARLISLE. Let me answer the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr.

Mr. CARLISLE. Let me answer the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.]

Mr. COX. I propose to respond to the question which was put to me. I do not propose to wander off into a discussion of the banking system; for there would be no end to a debate on that subject.

Mr. CARLISLE. I would like to know by what right the gentleman from New York takes me off the floor.

The SPEAKER. Nobody has yet spoken against the bill. Fifteen minutes must be allowed in opposition to the bill.

Mr. COX. Nobody has spoken for the bill at all, as I understand, except for about one minute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that nobody has spoken against it except the gentleman from Kentucky. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] spoke in favor of it.

Mr. McMILLIN. Also the gentleman from New York [Mr. Covert] to whom his colleague [Mr. Cox] in charge of the bill yielded.

The SPEAKER. Members opposing the bill surely have the right to fifteen minutes.

Mr. COX. I will not restrict debate while it proceeds according to the rules. I want to have the rules followed.

the rules. I want to have the rules followed.

The SPEAKER. The rules are being enforced.

Mr. CARLISLE. If the gentleman from Iowa will examine the case of Veazie Bank vs. Fenno, 8 Wallace, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, he will find it was there held that the power to create national banks, or rather to authorize the creation of national banks, (because the act of Congress does not incorporate any bank but simply authorizes individuals to associate themselves together in a certain manner and when so associated to have corporate powers,) results from the power of Congress to coin money, emit bills of credit, and give to the country a currency.

Mr. PRICE. But my friend from Kentucky must remember that the national-bank law, while it authorizes persons to associate themselves together for the establishment of banking institutions, provides also that there is no obligation upon any banking association to take out circulation or to become a Government depository. A national bank cannot become a Government depository, even if it be so commanded by the Secretary of the Treasury, unless it deposits an additional amount of bonds.

Mr. CARLISLE. Very well; I do not propose now to discuss the constitutionality of the national-banking law.

Mr. PRICE. But I suggest whether that is not a parallel case to

Mr. PRICE. But I suggest whether that is not a parameter the establishment of a corporation in the city of New York.

Mr. CARLISLE. I will read from the celebrated United States
Bank case a single sentence of the argument of Mr. Webster in support of the power, from which it will be seen that he expressly admits that if the corporation had no connection with the execution of the powers of the Government, it would be unconstitutional for Congress to attempt to create it. After having spoken on that clause of the Constitution which gives to Congress authority to pass all laws that may be necessary and proper to carry into execution the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution, Mr. Webster said:

Among other means it has established a bank; and before the act establishing it can be pronounced unconstitutional and void, it must be shown that a bank has no fair connection with the execution of any power or duty of the National Government, and that its creation therefor is a manifest usurpation.

Now, the question which I want to propound to my friend from New York [Mr. Cox] is, what connection the corporation which this bill proposes to create has with the execution of any of the powers or functions of Congress or with the execution of any of the powers of the Federal Government. I say with Mr. Webster, that unless you can show this you are bound to admit that an attempt upon the part of Congress to create such a corporation is unconstitutional and a of Congress to create such a corporation is unconstitutional and a manifest usurpation.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Kentucky propounded a question to me; and before the gentleman from Connecticut takes the floor I will answer it. I believe that the power of Congress to regulate commerce, to regulate customs duties, and to do various other acts necessary in conducting this exposition, bring this bill within the purview of our constitutional authority. Although the gentleman may not have known of corporations being heretofore constituted by Congress, I can refer him to the case of the Bolivian Company, incorporated by act of Congress for the purpose of opening to us certain porated by act of Congress for the purpose of opening to us certain countries of South America. That company was incorporated by act of Congress because a State charter would not have answered the purpose. So, in this case, we must have an act of incorporation from this Federal center for the purpose of extending invitations to foreign nations, and in other ways conducting this enterprise in a manner comporting with the dignity of the country.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order that the time for debate has been exhausted.

The SPEAKER. The time for debate in favor of the bill has been exhausted.

Mr. COX. I believe I spoke on that side. I yield to my friend from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

The SPEAKER. There are, the Chair thinks, about six minutes remaining of the fifteen minutes allowed to the opposition under the

Mr. HAWLEY. I would like to occupy three minutes. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks to occupy three minutes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, the States have nothing in the world to do with foreign intercourse. They cannot touch it.

Mr. CARLISLE. Is this a company to carry on foreign commerce?
Mr. HAWLEY. The States have nothing to do with foreign intercourse. They cannot make a national exhibition. They cannot invite the participation of foreign nations in any such exhibition. They cannot send a letter of invitation to any foreign government to take part in it. If we are to do anything of that sort as other nations, it must be done by a national charter and national invitation. The whole matter of foreign intercourse is in the hands of the General Government, and quoad hoc, as the lawyers say, this is an absolute, perfect government, with entire charge of all that pertains to foreign intercourse and foreign commerce. That which we cannot do across the river, beyond the boundary lines of this District, we have abundant right to do as a nation. We cannot charter a Virginia State fair, and we have no right to contribute anything to the poor of Virginia or Massachusetts, while we have a right to give half a million to Ireland, if we choose to do it. As to international intercourse all outside of our boundaries, all that relates to other countries, we are a complete and perfect nation. We do not assume to say what they can do in New York, what they can do with their lands there. If this corporation should get from the State of New York legislation ratifying it and confirming it and assisting it, that would put it perfectly

I beg gentlemen not to stand in the way of this bill. I say, sir, these international exhibitions are worth a thousand dollars for every cent they cost the country or individuals; worth it in promotion of international intercourse and friendship; worth it in promotion of trade. There is not a branch of industry in this country, there is not an art which has not been promoted by the great international exhibition of 1876.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I can say but little in that time. I Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I can say but little in that time. I remember quite well some time ago, under the leadership of the gentleman from New York, when we complained of just such legislation as this which is now proposed to be enacted, we then had the assurance which the gentleman now gives us, that Congress would not be called upon for any aid in behalf of this international exhibition. The gentleman from New York himself was then suspicious about it, and he fought it. Time passed along, sir, and aid was given by the Government. It is true, as has been stated already in this debate, that the money was refunded but every single session of Congress since the money was refunded, but every single session of Congress since then Philadelphia is back here insisting and reinsisting that that money shall be paid back to her.

Mr. KELLEY. Philadelphia?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes.

Philadelphia? No; nor Pennsylvania either. Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to interruption.

Mr. KELLEY. There is no demand for the return of the money from

Mr. RELLET. There is no detailed.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman does not keep up with the times. I have seen gentlemen from Philadelphia, in the room of the Committee on Appropriations, urging that very matter this winter.

Mr. KELLEY. You are mistaken; a gentleman came here from New Jersey, but the delegation from Philadelphia drove him out of town.

[Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. What assurance is there we are not to have a repetition of this same thing in reference to this New York national exhibition ?

You have the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman says it is in the bill. What does that amount to? Who can prevent gentlemen coming back here in twelve months with another bill? I predict now, just as the gentleman did in the other case, that hereafter, if this is now done, it will be used as the foundation in the future as an argument in favor of an appropriation from Congress.

Mr. HOOKER. Can you not then vote against it?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, I can vote against it; but I know how these matters come in. I know the system which is usually resorted to in reference to projects of this sort. It was then said we were not bound by a recognition on the part of the Government to make any bound by a recognition on the part of the Government to make any appropriation.

Mr. NICHOLLS. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Not now. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Kelley,] the father of this House, he and others, were back here urging that proposition as a reason why we were bound to vote an appropriation to carry out the exhibition in Philadelphia.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate has expired.

Mr. HUTCHINS. If I understand the gentleman's argument—

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand the regular order.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does the gentleman wish to shut off debate?

Mr. COX. I do not.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do; because you come here with a motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill of this character cutting off all general debate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announced the passage of an act (S. No. 1643) to provide that whenever the circuit and district courts of the United States are held at the same time and place there shall be but one grand or petit jury summoned to attend on said courts at one and the same time; in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced concurrence in House resolution to print 100,000 copies of the Special Report No. 22, of the Commissioner of Agriculture, containing the reports of the veterinary surgeons appointed to investigate the diseases of swine, &c., with amendments, in which concurrence was requested.

DISEASES OF SWINE, ETC.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I move, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate to House resolution in reference to printing the report on the diseases of swine be taken up and referred to the Committee on Printing.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

NEW YORK INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on suspending the rules and passing the bill, as amended, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BUCKNER. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

PUBLIC BUILDING, PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire at this time, by direction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to call up the bill (H. R. No. 2850) to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts, custom-house, and post-office at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, which I ask to be put upon its passage. The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

A bill (H. R. No. 2850) to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts, custom-house, and post-office at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a suitable building at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, for the accommodation of the circuit and district courts of the United States, the customs officers, internal-revenue officers, the post-office, and any other offices of the General Government in said city, at a cost not exceeding $750,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether a site has been secured for the erection of this building?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It has been secured by act of Congress.
The SPEAKER. The Calendar bill in possession of the Clerk has certain words stricken out which have been reinserted in the bill sent up to the desk by the gentleman. The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact, and to say that the question should be on the Calendar bill and not on the bill just sent up.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In respect to that, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have several bills upon the Calendar, including this one, all of which, by instruction of a majority of the committee, were amended so as to strike out the limitation as to ultimate cost, after the committee had agreed upon that limit. Since that time the estion of the House and Senate clearly. limit. Since that time the action of the House and Senate clearly favors the retention of the clause limiting cost. In deference to that sentiment the committee will now recommend that this bill pass with the limitation, as it once unanimously passed the committee, restored in the words I have indicated.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he change his motion so as to fix a day upon which all bills of this character may be considered.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois

I will state it is the purpose of the committee to ask that a day or

I will state it is the purpose of the committee to ask that a day or evening be set apart quite early for that purpose.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order until after the motion to suspend the rules is seconded.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I object to debate now.

The SPEAKER. The question is on seconding the motion to suspend the rules. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SHALLENBERGER.]

SHALLENBERGER.]

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 90, noes 3.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not call for further count.

Mr. MILLS. I make the point that a quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that a quorum has not voted, the tellers will resume the count.

The count was resumed; and the tellers reported—ayes 117, noes 3. Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the point as to a quorum.
Mr. LOWE. I renew it.

Mr. LOWE. I renew it.

Mr. McMahon. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. Shallenberger. Oh no, I hope not. This is the most meritorious bill on the Calendar. There is on the files a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in favor of this bill, and calling special attention to the needs of the public service, the strongest he has written in favor of any public building now upon our Calendar.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the House to give unanimous consent to fix some evening when we will consider all bills of this kind.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope not. I shall object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let my colleague name a day.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will say Tuesday evening of next week.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to any day being fixed. We have passed $900,000 already for public buildings. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

Mr. McMahon. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CAMP. I renew it.

Mr. CAMP. I renew it.

The question being taken of the agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on seconding the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] to suspend the rules, on which a quorum has not voted. The tellers will resume their places. If gentlemen who have not voted will vote it will save the time that might be occupied in a call of the House.

The tellers resumed the count, and reported—ayes 137, noes 11.

The tellers resumed the count, and reported—ayes 137, noes 11.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Shallen-Berger] will now indicate his exact motion as to suspension of the rules. This bill is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the motion should be, the Chair thinks, to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of the whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of the Whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of the Whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of the Whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of the Whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of the Whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of the Whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of the Whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of the Whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of the Whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of the Whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of the Whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of the Whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of the Whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of the Whole on the state of th eration of the bill and bring it before the House. Thus the Calendar bill could be amended in manner as desired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I make that motion. The words I desire to add simply restore the bill to the form now recommended by the committee

The SPEAKER. The bill on the Calendar does not contain the words which the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to have added.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I do not suppose any debate can be desired on the bill. The papers in this case are conclusive. The written report has been upon the desks of members for weeks, and the necessity of the building recognized by a former Congress in the purchase of a site for the purposes named in this bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I notify the gentleman from Pennsylvania I shall object to this bill going through without debate. I propose to have some debate upon it.

some debate upon it.

The SPEAKER. That is the gentleman's right.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I do not object to debate. I only say that the friends of the bill do not ask it. How much time does the gentleman from Georgia desire?

The SPEAKER. He has the right, under the rule, to fifteen min-

Mr. BLOUNT. Am I recognized?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT. I trust this House will not pass this bill; not so much because of objections to this particular bill, as because it launches us into a policy in the matter of appropriations against which we have been struggling here for years. In the Forty-fourth Congress we appropriated for public buildings $1,993,000 during the first session; at the second session of that Congress we appropriated $2,172,000. In the Forty-fifth Congress, when the democratic majority was smaller, the House at its first session appropriated the sum of $3,000,000; but at its second session it reduced the amount again to the sum of $2,155,000.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. How many buildings did that include?
Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will be satisfied by having a private conversation with me after my time is out. The estimates from the Treasury Department, without reference to a single bill reported to this House, amount to $2,887,000. I have never known since I have been a member of the House but one single bill passed as we have been passing these bills this session. The uniform practice has been to introduce the bills and then when estimates had been made by the Department they came into what was known as the sundry civil bill. Year after year the House has rigidly excluded this method of legislation as to public bills. How is it now? Why, sir, before you have taken up the subject, before you have had your civil sundry bill reported, this House has passed $900,000 already; eivil sundry bill reported, this House has passed $900,000 already; more than one-half the amount which you appropriated in the sundry civil bill for the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress and during the last session of the last Congress. About one-half of that amount has already passed through this House before you have even touched your sundry civil bill. What now? My friend from Pennsylvania tells me that the Committee on Public Buildings have reported in favor of a series of public buildings. He brings before us one that will cost $750,000 and notifies us this is just the beginning. Mr. McKENZIE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Georgia whether he has not a bill before that committee?

Mr. BLOUNT. I have a bill before that committee. But that bill has nothing to do with the policy of this House. If the gentleman from Kentucky thinks that bill has no merits in it, let him meet me and join issue with me on the merits of my bill.

I am not here for the purpose of asking Congress to appropriate money for this thing. Just because I may have seen fit to ask for a public building, I do not therefore ask Congress to abandon its past policy and vote millions of dollars where heretofore it has been voting hundreds of thousands, nor do I represent a constituency that makes any demand of that sort.

Mr. ATKINS. May I ask the gentleman a single question?
Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.
Mr. ATKINS. I desire to know whether this bill makes an appropriation or not?

Mr. COOK. Not a dollar.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that it does not. Originally the bill contained an appropriation. There has been recommended the appropriation of $2,000,000, not for the completion of buildings, but for work upon new buildings to be commenced during the next fiscal year, and to be added to the estimates contained in this book. That would double the amount of appropriations which we have heretofore been making.

It has been argued with reference to the buildings already commenced that they ought to be completed, that true economy required that before you inaugurate the policy of commencing new buildings you should vote the money to finish the buildings already begun. That was the argument at one time.

Then there came a complaint about inequality and injustice toward Then there came a complaint about inequality and injustice toward some sections of the country, and propositions are brought forward for the erection of new buildings. You are told that there is no appropriation made in this bill, not a dollar. But who does not know that this is simply the initiatory step? If you grant the authority for constructing this building, then when the sundry civil bill comes in those advocating this building, as well as every other new building authorized by Congress, will come before this body asking for appropriations. priations.

The Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses, taking note of the practice of this House in reference to public buildings, refused all such applications. They said that the obligations already incurred in that regard were enough for the time being. We have therefore held back from year to year, endeavoring to complete the buildings already commenced.

Now all of a sudden we have here a great rush of propositions for constructing new public buildings, propositions calling for $4,000,000. Now if this bill, involving an expenditure of $750,000, shall pass this House, as a forerunner of other bills involving three or four millions of dollars, then before this session closes we will have appropriated twice, and in all probability three times what we have been in the habit of voting for public buildings. Every one that this House authorizes begets another. And unless members of this House shall see fit to restrain this expenditure at the threshold, if they shall yield to personal preferences and pressure from localities, then the expenditures made by this Congress for public buildings will surpass that of any Congress we have yet had.

For one I protest against it. I do not know what may be the pleasure of this House. It may blindly and heedlessly rush forward and vote away millions of dollars for the construction of public buildings.

Some gentleman says "what of it?" What of it! Why, sir, it means nothing else than a continuation of taxation; it means nothing else than keeping your revenue laws fastened upon the people; it means nothing else than continuing your tariff laws for years longer as a burden upon the people. This is what it means, and gentlemen cannot escape it.

There is but one method by which we can reduce taxation, and There is but one method by which we can reduce taxation, and that is by reducing our expenditures. If we are to have relief from taxation we must have an abatement of expenditures. That gentleman but trifles with himself and with his constituency who smiles when these vast sums of money are being appropriated, and asks the question, "What of it?" "What difference does it make?"

Year by year we have seen the growth of the river and harbor appropriations for that purpose gradually increasing. Bureau after bureau in our Departments is building itself up and magnifying itself, and all that we can do is simply to retard it in a measure.

that we can do is simply to retard it in a measure.

Increase of expenditure is something which I would fain stay. But I am well assured from what I have seen here that there is no hope for it. I trust we may make some abatement when we have gone on and made the appropriations for the coming year which the Secretary of the Treasury says is necessary for work on buildings now commenced. The amount he estimates for is $2,800,000, and that will not complete them. This House has already voted $900,000 for new buildings, making with the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury $3,700,000; more than has been voted in any one year since the democratic party has had possession of this House. If you do not pass another bill of this kind you will have reached the point to which you have heretofore been in the habit of going.

I simply want to call attention to this question. Whatever the for it. I trust we may make some abatement when we have gone on

I simply want to call attention to this question. Whatever the House may see fit to do, I shall accept with that deference which is due to the body of which I am a member; but, being aware of these facts, I must raise my protest against this expenditure.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I now yield to the gentleman from Geogia, [Mr. COOK,] chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, the Government is now paying more than a million dollars annually for rent of buildings for the public offices and public records of this country. From $130,000 to $150,000, probably, is being paid in this city to-day for this purpose. The question presented is whether this Government should erect court-houses, postoffices, &c., for the transaction of the public business, or whether it offices, &c., for the transaction of the public business, or whether it should go on paying rent from year to year. This rent amounts to more than the interest on the money which would be required to erect the necessary public buildings. According to the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury, $5,000,000 would meet the expenditures now required for these purposes; $3,000,000 would probably complete the buildings now being constructed, leaving about $2,000,000 to be appropriated for new buildings. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, when they had the right to recommend bills making appropriations, proposed to keep themselves within this limit. When the House took that matter from our committee, we recommended quite a number of these public buildings which we deemed to be necessary in order to save the vast amount which the Government is now paying as rent. now paying as rent.

But I want to show that this great expenditure upon public buildings has come, not from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but from the Committee on Appropriations. I have here a report to which I refer in support of my position. In the case of the United States post-office and sub-treasury at Boston, the cost was originally limited to $1,500,000. That limitation originated with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Since that limitation was fixed there has been spent upon that building $4,850,000.

Mr. ATKINS. That is not the fault of the Committee on Appro-

Mr. COOK. Yes, sir; the appropriations have been made in your bills year after year.

Mr. ATKINS. The Secretary of the Treasury made the estimates; and the Committee on Appropriations only reported appropriations in accordance with the estimates, or below them. Congress is responsible, not the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COOK. The amount was estimated for and put into your appropriation bills. Now, I want to call attention to some facts in regard to the public building at Hartford, Connecticut. The cost of that building was limited originally to $100,000. Afterward, in 1874, the limit of cost was extended to $400,000. There has been spent in all upon this building, through the agency of the Appropriations Committee recommending these appropriations, $675,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury recommends that committee to-day to approtary of the Treasury recommends that committee to-day to appropriate $125,000 more to complete the building.

What is the cause of this extravagance in the construction of these public buildings? The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have endeavored in every case to set a limit upon the cost of the building, but the Committee on Appropriations, with a liberality remarkable in them, have exceeded those limits by millions of dollars. The gentlemen who had charge of this public building at Hartford seem to have understood thoroughly how the thing was to be done. Commencing with a limitation of $100,000 the appropriations have been swelled to $675,000, and the sum of $125,000 is still asked to complete the building. This is only equaled in the history of this country by the building. This is only equaled in the history of this country by the difference between the original bids of some of the star-route bidders and the amounts subsequently obtained by them for the carriage of the mails. In justice to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I ask to have read the resolution adopted by a subcommittee of that committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The sub-committee from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, at a meeting held on Wednesday, the 10th day of December, 1879, adopted the following resolution:

Resolved. That this sub-committee, in considering all bills for the erection of public buildings or for the extension of the same, will require of the member introducing the bill a statement in writing showing the amount of revenue received from all sources whatever; the post-office statistics, business of the United States courts, &c., at the city or town where said public building is proposed to be erected. And further, that the sub-committee will address a letter of inquiry to the Secretary of the Treasury in each case, as to whether the needs of the public service require the construction or extension of said public building, and if so, what amount in his judgment should be appropriated; and also for a statement of the amount of rent paid annually by the Government for the use of public buildings at such place.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say but a word and then yield to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER.] This building has already been by law declared a public necessity. We are not asking entirely new legislation. Congress in 1873 decided that there should be a new public building at Pittsburgh. On March 3 of that year an act of Congress was passed providing for the purchase of a square of ground for that distinct purpose. Under the provisions of that act a handsome square of ground was purchased in 1874. The citizens of Pittsburgh contributed over $46,000 of the purchase-money. This bill simply proposes to perfect that act by specifically directing the construction of the building and limiting its ultimate cost.

The officials of the Treasury Department in charge of repairs upon the old building report the urgent necessity of a new building. The Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting that report, declares the Pittsburgh building first in point of necessity of all proposed buildings, and recommends the limit fixed by this bill. The immense increase and recommends the limit fixed by this bill. The immense increase of public business at Pittsburgh demands prompt action. Economy demands that public funds invested in a site should no longer be unproductive. If I understand the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] he does not make his argument against this specific proposition, but rather against public buildings in general. As the House has on several occasions within the past few months put itself on record in favor of judicious expenditure of the public money in respect to the construction of public buildings, I do not see any necessity of now answering that argument.

I yield for three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a single word in response to the statement that the sundry civil appropriation bill has not yet been reported from the Committee on Appropriations. It matters not this House is concerned on the pending proposition; because the vote just taken fairly indicates the desire of the House to take up and pass this bill. whether that bill has been reported or not, so far as the judgment of

I remember very well in the Forty-fourth Congress, when the policy of this question was first inaugurated in regard to the construction of public buildings, that a then member of this body, now no more, Hon. Mr. Schleicher, insisted that true economy on the part of the Government always was to construct and own its own public buildings whenever the amount paid out by the Government for rental of public buildings would lead to a greater expense than would be the interest on the capital expended in the construction of such public building. I think that is the true policy for us to pursue; and wherever it can be demonstrated that the expense in the way of rental is greater than would be the interest on the money invested it ought to be adopted in our legislation in this House

I imagine, from the population and extent of business of the city of Pittsburgh, in the State of Pennsylvania, that a state of facts exists there which would indicate the necessity of adopting that policy; and if it would, I then say that the argument of my friend from Georgia falls to the ground on the score of economy and on the score of retrenchment of expenditure. And, sir, so far as the fact that the sundry civil appropriation bill has not yet been reported, and is not here embracing this provision, if it is the judgment of the House that this bill should pass, it is immaterial whether it is embraced in that

Mr. Shallenberger. I nope we will have a vote now on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to take my two minutes. I have heard it said in this House several times, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Appropriations had been violating the law as to public buildings. I was surprised to hear it from my colleague, who is chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and has been connected. with that committee for so long a time. It ought to have been known to him that the difficulty did not come from the Committee on Appropriations, but that when the original limit was fixed the architect, in designing the structure, made false estimates, made them far below what it was possible to construct the building for. When the buildings were in process of construction it was not then possible for the Committee on Appropriations to take the position in this House we would allow them to remain unfinished and as they stood. question has never been raised in our committee, nor has that committee ever assumed the right to go beyond the limit. Whenever it has been raised we have uniformly adhered to the limit.

Now, my colleague says that it is much cheaper for the Government to construct its own public buildings. I take the proposition as he to construct its own public buildings. I take the proposition as he states it and say it is true; and I can go further and say I can name public buildings in this country which, by an expenditure here and there, will compel us to vote $30,000,000 this year, $30,000,000 next, and so on until they are completed. Unless we are prepared to do that, unless we are to take the burden of generations to follow us on our own shoulders, then the argument amounts to nothing.

I trust, sir, the House will not be deluded by this proposition. We did not think so before the war. These expenditures are subsequent. They are but in keeping with others; they have grown out of them, and I do think, sir, the time has come when we ought to get our annual appropriations down to a point in our own life-time where we may be able to legislate in favor of reduction of taxation.

Mr. COOK. I should like to have a minute.

Mr. COOK. I should like to have a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. COOK. The law requires, when an appropriation is made for a public building, that the contract, specifications, and limit shall be made by the Architect of the Treasury, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General, and that the expenditure shall be within the limit of the appropriation. That is before the committee. The amount of the limit has been expended. It has been exceeded in Hartford half a dozen times and in half a dozen other places. When they come before the Committee on Appropriations asking you for an appropriation beyond the limit, it is your business, as in the post-office matter, to look into the contract and see who violated it, who is responsible for going beyond the law—it is your duty to make them come before the Committee on Appropriations and make defense as you did in the other matter. Mr. BLOUNT. My colleague cannot say that during the Forty-fourth or Forty-fifth Congress there was anything else done than just what he has suggested.

Mr. COOK. Never, so far as I know, have they come in here with any such proposition. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has nothing to do with appropriations. The matter passes absolutely from their hands when they report a proposition and limit the amount to be appropriated for the construction of the building. The architect says the reason why these buildings cost more than the original limit is because the Committee on Appropriations has appropriated more than the limit.

Mr. BLOUNT. The present Supervising Architect of the Treasury has told us, on the contrary, that the reason for it was that the former Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department made false and fraudulent estimates in the first place.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of this bill, and to pass the same with an amendment.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The amendment is to restore the limitation which has been stricken out. The amount is $750,000.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 114, noes 10.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the bill was passed.

MEXICAN WAR PENSIONS.

Mr. COFFROTH. I am authorized by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to offer the following resolution and ask for its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the rules of the House be suspended and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 3257, granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican and other wars therein named, and for other purposes, and that the said bill be now considered by the House.

Mr. SAPP. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 103.
So the House refused to adjourn.
The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion to suspend the rules

Mr. COFFROTH. I demand a second on the motion. The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3257) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican and other wars therein named, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, de., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the names of the surviving officers and enlisted men, including militia and volunteers of the military and naval services of the United States who served sixty days in the war of 1846 and 1847 with Mexico; who served thirty days in the Creek war of 1835 and 1836, or in the Florida war with the Seminoles from 1835 to 1842, or the Black Hawk war of 1832, and were honorably discharged, and to such other officers and soldiers and sailors as may have been personally named in any resolution of Congress for any specific service in said wars, although their term of service may have been less than sixty days, and who shall subscribe an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and the surviving widows of such officers and enlisted men: Provided, That such widows have not remarried.

SEC. 2. That this act shall not apply to any person who is receiving a pension at the rate of $8 or more per month, nor to any person receiving a pension for less than $8 per month, except for the difference between the pension now received and $8 per month. Pensions under this act shall be at the rate of $8 per month, except as herein provided as to persons now receiving a pension for less than $8 per month. Pensions under this act shall be paid from and after the passage of this act for and during the natural lives of the persons entitled thereto.

SEC. 3. That before the name of any person shall be placed on the pension-roll under this act, proof shall be made, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, of the right of the applicant to a pension; and any person who shall falsely and corruptly take any oath required under this act shall be deemed guilty of perjury; and the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be stricken from the pension-roll the name of any person whenever it shall be made to appear by proof satisfactory to him that such name was put upon such roll through false and fraudulent representations, and that such person is not entitled to a pension under this act. The loss of the certificate of discharge shall not deprive any person of the benefits of this act, but other evidence of an honorable discharge may be deemed sufficient; and that when any person has been granted a land warrant under any act of Congress for and on account of service in the said wars, such grant shall be prima facie evidence of his service and honorable discharge, but such evidence shall not be conclusive, and may be rebutted by evidence that such land warrant was fraudulently granted or obtained.

that I for one am opposed to pensioning Jefferson Davis, and I am opposed to striking down section 4716 of the Revised Statutes, as is proposed here to be done.

Mr. CONGER made the point of order that no quorum had voted.

Mr. COFFROTH. I desire to say to the House that if the rule be suspended to consider the bill we can then agree to fix a day when it shall be discussed and considered in the House until disposed of.

Several Members. That is right.

Mr. CONGER. We had better agree to that first.

Mr. COFFROTH. There will be no difficulty in arranging that, I am satisfied.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say for myself and others that we have come here several nights to consider these pension cases, and frequently we are unable to do anything because members will not attend, and somebody raises the point that there is no quorum. Objection is made every night. Gentlemen who are so urgent about pensioning soldiers should be willing to attend these night sessions to prevent this trouble that I allude to.

before the House for consideration it would then be subject to a motion to postpone to a day certain.

Mr. CONGER. We understand that, Mr. Speaker. The majority have introduced a proposition here to which I think we cannot possibly assent. If we consent to its coming up in this way, we simply put it in their power to pass that bill against our will, and with provisions to which we cannot assent. We must take some steps to discuss and to amend this bill and to remove from it its objectionable provisions before we can assent to its passage. And we say it is more important that we act upon the bills for pensioning a thousand soldiers now before the House who were wounded in the war to save this Government, than it is to depart from the old rule and pension all who have ever been engaged in any war, the Black Hawk war, the Seminole war, the Creek war, &c. Let us first pension the soldiers who fought to save the Union, and then we can consider the pensioning of the men who were engaged in those Indian wars.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman from Michigan has spoken of the question of a quorum being raised at the evening sessions for pension bills. That is not so. There never has been a time when the question of a quorum was raised in this House this session while the House was considering the pensioning of Union soldiers.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman had been here, as I have been, he would have known there was.

Mr. FINLEY. I have been here. What I say is that the question of a quorum was not raised on the democratic side of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There has been less opposition to the pensioning of soldiers of the late war from this side than there has been from the opposite side of the House.

Mr. COFFROTH. The gentleman from Michigan knows I have been here every night; that I have sustained the Union soldiers, have advocated their pensions, and have reported bills to give them their bills. That is not so. There never has been a time when the

Mr. HATCH. Does the gentleman from Michigan say that Pennsylvania soldiers should not have pensions? Does he object to pensioning a soldier who lives in Pennsylvania?

Mr. CONGER. Of course not.

Mr. HATCH. Then, why should the gentleman throw that up to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions every chance he

Mr. CONGER. That is between the chairman of the committee and myself. When we invite the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr.

Mr. HATCH. I will come in whenever I see a fitting opportunity.

Mr. COFFROTH. The gentleman from Michigan seems to be a little envious because Pennsylvania has more soldiers to pension than the envious because Pennsylvania has more soldiers to pension than any other State.

Mr. BRAGG. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not, if objected to, but has been allowed heretofore by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. A proposition has been made to assign this bill for consideration on Tuesday a week from to-morrow, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. Our business to-day is to dispose of motions to suspend the rules upon reports from committees. Nothing else is in order

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a request for unanimous consent, and does not affect the order of business.

Mr. CONGER. Reports from committees of motions to suspend the rules are in order to-day, and nothing else.

The SPEAKER. It is not unusual when a controversy arises between the two sides of the House or between one portion of the members and another portion of the members that an arrangement is reached by unanimous consent; and the Chair was listening to that intent, that there might be some adjustment of the question in controversy so as to save the time of the House and also to secure the vote of a quorum.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania contemplate an opportunity for debate and amendment to the

Mr. COFFROTH. Certainly. Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That is what I want to be understood.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of the bill and to bring it before the House for consideration.

Mr. WILBER. If we have not a quorum, how can we act upon the bill?

The SPEAKER. A quorum did not vote, but the Chair thinks there is a quorum present. In the absence of a quorum the only motions in order are the motion to adjourn and the motion for a call of the House.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. I move that the House do now adjourn. Mr. SCALES. If we should now adjourn, what is the condition of this bill ?

The SPEAKER. It will be the unfinished business for the third Monday of next month.

Mr. COX. Five minutes of good sense would settle this.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks five minutes of good feeling might settle it.

Mr. COFFROTH. I wish to ask gentlemen on the other side when it will suit them to consider this bill?

Mr. LOWE. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question will be first on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Aldrich] that the House do now ad-

The question being taken, there were—ayes 67, noes 113. So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Lowe] that there be a call of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. As the last vote showed the presence of a quorum here, I ask the gentleman from Alabama to withdraw that motion.

Mr. LOWE. I will withdraw the motion for a call of the House. The SPEAKER. The question then recurs upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules, and the tellers will resume their places.

Mr. ATKINS. I think my proposition should be accepted by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. Coffronth] and by gentlemen on the other side to fix some time when this subject can be considered and debated. Mr. CONGER. If this bill could be introduced, as we think it should be, without this repeal of existing laws and without permitting those to receive pensions who for years have been prevented by the law from doing so, then it could be passed by the unanimous vote of the House

Mr. ATKINS. Is not the gentleman willing that a majority vote should settle the question?

Mr. CONGER. Hardly. Mr. ATKINS. Then the gentleman is not a democrat. [Laugh-

Mr. CONGER. No; I believe it is generally understood that I am

Mr. FRYE. When the vote was taken some time ago upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules, a large number of gentlemen on this side of the House were absent, and in their absence I believe that the filibustering, as you may call it, to the extent of refraining from voting so as to break up a quorum, was entirely justifiable. Since then many members have come into the Hall. Now, I do not propose to vote for this bill in its present shape; but it seems to me that, with the House as full as it is at the present moment, it is only fair to test the question, and if the bill can be passed by a two-thirds vote, then let it pass.

Mr. SPRINGER. We do not want to pass it by a two-thirds vote.

We want to bring the bill up for consideration and pass it by a majority vote.

So far as I am concerned, I prefer to have it acted upon by two-thirds. I am not willing to have it taken out of its place on the Calendar, unless two-thirds want to do so.

Mr. CCNGER. With that view of the case, and recognizing the fact that many members who were absent on the former vote have now returned to the Chamber, I will withdraw my point of order that no quorum voted on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. It will be understood that the motion to suspend the rules is seconded. The question is upon the motion to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of this bill so as to bring it before the House for consideration. Mr. CONGER. We are ready to vote if other gentlemen are.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] has notified the Chair that he desires to speak five minutes upon the proposition to suspend the rules.

Mr. DUNNELL. I had supposed that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Coffroth] was to occupy some time in support of his proposition.

Mr. COFFROTH. I propose to take about ten minutes. Mr. DUNNELL. I do not desire to speak.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire some little time

Mr. KEIFER. Now? Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Yes. The SPEAKER. It is the gentleman's right to speak now as there has been a second.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I want to speak before the rules are suspended, because I desire to understand the position this bill will be in should the rules be suspended. I will ask the Speaker whether, in the event the rules are suspended, this bill will be before the House for consideration the same as any other bill?

The SPEAKER. It would be.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. For consideration and amendment.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Will it be subject to a point of order sending it to the Committee of the Whole for consideration under the five-minute rule?

The SPEAKER. The proposition is to suspend all the rules, including the one which requires it to be first considered in Committee of the Whole, and to bring it before the House for consideration.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. For debate and amendment?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I now gather from what the Chair says, that, in the event the rules are suspended, this bill will be taken from the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole, to the detriment of all other bills before it upon the Calendar, whether they be pension bills or otherwise, and brought at once before the House for consideration.

Mr. CONGER. Not to be considered in Committee of the Whole at all ?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Not to be considered in Committee of the Whole at all. It will then be within the power of the majority of this House, under the lead of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Coffront,] if Le desires to move the previous question and cut off all debate and amendment, to pass this bill in its present shape, without any amendment and without debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that bringing this bill from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union into the House does not interfere with any private pension bill, because the private pension bills are on the Private Calendar.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There is no pension bill ahead of this on the Calendar. It is ahead of every other pension bill, whether private or any other kind.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. My remark on that point was only inci-

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does this bill stand upon the same Calendar with any other pension bill before the House

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that this is the first pension bill of a general character in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It does not interfere, of course, with any private bill on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is all.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. If the effect of the proposition is to take this bill from the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole, where under the general rules of the House all bills appropriating money go, upon a point of order, for discussion and amendment under the five-minute rule-if the proposition has the effect to bring the bill into the House and put it within the power of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and a majority of the House to cut off all discussion and all amendment, for one I will not vote to discharge the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Legislation is generally controlled by a majority of the House when before the House for consideration.

Mr. SIMONTON. Is the gentleman from Illinois willing to set day when this bill shall be considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Simonton] that this bill is now before the Committee of the Whole under the rules of this House for consideration, just as hundreds of bills to pension soldiers of the late war or to give other relief to citizens of the United States are under the rules; and I am here ready and willing to go into Committee of the Whole to consider this bill there under the five-minute rule, just as I would consider a bill to pension a private soldier of the late war. But I am not ready to vote to consider this bill in any other way.

Mr. SIMONTON. Is the gentleman willing to set a time for the consideration of the bill ?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The majority could have gone into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill at any time since it was reported on the 7th day of January last, and then the right of the minority or of any member to offer amendments cannot be cut off, and I am willing to go into Committee of the Whole for its consideration at any time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Then, let us do so now.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Speaker, I have stated that I shall vote against this bill, and I desire to give my reasons for doing so. It is not the reason which is given by many gentlemen. It is not because this bill may grant a pension to somebody who has been engaged in rebellion against the Government. That is not my reason at all. My reason is this: while we have a pension-roll costing us $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 a year for soldiers of the last war, while we grant pensions only to those who have been disabled by their service in that war, you are by this bill undertaking to put upon another pension-roll able bodied men, some of them less than sixty years of age—ay, some of them less than fifty—some of them men of wealth, of high position, abundantly able to take care of themselves; you are proposing to put such men upon a pension-roll, while here are poor, broken-down soldiers of the last war appealing to us, and appealing in vain.

Mr. SIMONTON. We want to challenge those statements and we ask you to discuss the question with us.

Mr. FRYE. I was stating that there are broken-down soldiers of the last war appealing to us and appealing in vain. Now I am not complaining that gentlemen on the other side of the House do not do their duty in the matter of pensions; I believe they do. I say for my-self that I cannot help admiring the spirit of gentlemen on the other side who vote for our pension bills, who give their time and attention to this matter of pensions, who vote to appropriate for these pensioners something like $40,000,000 a year. I accord my admiration to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Coffroth,] chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I have nothing to say against the gentlemen who have been in rebellion. They come up like men and vote for pensions for our soldiers. I put my opposition to this bill upon one single ground—that we are asked to pension men who have no need of pensions. If the gentlemen in charge of this bill will so amend it that only those who are needy, or sick, or infirm, shall draw pensions, I will vote for this pension bill whether it pensions men who have recently been in rebellion or not.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. We will allow you to propose an amendment to that effect, and have a vote upon it.

Mr. COFFROTH, (to Mr. FRYE.) You can amend the bill.

Mr. FRYE. It is very kind on the part of gentlemen to allow an amendment of that kind; but will the majority on that side vote for

That is the important question. Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. A number of gentlemen here will probably vote for such an amendment; and perhaps it will prevail. I do not say that I will vote for it; but quite a number of gentlemen

Mr. CONGER. In the moment that is left for debate on this side of the question I wish to say that we demand the right to discuss this bill in Committee of the Whole, where it now is. We do not feel willing to put ourselves in a position where a majority may cut off amendments or may prevent us from discussing, under the fiveminute rule, whatever amendments we propose to offer. That is the reason we shall vote against this proposition.

Mr. COFFROTH. I desire to say to gentlemen on the other side of the House who are continually asserting that we on this side will cut off all debate if the proposition is allowed to come up for consideration, by demanding the previous question, that we do not propose to do any such thing. I propose now to fix a time for the consideration of this bill, that it may be considered in the House the same as in the Convention of the Whole House on the state of the Union. If the in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. If the rules are suspended I will not call the previous question until a full hearing has been had, until all amendments gentlemen desire to pre-nearing has been had, until all amendments gentlemen desire to present have been offered and acted on.

Mr. WARNER, That is right; let that be done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania states that if the motion to suspend the rules should prevail it is his purpose to allow debate and amendment both.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is understood it is open to amendment and discussion

The SPEAKER. That is the understanding.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now let gentlemen on the other side come forward and help us to pass it.

The question recurred on the motion to suspend the rules. The House divided; and there were—ayes 113, noes 60.

Mr. GOODE demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative-yeas 119, nays 70, not voting 103; as follows:

Mr. COFFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to give notice that to-morrow, after the morning hour, I shall move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the purpose of passing over all other bills on the Calendar and taking up and considering this pension bill.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Mr. HUNTON. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of discharging the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4567) to provide for the increase of the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia, and putting it on its passage.

Mr. CONGER. Not to consider it to-night?

Mr. HUNTON. It will not require much consideration, I trust. Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman wish to consider it, or only to get it before the House ?

Mr. HUNTON. I wish to suspend the rules for the purpose of passing the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There is an immediate necessity

Mr. HUNTON. Yes; there is an immediate necessity for the passage of the bill. Mr. CONGER.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to that.
Mr. HUNTON. I move, then, that the rules be suspended and the bill brought before the House and passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to appoint one additional inspector of police at a salary not exceeding $150 per month, one clerk at a salary not exceeding $100 per month, and as many additional privates or patrolimen, not exceeding $100 per month, and as many additional privates or patrolimen, to exceeding $60 per month each, as may be necessary from time to time to preserve the peace and good order of the District; and in the appointment of privates or patrolimen hereafter the said commissioners shall not be required to appoint only persons who have served in the Army and Navy of the United States and have received an honorable discharge therefrom.

Sec. 2. This act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Mr. CONGER. That should not pass. It provides for changing the law for the appointment of Union soldiers as patrolmen on Metropoliaw for the appointment of Union soldiers as patrolmen on Metropolitan police force. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. FORT. This is apparently intended to exclude Union soldiers from the force altogether. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HUNTON. If the gentleman will permit me—

Mr. CONGER. This strikes at the appointment of Union soldiers.

Every bill from that side has some such attack upon them.

Mr. HUNTON. In answer to the gentleman from Michigan I claim

Mr. HONON. In answer to the gentleman from Menigar Ferain the right to explain.

Mr. CONGER. I insist on my motion that the House adjourn.

Mr. HUNTON. I trust the gentleman will withdraw his motion a moment and permit me to say a word upon this bill.

Mr. CONGER. I have heard the bill read, and that is enough for

I do not think that the gentleman can explain satisfactorily that provision of it which removes these men.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from Virginia certainly should have an opportunity of replying. This bill is no attack upon the Union soldiers.

Mr. FORT. That appears to be about the purpose of the bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"

Mr. HUNTON. I believe I have the floor and mean to occupy it.
Mr. FORT. There is a motion to adjourn. I presume the regular order will be that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is no occasion for any feeling on this subject. Two gentlemen have spoken against the bill rather out of order, and the gentleman from Virginia simply asks a moment to reply.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman from Virginia comes in here with a bill which he endeavors to pass under a suspension of the rules, and which is an entire change in the law for the employment of soldiers and sailors on that force.

Mr. HUNTON. I only want two minutes to reply to the gentleman. I do not mean to agree that the remarks made by the gentleman from Michigan shall go abroad to the country through the RECORD of this House without a reply and an explicit denial. He has stated here, sir, that this bill is an attack on the Union soldiers, and that every bill from this side of the House contains an attack on these soldiers. bill from this side of the House contains an attack on these soldiers. No Union soldier now on this police force is displaced by the provisions of this bill. I take it for granted that there is no other gentleman on that side of the House, or in this House, who believes me capable of making an attack upon the Union soldiers. And I wish to say further that this side of the House is incapable of doing so; for we stand here year after year and vote $40,000,000 pension to these Union soldiers of the United States.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Over $60,000,000 last year.
Mr. HUNTON. And there was not the remotest conception on the part of any member of the committee that reported this bill that it would be construed into an attack upon any soldier. I want to state would be construed into an attack upon any soldier. I want to state further that, in my opinion, there was no republican or Union soldier on that committee that objected to this provision in the bill. I believe I am stating it correctly.

Mr. CONGER. I would like to know why not?

Mr. HUNTON. I will give you the reason. The commissioners of the District of Columbia, one of whom was a gallant Union soldier being the first would be a soldier. himself, informed the committee that this provision of the law which this bill proposes to remedy put men upon Metropolitan police of this District who were too old to do satisfactory and efficient duty, and for that reason the committee agreed to report the bill as it is. It has been nearly twenty years now since the war, and to put men on duty who served in the war, and those only, might, it can readily be seen, work to the injury of the police force of the District by putting upon it men who are too old and are thus physically unable to perform the service. That, I repeat, was the only reason that the provision was adopted.

Mr. CONGER. I insist upon my motion to adjourn.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let me make a remark in correction of what the gentleman from Virginia has said. He has followed the example of the gentleman from Maine to-day and fixed the amount of pensions at $40,000,000 instead of $30,000,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The amount paid out in pensions is $63,000,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. Up to this date the amount has never reached quite $30,000,000.

Mr. ATKINS. Forty millions.
Mr. DUNNELL. It has never been forty millions. It never exceeded thirty millions. I speak of the regular pension appropriation

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I repeat, it is sixty-three millions. The motion of Mr. Conger was then agreed to; and the House (at five o'clock and forty-four minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CLEVELAND.

Mr. VEST. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 5623) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to repair and extend the public building owned by the Government at Cleveland, Ohio, and have instructed me to report it with an amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that bill. It provides for an enlargement of the public building at Cleveland recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury; and every one acquainted with the building, as I am, and with the business of that port and the business of the United States transacted at Cleveland, knows that this enlargement is necessary and that it cannot be too speedily made. I hope there will be no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to repair and extend, for the use of the Government offices at Cleveland, Ohio, in accordance with plans and specifications submitted by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, the Government building at Cleveland, Ohio, the cost not to exceed $150,000.

The amendment reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was to add to the bill:

And this sum, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1654) granting an increase of pension to Thomas S. Cogley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1655) to authorize the sale of certain property in the city of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BLAIR asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 104) authorizing the Secretary of War to lend certain tents, flags, and camp equipage to the Governor of the State of New Hampshire for the use of the militia of that State at their general muster to be held the present year; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 105) for the erection of a monument over the grave of Zachary Taylor, near Louisville, Kentucky; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. TELLER submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 5524) to establish post-routes; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. MAXEY. I desire to give notice that on Friday during the morning hour, or immediately after that, if possible, I shall call up the bill (H. R. No. 5524) to establish post-routes, and I shall ask unanimous consent to have it put on its passage at that time. It contains no legislation whatever. The amendments have all been in print, and I call the attention of Senators to it now that they may examine the bill, and if there are any additional expendments that about 1 the bill, and if there are any additional amendments they should be placed in my possession before that time. I am anxious to have the bill returned to the House as soon as possible, so as to have the amendments of the Senate acted upon in time there.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF 1883.

Mr. BAYARD. Senate bill No. 1160 was returned from the House of Representatives this morning with amendments, and I ask that they be now considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 1160) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of peace and the recognition of American Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and the products of the soil and mine in the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the year 1883.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were on page 2, line 12, after the word "Whittemore," to insert:

Charles L. Tiffany, John A. Stewart, Abram S. Hewitt, Daniel F. Appleton, David Dows, Orestes Cleveland, Horace Porter, Henry M. Alexander, Fletcher Harper, Charles G. Francklyn, Thomas C. Acton, Richard M. Hoe, Jackson S. Schultz, Edward Clark, Norvin Green, William B. Dinsmore, Dennis C. Wilcox, Benjamin B. Sherman, Samuel B. H. Vance, Samuel D. Babcock, Henry Hilton, Andrew H. Green, Robert Gordon, Allen Campbell, Samuel B. Parsons, Francis A. Stout, J. Peabody Wetmore, John R. Voorhies, Leighton Williams, George G. Haven, Stephen O'Brien, Charles Solomons, Henry Draper, Philip Collins.

Provided. That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require the governor of any State to appoint the commissioners provided for in section 2, nor shall said commissioners nor any of them incur any liability for their failure or refusal to accept such position or perform the duties thereof.

Mr. BAYARD. I move the Senate's concurrence in those amendments; they really improve the measure.

Mr. CONKLING. I think they improve the bill.

The amendments were concurred in.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 2850) to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts, custom-house, and post-office at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

IMPROVEMENT OF CITY HALL.

Mr. MORRILL. We have passed already several bills for public buildings in various parts of the country. I now ask that the Senate take up the bill for the City Hall accommodations of the courts and records of the District of Columbia reported unanimously from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. MORRILL. I trust the Senator from Missouri will allow this

Mr. MCKRILL. I trust the Senator from Missouri will allow this bill to come up, as it has been postponed for a long time.

Mr. COCKRELL. If I allow this, I shall have to allow others, and there is constant complaint. If the Senate desire the bill to come up in preference to the Calendar, they can do it by motion.

Mr. MORRILL. The bill is so important that I shall move the postponement of all prior orders in order to have it taken up. Since it was reported, a fire has occurred in the rooms of the City Hall by which the records were placed in very great peril. It is notorious to any and to all who have visited the City Hall that the accommodations and to all who have visited the City Hall that the accommodations there are not by any means sufficient for the requirements of the courts. The bill has been reported unanimously, and has been postponed for a long time. I think it is quite as important as the consideration of bills for any other portion of the country. I therefore move to postpone all prior orders in order to take up this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont moves to postpone the product of the produ pone the pending and all prior orders, the pending order being the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the Anthony

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the bill be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to postpone the present order, indicating his purpose, if that motion be successful, to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill just read.

The motion was agreed to.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on proceeding to the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill just read.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1349) for enlarging the City Hall for the accommodation of the courts and records of the District of Columbia. It appropriates $117,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in enlarging the City Hall so as to afford additional accommodations for the courts of the District and for fire-proof rooms for the safe-keeping of the records of the courts and of the District of Columbia, according to the general plan furnished by the Architect of the Capitol Extension, and under the supervision of that officer.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator from Vermont how he gets the amount which is named in the bill?

Mr. MORRILL. The estimate has been made by the Architect of the Capitol, under whose supervision the building will be constructed if the bill should pass.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is there a report accompanying it?
Mr. MORRILL. There is no written report. I have the documents

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I believe that something ought to be done, but it appears to me that the amount named ought to erect an entire new building and not patch up an old one. I would rather a good deal vote a sufficient sum to erect a new building, if this is not for a new building, than to patch up the old one that is there now, for I believe that building ought to come away. It is an eye-sore to the whole place around there, and I am told it is a very unsafe building. Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the Senator that this will be an improvement upon the north side of the building, covering the unsightly portion of the present building, and will furnish additional accommodations of two large court-rooms and some five or six other rooms for jury-rooms and fire-proof rooms to hold the documents of the courts and the records of the District of Columbia. When it is completed the building will be much more sightly than it is now—that is the building will be carried out.

Mr. INGALLS. Who owns the building now?

Mr. MORRILL. It is owned by the United States. The United States and the District of Columbia originally built the building to-gether, each owning one-half, but the United States have purchased the entire interest of the District of Columbia and now own the whole of it, having paid $75,000 for the one-half they bought from the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. With a friendly disposition toward the bill, for I believe an improvement ought to take place there, yet should like to have further information in connection with it. Would it not be better, I ask the Senator from Vermont having charge of the bill, to dispose of the building entirely, to let it come away from there and put a new one in its place if that is a proper site for such a building? I believe the amount appropriated is about sufficient to erect a proper building and it success to me to retain up the cient to erect a proper building, and it appears to me to patch up the present building in its unsafe condition and with its liability to take fire at any time and burn down is unwise. It would be better to double the amount of money if necessary, in my judgment, and have a building worthy of the city and worthy of the Government when it is put up, and not patch up the old building that we now have.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from West Virginia was not quite as particular when we were passing a bill for West Virginia. This subject has been fully investigated by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. We had the judges of the courts before us; we have had an estimate, a careful estimate, prepared by the Architect of the Capitol; and we have reached the conclusion unanimously that this ought to be done.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think the Senator's remark about the building in West Virginia does not apply here. He says I was not so particular in that case.

Mr. ALLISON. Where was that building?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Never mind, that building is not before the Senate. The bill has passed, and is a law, I suppose, by this time; the Senator ought to have made his inquiry at the time if he wanted to make it. But here is a building that is to be put up in the District of Columbia, and is supposed to stand as long as buildings ordinarily do. It appears to me that we ought to have a new building constructed entirely and not patch up the old one. I do not know what the plans are; I do not know what the intention of the committee is. I suppose they have examined the subject properly and I make no objection to the bill, but I do express my opinion, and I believe I am correct, that we ought to have a building worthy of the believe I am correct, that we ought to have a building worthy of the city put there instead of patching up the old one that is there now. I hope that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will take that thought into consideration and see now whether it is not better, if necessary, to appropriate double the amount in order to have a creditable and a proper building for this purpose.

Mr. DAWES. I should like very much to co-operate with the Senator from West Virginia in producing upon that spot a very elegant and suitable city hall for the purposes for which that building was designed, if the Senator had some plan, if the Senator had some idea that could be developed into a bill, so that I could support it. My difficulty is that the Senator does not bring forward anything that I can support.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, as well as it knew how, looked the matter all over and thought that this would be not only the most convenient and suitable thing but the most economical at the same time. I regret exceedingly that the Senator does not put his views into the form of a bill rather than content himself with put his views into the form of a bill rather than content himself with stating the faults of this measure. The faults of this measure are very apparent to everybody, but by pointing them out and leaving us unfortunately in that position without the benefit of the constructive talent of the Senator from West Virginia, we do not make any progress in this matter. So far as the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have been able to put the matter together in a form that would be practicable, this seemed to them to be the best thing. My friend from West Virginia, whose intense and persistent desire for economy I so like to follow and so much admire, should have addressed himself for a moment to the idea of making a much have addressed himself for a moment to the idea of making a much nave addressed himself for a moment to the idea of making a much more magnificent and commodious building here at a less price. Those two purposes seem to be uppermost in the mind of the Senator from West Virginia and most desirable to be attained. They are the two great things pertaining to every public building, to get the largest possible, the most elegant, structure at the least possible cost. That is the problem, and I invoke the genius (that is the word) of my friend from West Virginia to that. The Committee on Public Buildings of Grand has given as fare at their grains will in this line. ings and Grounds have gone as far as their genius will in this line, and they bring this measure before the Senate for its approbation.

Mr. INGALLS. I regret to see any more money expended on the present City Hall for any purpose. It is an unsightly deformity. It is wrongly located. The object of Congress hitherto seems to have been to clear that square as far as possible of incumbrances and devote it either to purposes of recreation and pleasure or for the conthat formerly stood in the northeast corner has been taken away. I believe those best competent to judge think that the City Hall, instead of being improved in its present condition, should be removed. The Senator from Massachusetts speaks about some substitute. It has always occurred to me that eventually the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad would be removed from its present location and that Congress would be called upon to purchase the present depot structure. I believe that with very little alteration that building could be adapted to the purposes of the city for holding courts and for the custody and preservation of its records. I do not know how far the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have considered this matter; but unless there is some immediate, urgent, and pressing necessity for the expenditure of this money, I should regret to see the bill adopted. I trust that unless there is that necessity its consideration may be postponed until such time as the subject may be considered in the light of the suggestions I have made.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to state to my friend from Kansas that there is an immediate, pressing, and present necessity for additional courtrooms here. Two months ago there was a memorial addressed to Congress by the chief-justice and associate justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, which was sent to me and by me presented to the Senate, in which the fact of the absolute and present necessity for additional court-rooms of greater security is most distinctly stated. That memorial was referred to the commissioners of the District of Columbia, who quite concur in every fact stated by the judges and urge the immediate construction of wings on the north of the City Hall. I take for granted that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have given that investigation to the question that it deserves and have arrived at correct conclusions. In view of the absolute and present necessity for these additional court-rooms, I hope that the bill reported by that committee may be adopted by the Senate and become a law in order that the building may be immediately proceeded with.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, it has been a habit of the Senate, ertainly of late, to follow the recommendations of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Without any independent judgment of my own in this particular case, I should feel it safer for me to continue to follow that committee. I rose, however, more particularly to make a remark upon another subject.

The other day I asked the honorable Senator from Vermont how much money is involved in uncompleted public buildings in the country, buildings which have been ordered and which have not been completed. On a subsequent day the Senator from Vermont stated to the Senate that a sum of money which he named was the sum which up to that time had been appropriated at this session of Congress.

Mr. MORRILL: Not appropriated, but reported favorably by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CONKLING. So I meant to say; the sum which the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had recommended to be appropriated, and upon which I supposed the Senate had acted or was to act when the reports were reached.

Now, I have the impression that if the Senator from Vermont or any other Senator would totalize the amount of money which has been appropriated and the appropriation of which is recommended in bills pending before the two Houses, the result would be something I might almost say astounding. These bills come along here one after another; I think for a good while they have averaged more than one a week; and when you come to add what we have done at this session to what has been done heretofore in the instance of buildings not yet completed, the result would be very serious. We had this morning a bill relating to the city of Cleveland, where $150,000 was appropriated to repair and extend a public building, illustrating how long is the continuance in some of these cases of the need of appropriations. If we were to put these all together, I repeat that I believe the Senate would be amazed at the result.

Without aiming my remark at any particular instance, either that of West Virginia which has been spoken of or this City Hall which much more nearly and appropriately than buildings a distance off we ought to attend to no doubt,—without aiming my remark at any bill in particular, I venture to ask the attention of the Senate to the extent to which this species of appropriation is going. I believe that, if I felt at liberty to be or to seem invidious, I could mention not one case merely but several cases, and recent cases too, where but for the mere pro forma acquiescence of the Senate in the suggestion of the committee, had a scrutiny been made of the facts, the Senate never would have been able to assent to the proposed bill except by a wide and glaring departure from the considerations and reasons which used to control in this regard. The matter of public buildings is getting to be somewhat like river and harbor improvements; it is rather an occasion of competition among the representatives of different sections and localities, and it is rather matter of grievance and disparagement if each particular locality does not receive its quota of paragement if each particular locality does not receive its quota or national compliment and national attention. I see my honorable friend from Florida [Mr. Jones] smiles at this view of the subject, and that makes it a good time to leave it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont if this bill contemplates that the whole expenditure shall be paid by the

Mr. MORRILL. It is a building that is now owned by the United States. The site is owned by the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. For what business is it used? Is it not used for the purposes of the District?

Mr. MORRILL. For the United States courts, and for the District courts, and for the records. Mr. COCKRELL. Then why should the Government support it entirely?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. These are United States courts, Federal courts.

Mr. COCKRELL. They are District courts. I understand the Senator from Vermont to say that they are courts of the District of Co-

Mr. INGALLS. And for the custody of the local records.
Mr. COCKRELL. And the custody of the local records of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly all the records of the courts and of the entire District.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the Senator from Florida to say it

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the Senator From Florida to say it is not for the purposes of the District of Columbia at all.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I regard the courts of the United States that are held within this District as resting upon the same footing as the courts of the United States that are held in the States, and the grisdiction the very same. They enforce the laws of the United States; they are presided over by judges appointed by the authority of the United States. It is true they administer justice to this people, but suits are instituted by citizens of the States against citizens of the District, and they are in reality courts of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Florida if they are not in reality the same to the District of Columbia that the courts of the respective States are to those States?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Well, not entirely, Mr. President. They are national courts. I need not remind the Senator that this District of Columbia is within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, I have no doubt of that fact.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Within this District these courts administer the laws of the United States, I repeat, the same as the circuit and district courts administer those laws in the States, and thus far they are national.

they are national.

Mr. COCKRELL. The point I make is simply this: while everybody knows that Congress has complete jurisdiction in regard to the management and government of the District of Columbia, yet the local government is for the benefit of the people living in the District, and the people of the District should bear their proportion of the expenses of it. Here we have a criminal court, a police court, and all these other courts purely for local self-government, held in this building, and it is right and proper that the people who receive protaction from them should contribute to the extent of erection the tection from them should contribute to the extent of erecting the building. I regret exceedingly that the Senator from Vermont undertakes to make the tax-payers of this country responsible for the administration of justice in the District of Columbia for furnishing the house, quarters, room, and everything of that kind. I think he would have just precisely the same right to make the tax-payers of the United States responsible for the administration of justice in the State of Vermont.

Mr. ALLISON. The judges of these courts are paid out of the United States Treasury.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to record my vote against the bill without consuming time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD FREIGHT DISCRIMINATIONS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask leave out of order to present a report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Committee on the Judiciary which was instructed by a resolution of the Senate passed on the 10th of June, 1879, to inquire into certain supposed discriminations by the Pacific railroad companies as they are called as to freights against the United States, has instructed me to make a report which I submit and desire to have printed and the committee ask to be discharged from the further execution of the order.

If the Senate cares anything about it, the report ought to be read for that reason, because the order instructed us to do a variety of things which we think under the present state of the law it is unnecessary that we should do. I do not know therefore if any Senator cares anything about it, but that the report ought to be read in order that the Senate may see what we ask to be discharged from doing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submits a report under an order of the Senate which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution adopted by the Senate June 10, 1879:

Resolved. That the letter of the Secretary of War in answer to the Senate resolution of April 7, 1879, in relation to discriminations by the Union Pacific Railroad Company in the rates of freight to private shippers as against the United States, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions that the Committee on the Judiciary inquire, ascertain, and report which railroads are discriminating against the United States in favor of private shippers, how long such discriminations have been made by each company, the extent of such discriminations, and report what further legislation, if any, is necessary to protect the United States in reference to the same; and that said Committee on the Judiciary have power to send for persons and papers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Upon this resolution the Committee on the Judiciary make a report, which will be read. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, which was instructed by a resolution of the Senate passed on the 10th June, 1879, to "inquire, ascertain, and report which of the Pacific railroads are discriminating against the United States in favor of private shippers; how long such discriminations have been made by each company; the extent of such discriminations; and what further legislation, if any, is necessary to protect the United States in reference to the same;" respectfully reports:

That in obedience to said resolution it has considered the subject and found, in general, that the supposed discriminations have consisted, usually, in the company requiring the United States to pay for its transportation the rates provided by its general tariff applicable to all shippers, as a rule; but that it has carried similar freights for particular shippers under special contracts, providing that the particular shipper, under the special contract, should give to the railroad company all its business between the points proposed. In such a case the company claims that it makes no unjust or unequal discrimination.

The provisions of the charters and laws applicable to the railway companies which have received aid from the United States are quite various, but have a general similarity. It is sufficient for the purposes of this report to cite the two principal ones.

eral similarity. It is sufficient for the purposes of this report to cite the two principal ones.

That applying to the Union Pacific, Central Pacific, Kansas Pacific, Central Branch Union Pacific, Sioux City and Pacific, and Denver Pacific is as follows:

"That * * said company shall at all times transmit dispatches over said telegraph line, and transport mails, troops, and munitions of war, supplies and public stores upon said railroad for the Government, when required to do so by any department thereof, and that the Government shall at all times have the preference in the use of the same for all the purposes aforesaid, (at fair and reasonable rates of compensation not to exceed the amounts paid by private parties for the same kind off-service.") (12 Stat., p. 493, sec. 6.)

The provision applying to the Southern Pacific, Northern Pacific, Atlantic and Pacific, Saint Louis and San Francisco roads is as follows:

"That the said company shall not charge the Government higher rates than they do individuals for like transportation and telegraph service.

"That said  railroad or any part thereof shall be a post-route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and all other Government service, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charges for such Government transportation." (14 Stat., p. 295, sec. 5, and p. 297, sec. 11.)

The provisions relating to most if not all the other roads will be found brought together in the report of the Auditor of the Railroad Accounts for the year 1879, pages 212, 213.

It will be seen from the provisions above quoted that the rights of the United together in the report of the Auditor of the Railroad Accounts for the year 1879, pages 212, 213.

It will be seen from the provisions above quoted that the rights of the United States and the duties of the companies are fixed by definite provisions of law, which are, in substance, that transportation is to be furnished to the United States at reasonable rates, and not exceeding the amounts paid by private parties for the same kind of service. These provisions are, in the opinion of the committee, substantially what the common law is in relation to all common carriers. If, as it appears from some of the papers attached to this report, some persons have on some of these roads obtained freights at less rates than the United States and general shippers, the question whether that entitles the United States to have its freights between the same points at the same special rates, is, in the opinion of the committee, principally a judicial one, which, in case of dispute, can readily be determined according to the circumstances of each particular case, by resort to the judicial tribunals. The law seems to be adequate to the protection of all the just rights of the United States. The only difficulty in a given case is the ordinary business and judicial one of applying the law to the particular circumstances. The committee is not aware that any legislation is necessary to accomplish this end. If the executive department of the Government is of opinion that unwarranted discriminations are, for any cause, made against the United States, it is its duty, through the proper channels, in the adjustment of the accounts of the companies for transportation, to insist upon the proper reduction, and a correction of the wrong; and if, in such a case, any railroad company thinks the claim of the United States unwarranted, it has only to commence a suit in the Court of Claims for the recovery of such sums as may have been thus disallowed. In such case it will be the duty of that court or of the Supreme Court, on appeal, to determine ea merits.

It will thus be seen that if any wrong of the kind mentioned in the resolution of the Senate has been or shall be committed against the interests of the United States, complete means of redress are already in possession of the executive department of the Government.

If any serious case should occur, such as is mentioned in the papers hereto attached, of a refusal by any company to transport freight for any reason not legally justifiable, the ordinary remedy of private persons in such a case, by suit at law, is open to the United States through the action of the executive department; and also, in a suitable case, more stringent and decisive proceedings for a forfeiture of all rights derived by such company from the United States, including its charter, if it have one, on the ground of a disregard of its charter obligations.

The committee is of opinion that under the circumstances no legislative step is at present advisable touching the matter mentioned in the resolution. It therefore asks to be discharged from a further execution of the order of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed under the rule. The committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the order of the Senate. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON EXCISE REVENUE.

Mr. VOORHEES. Some days ago I was appointed a member of the joint committee on the part of the Senate to investigate certain matters connected with the loss of revenue growing out of evasions of the tax on manufactured cigars and tobacco. I desire to decline the posi-tion, and that the Chair appoint another member of the Finance Committee in pursuance of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not intend to object; but it gives me the opportunity to say what I should have said if I had been present when the order was adopted, that I think it is a mistake on the part of the Senate ever to agree to the appointment of a joint committee, in the strict sense of that word, composed of unequal numbers of the members of the two Houses. I saw in the RECORD, I think afterward, that this joint committee is composed of three members of the House of Representatives and two members of this body. That I think is a very wide departure from the precedents in such cases; and as ever body can see, if you thus make a strictly joint committee, as I think this is, it puts one of two equal branches of the Government in a very extraordinary attitude of having reported to it and proposed for its consideration measures, or on the other side a refusal to report measures. ures for its consideration, by a body controlled entirely by our co-ordinate branch of the Government. I only take this occasion to put in a PUBLIC BUILDING AT DENVER.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 1269.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. Then I make a motion that the pending and all prior orders be postponed.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the bill?

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. It is a bill for the erection of a public building at Denver, Colorado.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado moves to postpone the pending order for the purpose of considering the bill indicated by him.

The motion was ageed to.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado now moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1269) for the erection of a public building at Denver, Colorado, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. HILL, of Colorado.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. Idesire to withdraw the amendment which was offered by myself, and I ask for the adoption of the amendment proposed by my colleague.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a printed report?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is none. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be reported.

The CHEFF CLERK. After the word "States," in line 18, it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the bill, and in lieu thereof to Nor until the Legislature of the State of Colorado shall duly consent to the purchase by the United States of the proposed site.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. That amendment is withdrawn; and I now suggest that the amendment proposed by my colleague be adopted.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn. The question will now be on the amendment proposed by the other Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller,] which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was in line 18 to strike out the word "nor" and insert "and no expenditure of money shall be made on the building proposed to be erected on the said site;" so Provided, That no money shall be used or applied for the purpose mentioned until a valid title to the land for the site of such building shall be vested in the United States; and no expenditure of money shall be made on the building proposed to be erected on the said site until the State of Colorado shall duly release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax or in any way assess said site or the property of the United States that may be thereon, and shall cede jurisdiction over the same during the time that the United States shall remain the owner thereof.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on this amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

The question being put, a division was called for.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senate cannot understand that this is a bill for a public building or it would come up as a matter of course.

Mr. MORGAN. It is for a public building.

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly the Senate will vote for that!

The motion was agreed to, the ayes being 25 and the noes not counted.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 464) for the erection of a public building at Montgomery, Alabama.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 12 to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

Shall not exceed the cost of $125,000.

Shall not exceed the cost or $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the reading of the report.
Mr. JONES, of Florida. I will say there is no written report.
Mr. COCKRELL. It is put down on the Calendar as having a printed report, and I ask for the reading of it.
Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator is right; I beg pardon.
The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. JONES, of Florida, February 27, 1880:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred for consideration Senate bill No. 464, for the erection of a public building at Montgomery, Alabama, beg leave to report as follows:

Montgomery is the capital of Alabama, situated near the head of navigation on the Alabama River, which is navigable for large-sized boats thence to Mobile Bay. It is in the midst of the rich cotton-growing region of the State, has railroads running into it from five different directions, and another recently projected railroad will probably soon be built leading from it directly south. Its trade and its population, now estimated at about eighteen or twenty thousand, are rapidly increasing. During the past cotton year it received 134,000 bales of cotton. Its receipts from September 1, 1879, to December 12, 1879, were 86,000 bales; and it is estimated that during the current year the receipts will reach 145,000 bales, which, at present prices, would yield about $7,500,000.

The United States courts for the middle district of Alabama are held there, and sit for more than four months in each year.

The post-office is also in a rented building. The receipts at said post-office for the last fiscal year were about $18,000. During the first quarter of the present fiscal year were about $18,000. During the first quarter of the present fiscal year such receipts increased about 20 per cent. over the corresponding quarter of the preceding year, showing that the receipts will probably reach more than $20,000 for the current year.

The United States Lund offices for the register and receiver are in a wooden shingled-roof building, with other small buildings near by; and it affords but little security for the valuable and extensive records.

The rents now paid by the Government for these offices are:
 Court-rooms
 $1,500

 Post-office
 1,000

 Internal-revenue office
 350

 Land offices 480

 Signal Corps
 216

These rents expire shortly; and rents have advanced in the city of Montgomery since the present contracts were made 25 or 30 per cent., and with the expected rapid increase in the trade and population of the city will probably further ad-

It also appears from the evidence submitted to us that the present court-rooms and offices, though they are the best that can be had in Montgomery, are unsuitable for the purposes.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill as amended.

The next amendment reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was, in line 20, after the word "therein," to insert:

And provided further. That the lot of land so purchased for a site shall be such as to afford an open space between the building hereby authorized, and any other building, of not less than forty feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1, section 2, after the word "of," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "forty:" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $40,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended in the purchase of said site and toward the construction of said building.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2253) to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, at the end of section 2 to insert "and the cost of the site and the erection of the building shall in no event exceed the sum hereby appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. WITHERS. I move that pending orders be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3966) to carry into effect the resolution of Congress, adopted on the 29th day of October, 1781, in regard to a monumental column at Yorktown, Virginia, and for other purposes.

for other purposes.

Mr. HEREFORD. I do not desire to object to this bill, but I want to say that I hope the Senate will take up the pension bill for Mr. Phares as soon as this is disposed of. It is the first bill on the Calendar, and I have given way morning after morning for gentlemen to bring up their various bills. I do not desire to interpose any objec-tion to this, but I shall after this bill is disposed of insist on going on with business regularly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill with an amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.
Mr. MORRILL. I wish to offer an amendment.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will first be read, and then the committee's amendment will be acted on, after which the amendment of the Senator from Vermont will be received.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. BURN-SIDE March 16, 1880:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3966) to carry into effect the resolution of Congress, adopted on the 29th day of October, 1781, in regard to a monumental column at Yorktown, Virginia, and for other purposes, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to submit the following report:

""(Journals of Congress, November 7, 17t1, vol. 3, p. 686.)"
Your committee are of the opinion that it would be unwise to adopt a precedent which would lead to the erection by the National Government of monuments commemorative of revolutionary events, and believe that, as a rule, such monuments should be erected by the States, counties, cities, towns, or communities; but they find no difficulty in making this case an exception.
The surrender at Yorktown was the crowning success of the Revolution, and its event should be commemorated by national authority. The Congress of the United States passed resolutions directing that it should be commemorated in a specific way, and there is no better time than the present, in the opinion of your committee, to carry out that resolve by the necessary appropriation.
Much could be said in support of this view, but surely nothing can be said which is not suggested by the patriotic feeling of all Senators.
Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The amendment reported from the Committee on Military Affairs was, at the end of the bill, to add:

Provided, That no money appropriated by this act shall be expended or drawn from the Treasury until the United States shall have received free of expense a legal title to the site chosen for said monument, and the State of Virginia shall have relinquished jurisdiction over the same.

Mr. WITHERS. I desire to say that I should like that amendment not to be adopted, inasmuch as it interposes a difficulty to effectuating the prime object of the bill in order to make it available at the ensuing anniversary of the surrender. It will be impracticable to comply with the condition prescribed by the amendment in time; comply with the condition prescribed by the amendment in time; but really there will be no practical difficulty in securing all the objects designed to be attained by it. A simple provision directing that the provisions of the statute in regard to the erection of public buildings shall apply, would cover the ground amply which is designed to be met by the amendment proposed.

I should like, if it meets the views of the Senate, that the amendment proposed is the senate of th ment reported by the committee be not agreed to, or that a clause extending the provision of the statute to this case be substituted for it. October of next year is the anniversary of the surrender. The Legislature of Virginia is not in session, and it will be impracticable, their sessions being biennial, to await their action in order to have the title required to be conveyed by the amendment in time to meet the centennial celebration of 1881; and as nothing really practical grows out of it, as there will be no difficulty whatever in securing grows out of it, as there will be no difficulty whatever in securing the full title to the property whenever the opportunity offers, and the rights of the Government will be amply protected by requiring the provisions of the section of the statute to which I have referred to be carried out, I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. WITHERS. I think this bill will take but a short time. I ask unanimous consent for the further consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the further consid-

Senator and I am perfectly willing to have a vote upon it at once, and I hope it will be disposed of.

Mr. INGALLS. I wanted to call the attention of the Senate and of the Senator from Virginia to what seems to me to be rather a remarkable omission. This is a national anniversary of very great significance and profound interest. We are called upon to vote $100,000. nificance and profound interest. We are called upon to vote $100,000 for a monument and $20,000 for making the necessary preparations for a celebration. The executive department of the Government has the selection of the monument and the site, and a committee of thirteen appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives are to have control of the exercises, and the Senate is entirely unrepresented. It seems to me that is rather remarkable.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does not say even "the Speaker of the House of Representatives." It merely says "the Speaker."

Mr. INGALLS. Further than that, the Senator from Vermont has called my attention to what I had observed before in the bill, that the committee to which reference is made in the third section is one to be selected by "the Speaker." That is rather an indefinite term. If it means the Speaker of the House of Representatives, it would

If it means the Speaker of the House of Representatives, it would be better, I suppose, to employ that designation.

Mr. WITHERS. Of course, there will be no objection to that nor to any amendment looking to the representation of the Senate as suggested by the Senator from Kansas, and I think it would be very appropriate. This is a House bill, and I presume it was reported by the committee without their attention being directed to that point.

My own attention had not been directed to the omission, but it will be very easy to provide a suitable provision for the representation of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I think there should be one.

Mr. WITHERS. I concur in the suggestion made by the Senator from Kansa

The Chief Clerk read sections 2 and 3, as follows:

SEC. 2. That a commission of three persons shall be appointed by the Secretary of War, whose duty it shall be to recommend a suitable design for said monument, to prepare a sketch of emblems of the alliance between His Most Christian Majesty and the United States, and a succinct narrative of the surrender of Earl Cornwallis, to be inscribed on the same, subject to the approval and adoption of the select committee of thirteen, appointed by the Speaker on the 19th of December, 1879, to inquire into the expediency of appropriating a suitable sum to be expended in erecting, at Yorktown, in Virginia, the monument referred to.

SEC 3. That it shall be the duty of said committee to select the site for the location of said monument, to obtain the cession of the same from the State of Virginia, and to make all necessary arrangements for such a celebration by the American people of the centennial anniversary of the battle of Yorktown, on the 19th of October, 1881, as shall befit the historical significance of that event, and the present greatness of the nation.

Mr. CONKLING. Where is the appropriation of $20,000?
Mr. ALLISON. In the fourth section.
Mr. CONKLING. So I thought.

The Chief Clerk read section 4, as follows:

Sec. 4. That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of defraying the expenses incurred in the said centennial celebration, and to be disbursed under the direction of the said committee.

Mr. CONKLING. It will be seen that the committee has already been appointed as I understand. It is not a committee to be ap-

Mr. WITHERS. It is a committee which was appointed last December by the Speaker of the House.

Mr. CONKLING. Now the question which addresses itself to my mind is somewhat different from the one that has been propounded; it is whether any committee or any body ought to do this thing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the fundamental question.

Mr. CONKLING. This is an excursion; it is to be a large-sized picture.

Mr. CONKLING. This is an excursion; it is to be a large-sized picnic, a celebration; and for Congress to appropriate money first to build a monument on ground which does not belong to the nation and which cannot be ceded to it in time the Senator from Virginia says, and then to appropriate $20,000 to be taken charge of by a committee, I care not of which House or whether of both, to have a grand celebration and picnic—if this were not the Senate I should say a blow-out, for that is what it is sometimes called in the region in which I live. that is what it is sometimes called in the region in which I live seems to me very extraordinary. I should suppose if a monument as seems to me very extraordinary. I should suppose if a monument as expensive as this is to be constructed in the State of Virginia to commemorate either the little beginning or the great end of the American Revolution, that the exercises, the celebration, the occasion at least might be provided by the State or by the locality, and I think I shall not be challenged if I say that this is the first time that it was ever proposed in any bill to appropriate money from the Treasury to pay the expenses of a celebration in any State commemorative of any event. I know we have chartered corporations commissioned to the event. I know we have chartered corporations commissioned to the work of raising money to celebrate centennials; and I know that in the case of the Philadelphia exposition we put into it as we did in a bill which passed last this morning a provision that the Government never should be liable for anything, and afterward by supplemental legislation recalled that provision and enacted the contrary. I do not mean to include such bills in my remark; but to appropriate monotoner medically to defray the expenses of people georgeograph to defray specifically to defray the expenses of people congregated together on a certain day to hear addresses, to listen to music, and participate in observances, which are to inaugurate a monument or any other work in a State, is something which I have not heard of in any case heretofore unless I have forgotten it. I do not believe that that part of this bill at all events commends itself to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think as this opens a variety of questions that are quite distinct,—the monument is one thing and the celebration is another,—we can hardly take the time this morning to dispose of it, and therefore I feel obliged, as we ought to finish the Geneva award business, to ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is the unfinished business.

ness, being the Geneva award bill.

GENEVA AWARD FUND.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1194) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. HOAR to the fourth section of the

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I said yesterday just as we were about to adjourn that I was not able to agree with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. Blaine,] and I believed also with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. Carpenter,] in respect of the sensitiveness that was expressed as to the public opinion of the world touching our political conduct in regard to the money obtained from Great Britain under the treaty of Washington. It appears to me, I repeat, that it is perfectly clear according to the sense of all civilized nations that the disposition between a government and its own citizens of moneys received from another government for wrongs committed against those citizens, is a matter entirely of domestic concern, in respect of which no other government has either a moral or a legal right to make any criticism whatever; and every civilized government would resent justly any comment upon its conduct in such a case, for that rests were the received principles of law and continued to a legal right. upon the recognized principles of law and comity and good neighborhood between nations in allowing each nation to regulate its own borhood between nations in allowing each nation to regulate its own domestic affairs, the relations between the Government and its own citizens, in its own way without the right on the part of anybody outside of that country to make any criticism or comment whatever.

I should like to add to that a statement, which I believe to be true, that there is no pretense or suggestion anywhere that anything was stated or proved before the tribunal at Geneva in respect of the destruction of vessels that was not true. There is not a single suggestion in this debate or anywhere else, and I do not suppose there is a single fact that would fortify such a suggestion if it were made, that the United States presented to the tribunal at Geneva a declaration of the destruction of a single ship that was not a true declaration. of the destruction of a single ship that was not a true declaration. If it did, it of course was a mistake that ought to be rectified, but I have never heard of a suggestion of that kind.

These acts of destruction were public acts known to all the world. Of course there was a possibility of error; but the facts that the tribunal at Geneva dealt with, and the series of facts that the treaty of Washington spoke of were all of them beyond all question. Whether, therefore, the sum that the Geneva tribunal awarded in gross to the United States for these acts of confederate hostility that the governunited States for these acts of confederate hostility that the government of Great Britain was found to have contributed to, was too much or too little, would depend upon a careful analysis and valuation of each ship, its cargo, the property of its officers and men, and so forth, because that was all that the tribunal at Geneva undertook to require Great Britain to pay for.

The tribunal at Geneva, after hearing both parties, determined that it would not provide for a minute and individual examination into each instance of destruction to find out exactly what the vessel was worth, exactly what the tackling and apparel were worth, exactly what the property, the sextants and chronometers and clothing, &c., of the officers and sailors were worth, but it said to Great Britain, "You have contributed to the destruction of certain vessels"—and by certain I do not mean particular ones named, but a class of vessels "through certain ships of the confederate navy; and we do not "through certain ships of the confederate navy; and we do not choose under the circumstances of this case, where your negligence or want of neutrality or whatever you call it was general and was not designed to effect the destruction of a particular vessel, to go into an arithmetical examination and computation upon specific testimony of exactly how much each ship was worth and all that belonged to it and its officers and crew, but on the whole you ought to make amends to the Government of the United States to the extent of fifteen and a half million dollars."

That is what the tribunal at Geneva did. They declined, although

That is what the tribunal at Geneva did. They declined, although the treaty had provided that they might do otherwise, to have each particular case examined by assessors. They chose after hearing all that was laid before them both of fact and of argument, to say to Great Britain, "We will generalize this question, and we will require you to pay a certain gross sum."

So then in every aspect of the case, I think we may dismiss from our minds any influence that has been attempted to be brought to bear on this subject as to what the people of Great Britain or of France or of any other civilized country are going to think about what becomes of this money.

And then beyond that, Mr. President, if we were to go into a strict accounting, it would be found that the difference of exchange by which the United States profited in the payment of this fifteen and a half millions, the accumulating interest in the way the accounts are kept, and all that form a very large and important element in what is now said to be the fact that the gross sum stands on the books of the Treas-ury or wherever it is kept, at a certain large amount beyond what the insurance companies claim or the war-premium people claim, and so

Mr. THURMAN. Not difference in exchange. The money was paid at Washington.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My learned and honorable friend from Ohio who has made me unhappy through all this business in the fact that he disagrees with me, says "not difference in exchange." I must repeat with great respect to him, again "difference in exchange," for I have good reason to believe that a very large sum of money, in the way the business was done in transmitting the award to Washington although it was to be paid at Washington, was got out of the difference of exchange. It is only information, but it is information that came in the time of it, six years ago, from people who ought to have known what they were talking about and who I think did; but perhaps they were mistaken.

they were mistaken.

Mr. THURMAN. You may be right, but I never heard of it before.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps I am mistaken in my recollection of what was stated to me; but all this is apart from the real question that we are called upon to decide. That is whether the Government of the United States owes a duty (whether you call it legal duty or political duty, I do not care for this present purpose,) to the insurance companies first, and to the war-premium people second, or to anybody else. If it does, it does not require any argument on the part of anybody to convince me, and I presume not to convince any other Senator, that we ought to perform that duty. But the first question and the only question is whether such a duty exists. Now let us see what it is that we agreed upon with Great Britain, and what was the nature of this treaty as it respects the insurance companies and their rights. The treaty provided first by recital—

Whereas differences have arisen between the Government of the United States and the government of Her Britannic Majesty, and still exist, growing out of the acts committed by the several vessels which have given rise to the claims generically known as the "Alabama claims."

Then after stating the regret of Her Majesty's government about the business, it proceeds:

Now, in order to remove and adjust all complaints and claims on the part of the United States, and to provide for the speedy settlement of such claims, which are not admitted by Her Britannic Majesty's government, the high contracting parties agree that all the said claims growing out of acts committed by the aforesaid vessels and generically known as the "Alabama claims" shall be referred to a tribunal.

There you will perceive that nothing is spoken of except first a difference between the two governments and complaints on the part of the United States as a government against the government of Her Majesty as a government, and next claims on the part of the United States against Her Majesty's government for the acts of the confederate cruisers, on the ground that she had aided in the commission of these acts of public hostility, as everybody must admit in this age of the world that they were. Then when you go on a little way to the twelfth article of the treaty you find the definite distinction between the case of a complaint by one government against another in its governmental character and the case of the interposition of one government against another for the redress of private grievances; the twelfth article provides in this same treaty that—

The high contracting parties agree that all claims on the part of corporations, companies, or private individuals, citizens of the United States, upon the government of Her Britannic Majesty, arising out of acts committed against the persons or property of citizens of the United States during the period between the 13th of April, 1861, and the 9th of April, 1865, inclusive, not being claims growing out of the acts of the vessels referred to in article 1 of this treaty, and all claims, with the like exception, on the part of—

Citizens of the United States shall be referred to a different tribunal and a different commission to decide. In the first case the claim, as it appears to me, and always has so appeared since I have examined it, was a national claim—not a national claim as representing private losses of property that the private losers had a right to indemnify for, but the claim of one government against the other for a national injury that the other had committed upon it in the only way (with a small exception that I need not refer to) that one government can commit a wrong against another, and that is by destroying its commerce or the property or the lives of its citizens or subjects. A government is nothing but a corporation. It is composed of an association of persons who have property, who have liberty, who have rights, and in a case of regular public war, as for these purposes this war of the rebellion was, the injury that one government commits upon another is the foreible injury of destroying the lives and the property of their respective citizens and subjects. It is nothing else, never has been and never can be in the nature of things anything else; and every such destruction, it appears to me everybody would It is nothing else, agree is in the legal and in the equitable and in the moral private agree is in the legal and in the equitable and in the moral private sense a perfectly lawful destruction, which gives to the person who is deprived of his life, his liberty, or his property, no just ground of complaint whatever against those who destroyed it. Will my learned friend from Ohio maintain when he comes to terminate this discussion—I am sure he will not—that any of the confederate officers or soldiers who in this brave contest of the Anglo-Saxon race for supremacy, as I think it was-nothing else-destroyed the lives of thousands and I do not know but hundreds of thousands of people who adhered to the United States and were on our side, were guilty of the crime of murder? If it was not a lawful destruction of life, it was certainly murder or manslaughter. Does my honorable friend hold that an indictment would lie, in the sense I am now speaking of it as a matter of public law, against any confederate officer or any confederate soldier who had slain a soldier of the Union? Nobody would pretend such a thing for a moment in the aspect I am now speaking of it. It is true that the Supreme Court of the United States has held, and I think rightly, that this civil war (as it is sometimes called, and in a legal and public sense undoubtedly correctly called) had two natures; one was its public and belligerent nature, and that the laws of war applied to; captures made by the Union Armies were public captures; captures made by the Union fleets were public captures that were subcaptures made by the Union neets were public captures that were subject to the laws of war as prizes, and to be tried as prizes and condemned and distributed in the prize courts. That was the public aspect of it; and it has a great many others. The court has also held that the fact that it had that public aspect and might be so treated by the Government, as it was in a great many respects, did not exclude the fact that this civil war was a rebellion, and that every person engaged in it was guilty of treason, and was subject to the municipal law notwithstanding the fact that in many of its aspects the Government had treated it correctly as a case of public war.

But that does not help this case any for the reason that every one of these acts of destruction that became the subject of discussion between Her Majesty's government and ours and the subject of this award was a public act of destruction, and in the municipal sense the government of Great Britain had nothing whatever to do with it. She was no party to the question as to whether the officers in com-mand of these confederate cruisers that had been fitted out in her ports were guilty of treason against the laws of the United States or not. She was not amenable for that; that was none of her business. She may have aided treason-to call it by that name and that is not so offensive as some people suppose it to be for our forefathers were guilty of treason undoubtedly in the municipal sense in achieving our liberties, only they succeeded and there was not any convenient way of punishing them—but she had nothing to do with the matter of treason, with the matter of our municipal laws. Her responsibility of treason, with the matter of our municipal laws. Her responsibility was the public responsibility arising from a state of public war between two belligerent powers, and in no other sense could she be called upon. She could not be an accessory to an act of private treason. That is plain enough. So I think Senators will see on all sides, if they will take the pains to reflect upon it a little, that in respect to this matter between the government of Her Majesty, the Queen of Great Britain, and the United States, this was purely a question standing exactly as it would have stood if the belligerent opposed to us had been the government of France instead of the temporary government of the so-called confederate States. That was her porary government of the so-called confederate States. That was her responsibility. It was the whole of it from beginning to end.

Now, what did the two governments do, to come back to this treaty?

You will see, sir, from what I have read, what they did. The complaint that was made against Great Britain in respect of these acts referred to of the confederate cruisers was a complaint on the part of the Government of the United States and in its own behalf. There were other complaints also of other national wrongs, as they are sometimes named, and by a confusion of terms it seems to have been implied, because some of the so-called national wrongs were not thought by the tribunal to be within the competence of its jurisdiction, that everything else must have been a private wrong, which is a non sequitur undoubtedly. When, in the same treaty, you come to those points where private wrongs are to be redressed, acts of illegal capture and illegal seizure you find the usual and ordinary provision of a claims treaty, providing for compensation for claims that are justly established on the part of private citizens and corporations. They are provided for by a distinct and separate provision in order, as it appears to me clearly, to separate them from the public complaint that the Government of the United States made against Great Britain for injury to the United States inflicted through the persons and property of its citizens by these public acts of recognized belligerent cruisers. If I am right about that (and it seems to me that few people can read these two branches of this treaty and not fail to see it,) there would seem to be an end of the question that any private right was being established by any decision of the tribunal at Geneva.

The next question would be how it happened that this distinction

The next question would be how it happened that this distinction should have been made. It is obvious enough to my mind. If the United States had pressed what are called the Alabama claims and had got Great Britain to agree to their being submitted as claims on the part of or in behalf of private citizens of the United States for the destruction of their ships by these public acts of war and they had been sent to the tribunal at Geneva what would it have been obliged to decide? It would have been obliged to decide as it appears to me and as I think it clearly appeared to the wise and able men who negotiated this treaty, that there was not any claim at all: that a negotiated this treaty, that there was not any claim at all; that a claim on the part of a private citizen, the owner of a ship destroyed by the Alabama for instance, was a claim that could not be proved to exist at all in point of law; no injury had been done to him whatever; he had no claim; he never had any claim, any more than the Union soldier had, or the Union man the owner of a house had in Southern Pennsylvania when General Lee invaded the State and the sweep of war destroyed his property. Therefore, if all the claims called the Alabama claims had been put in under article 12 that I have read as claims on the part of private citizens and corporations, the result, in my belief, and I think that is the key to this double provision in this treaty, would have been inevitable that the Geneva tribunal would have been obliged to decide upon the principles of public law that no allowance could be made at all, for it had no jurisdiction to allow them for the simple reason that there had not been in the legal and in the public sense or in the equitable sense any private injury whatever, and why? For the simple reason I have stated before, that in a case of a public war the belligerent destruction of the property or of the person, even life within certain limits, that I will not waste the time of the Senate to exactly define—it is enough for this purpose that the destruction of property or of life is a perfectly lawful destruction, and that it creates no responsibility on the part of the destroyer to the person whose life or whose property is destroyed or his representatives. It was a justifiable and lawful thing, just as much so as if the confederacy had succeeded in establishing its separate independence; there would have been no ground for a citizen of the Confederate States of America to sue any citizen of the United States, be he officer or man, for destroying his property in the course of war during that time.

I am almost ashamed, Mr. President, to take any time of the Senate in stating principles which seem to me so perfectly recognized by ate in stating principles which seem to me so perfectly recognized by everybody, by all countries, and by all courts, that to my mind it is clear that the separation of these two classes of complaints in this treaty itself was an industrious and intelligent separation, and that in the case of the Alabama claims under which this bill is pushed, the complaint, as the treaty states it, is a complaint on the part of the Government of the United States for the public acts of certain confederate cruisers, and for which we held that Great Britain was responsible on account of her national negligence and conduct in contributing, so far as she went, as an ally and accessory aiding this belligerent destruction of the property of our citizens. When they came to the next part of the fact which stood outside of this public and belligerent conduct on the part of Great Britain and on the part of the confederates that she was supposed to have been aiding either by action or omission, then the ordinary phrases of the claims treaties that had existed from the foundation of this Government and in all other civilized governments was adopted almost word for word. The men who framed this treaty could not have been ignorant of the distinction I have been stating. They had in their minds undoubtedly the historic course of public treaties for public indemnity and prithe historic course of public treaties for public indemnity and private treaties for claims, of which the statute-books and the collection of treaties from the beginning down were full.

I took pains in the year 1873, when this matter first came before the Senate, to point out to the Senate a number of instances of this kind, showing the distinction always observed by this Government itself in these two classes of treaties, beginning with the treaty with Great Britain of 1794.

Mr. THURMAN. What do you read from ?
Mr. EDMUNDS. I am referring now to my remarks in the Congressional Globe, delivered on the 7th of February, 1873.

Mr. ALLISON. State the page.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Page 1175 of the Globe, Forty-second Congress, third session. I first referred to the treaty of 1794 between the United States and Great Britain, in which the contracting powers undertook to make provision for private losses of the citizens and subjects of the two countries in the course of the war for national independence. The treaty recited the difficulties of the situation and then proceeded:

It is agreed that in all such cas

Speaking of the claims of British creditors against citizens of the United States, which of course were matters of pure private right that had been disturbed by the war-

It is agreed that in all such cases, where full compensation for such losses and damages cannot, for whatever reason, be actually obtained, had, and received by the said creditors in the ordinary course of justice, the United States will make full and complete compensation for the same to the said creditors.

There is an instance where the right of subrogation that is spoken of, which of course must depend upon the right to which it is subrogated (first you must get a right to exist before you can have any subrogation, everybody would agree) is provided for, just as in the twelfth article of this treaty of Washington similar rights are provided for.

Then the next treaty to which I referred was that with France in 1803, which provided for the debts due by France to the citizens of the United States.

Mr. THURMAN. The first treaty you referred to was Jay's? Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, the treaty of 1794 was the Jay treaty. Now I come to the treaty with France in 1803:

The debts due by France to citizens of the United States contracted-

Before a certain time-

Shall be paid according to the following regulations, with interest, &c.

Then it provides, just in substance as the twelfth article of this treaty provides, for a commission to ascertain each particular debt, how it arose and whether it was valid, and was extended sometimes to trespasses, illegal seizures, &c. Then the next one referred to was the treaty with the Dey of Algiers in 1815:

A just and full compensation shall be made by the Dey of Algiers to such citizens of the United States as have been captured and detained by Algerine cruisers, or who have been forced to abandon their property in Algiers, in violation of the twenty-third article of the treaty of peace and amity concluded between the United States and the Dey of Algiers on the 5th of September, 1795.

Then we come to the treaty with Spain in 1819 which provided that-

The United States, exonerating Spain from all demands in future on account of the claims of their citizens to which the renunciations herein contained extend, and considering them entirely canceled, undertake to make satisfaction for the same to an amount not exceeding $5,000,000.

Then it provided for commissions to hear and try each individual claim and allow to the claimant the sum that should be proved to be due to him, if anything was due, not exceeding that amount.

It is a curious thing, Mr. President, that the celebrated decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Comegys vs. Vasse in 1 Peters, that has been so often referred to, arose under this very treaty of 1819 with Spain, with whom we had not been at war. The injuries to our citizens had arisen from the fact that in the European wars in which Spain was concerned, and in respect of which we were neutral, illegal captures contrary to the principles of public law and municipal law had been made, sometimes by French cruisers, sometimes by Spanish cruisers or privateers and carried into French ports and condemned, we being neutrals and having no part in the war at all, and not aiding either belligerent. There was a case, of course, in which the destruction of the property of an American citizen was an illegal destruction that was not warranted by the principles either of public or municipal law, and in respect of which the private citizen of the United States had a clear right to follow his property by a suit for damages against the commanding officer and the people on the ship that took it, if he could catch them. Spain was called upon to respond, not because she had been helping somebody to make war upon us but because she being in a state of disturbance with somebody else and we being her friend, she had allowed her forces to do against our citizens an act that the laws of public war did not allow that the deal of the court of the course of the course of the course of the court of the course of t her to do at all, and that she did not pretend they allowed her to do.

Accordingly, under this treaty, which provided in express terms that Spain should furnish us on one consideration or another with $5,000,000, we undertook expressly to make satisfaction to these particular citizens whose property had been unlawfully destroyed. In this particular case referred to so often as being an authority in support of the claims of these insurance companies, Vasse was an insurance man. He had insured a vessel that we they illegally exical ance man. He had insured a vessel that was thus illegally seized and taken into a Spanish port and confiscated or condemned. Spain agreed to make reparation to him through us for it in explicit terms, and we had solemnly undertaken by a treaty with Spain in express language that we would make satisfaction to the owner of that ship or whoever might be entitled to stand in his shoes, for it. We appointed the commissioners who allowed for the destruction of this vessel the sum of eight or nine thousand dollars, whatever it was.

In a case of that kind the Supreme Court of the United States did and said with perfect justice in my opinion, and according to correct principles of law, that the insurer, the vessel having been abandoned to him, was entitled to this money. It seems to me to be perfectly clear that it was right; but how my learned friend from Ohio and other gentlemen who take that view of it can press that case upon our consideration as proving that in a case of a belligerent destruction between two hostile nations, as they may be called for this purpose, a sum of money awarded not to that individual but awarded to the United States, for a claim on the part of the United States, to use the exact language of the treaty, becomes in any sense his property either in morals or in law, is amazing to me. It may be so. I have the greatest respect for the opinion of my learned friend from Ohio, and for those of my friend from Illinois and the other gentle-Only, and for those of my friend from fillnois and the other gentlemen who differ with me; but I am quite unable to see how they suddenly jump the barrier, the difference, between the case of an illegal destruction of a person's property, which always gives him a right against somebody, and the case of a lawful destruction of his property, which gives him a right against nobody. It seems to me that there is a very wide difference between two such cases.

I repeat, it is a difference that the treaty of Washington studiously, industriously, and in terms recognized when it provided for the Alabama claims as claims on the part of the United States, and provided for the private claims in the twelfth article of the treaty as claims on the part of citizens of the United States.

It appears clear to me that it is not of any great consequence to us what was the individual or official opinion of the President of the United States or of the Secretary of State in his instruction to our agents and counsel at Geneva, or what statements they made to that tribunal or what individual or official opinions the tribunal itself may have had upon the subject. I do not agree with my learned friends on the other side as to the interpretation of these views. I think that they all tended exactly in the direction that I am speaking; they think otherwise; but I submit that it is of no possible importance to us except as they should have given good reasons for their opinion. Why? The treaty itself, which we now must interpret for ourselves, was the guide of that tribunal. It had no jurisdiction that the treaty did not confer. It could hear nothing and pronounce nothing that the treaty did not allow; and in its award it does not undertake to do either. The President of the United States and the Secretary of State and the counsel derived their only and sole authority from the treaty. If they followed it, it was well. If they stated opinions which were in contravention of the principles of the treaty, nobody was bound by them; they did not affect the United States in the slightest respect. I do not think they did, but gentlemen on the other side think they did.

Now, let me read what the high court of appeal of Great Britain since this Geneva tribunal, in the China case, said upon that very subject as to what authority the officers of Her Majesty's government and have in making a treaty a making a proprise of companyation. could have in making a treaty, in making promises of compensation, even if made in the clearest terms. If the President of the United States and the Secretary of State, Mr. Fish, in this instance had said to the insurance companies or to the owners of these ships, which for the purposes that I am now speaking of I will treat as exactly the same, "Grant your right of substitution if there is a right to be subsame, Grain your right of substitution it there is a figure to satisficated," then for the time being you change the sovereign control and rights of a government. Lord Chief-Justice Coleridge, in pronouncing the final opinion of the court on an appeal from Lord Chief-Justice Cockburn, who had been one of these very arbitrators and who decided the same way too, said this:

Secondly, upon these higher and wider considerations-

And now he is speaking of the national considerations that I have been speaking of-

as to which, in a case of this kind, we ought not to abstain from expressing an

I ought to state before I go on with that, for the information of Senators who may not have read the case, simply what this Chinese case was. British subjects residing in China entered into contracts with certain Chinese merchants, it being a case of regular and lawful private contract. By the laws of China a certain Chinese corporation, as they are accustomed to have corporations to regulate their commercial affairs, became responsible for this debt of the Chinamen to the subject of Her Majesty's government. That debt among a great many others was unpaid when Great Britain by what was called a war with China (it hardly ought to be dignified by that name) compelled China to pay the sum of £3,000,000, or whatever it was, to the government of Great Britain on account—I believe that is the very language of the treaty—of these debts. It was a case of restitution for a civil wrong, widely different from this, if I am right in what I have said, but a clear case in that respect of a claims treaty. The government of Great Britain asked China, and China agreed to do it, to pay over to the government of Great Britain a large sum of money on account of these debts that were due from Chinese subjects to the subjects of Her Majesty. It was paid over. Then a subject of the government of Great Britain appealed to her court, analogous to our Court of Claims, by what is called a petition of right, to get his share, according to his debt, of this sum of money that confessedly was paid over to Her Majesty's government for that very purpose. That being the case, where beyond all question it would be right that he should have his share, and this court do not dispute it at all, what do they say? They say:

Secondly, upon these higher and wider considerations, as to which, in a case of this kind, we ought not to abstain from expressing an opinion, we think he fails also. We assent, upon full consideration, to the reasoning of the judges in the court below. The making of peace and the making of war, as they are the undoubted, so they are, perhaps, the highest, acts of the prerogative of the Crown. The terms on which peace is made are in the absolute discretion of the sovereign. If Cantain Elliot. If Captain Elliot-

Now he comes to the point I am speaking of about supposed representations in calling upon these insurance companies and the owners of ships to send in their claims and agreeing, to put the strongest construction upon it, to prosecute them and get the pay.

If Captain Elliot did (to use the words of the petition) promise that the Queen would compel the Chinese government to pay these claims when terms of peace were arranged; if Sir Henry Pottinger—did promise that these claims should be insisted on, and should be paid, they both exceeded their authority, and promised what they had no power to perform, or to pledge the Queen to perform. The Queen might or not, as she thought fit, have made peace at all. He was the embassador who negotiated the treaty, I believe-

Just as the Government of the United States might or might not, as it thought fit, have charged the government of Great Britain with being an accessory and an aider and abettor in these acts of belligerency against the United States carried on by the confederate government while it existed.

She might or not, as she thought fit, have insisted on this money being paid her. She acted throughout the making of the treaty and in relation to each and every of its stipulations in her sovereign character, and by her own inherent authority; and, as in making the treaty, so in performing the treaty, she is beyond the control of municipal law, and her acts are not to be examined in her own courts. It is a treaty between herself as sovereign and the Emperor of China as sovereign, and though he might complain of the infraction, if infraction there were, of its provisions, her subjects cannot. We do not say that under no circumstances can the Crown be a trustee; we do not even say that under no circumstances can the Crown be an agent; but it seems cleart ous that in all that relates to the making and performance of a treaty with another sovereign the Crown is not, and cannot be, either a trustee or an agent for any subject whatever.

We do not, indeed, doubt that on the payment of the money by the Emperor of China there was a duty on the part of the English sovereign to administer the money so received according to the stipulations of the treaty. But it was a duty to do justice to her subjects according to the advice of her responsible ministers; not the duty of an agent to a principal, or of a trustee to a cestui que trust. If there has been a failure to perform that duty, which we only suggest for the sake of argument, it is one which Parliament can and will correct, not one with which the courts of law can deal. It is indeed in the highest degree unlikely that there has been, or ever will be, such a failure. In this country five-and-thirty years would not have run their course without the attention of Parliament being called to the unjust withholding of money by the English government from an English subject entitled to it. But whether this is so or not it is to Parliament alone that the suppliant can have recourse.—2 Queen's Beach Reports, 73, 74.

This was delivered as the deliberate judgment of the highest judicial tribunal in Great Britain, pronounced only four years after the making of this award by the tribunal at Geneva, and pronounced three years after the public debates in the Congress of the United States had drawn the attention of every civilized and intelligent law-administrating country to the questions that making country and law-administering country to the questions that would arise under such treaties. I repeat that the treaty on which this court was commenting was in terms a treaty by which the gov this court was commenting was in terms a treaty by which the government of China undertook to pay over to Great Britain, and did pay over to Great Britain, debts due from subjects of China to subjects of Her Majesty; and yet in that case of a purely claims provision without any other element in it whatever, Her Majesty's court said, and said rightly, that there was neither trust nor agency, and that it depended upon the sense of political justice of the Parliament of Great Britain, the political power of that country, whether even in such a case the subject should be entitled to receive any share in it. But just think how far that is from this case. it. But just think how far that is from this case.

Again I repeat, because, as it seems to me, it is the key and the answer to the whole subject, every ship that was destroyed by a confederate cruiser was destroyed in strict pursuance of law, and it left when destroyed no private right or equity of any description on the part of the owner of that ship, and so of course none on the part of anybody who stood in his place, as we all agree, against anybody, any more than it would have been if a convulsion of nature, a tempest, had carried the ship to the bottom instead of the guns of a belligerent power.

If this is good law, as everybody, I believe, who is acquainted with the administration of laws believes it is, that I have read, in the case of a claims treaty, how far away does it put this claim of the insurance companies standing upon their subrogated rights, as they call them! How far away does it put the claim of the owner of the ship, whether insured or not, to any part of this money because the money has been obtained or because he has any right in it of any character whatever! He has exactly the right, as it appears to me, and that was the principle upon which the act that we did pass proceeded—he has exactly the right and no other that he would have had if we never had received a dollar of money from Great Britain for these injuries committed upon us through the persons of our citizens; and the claim that he would have had in that case, as it seems to me, would have been a claim upon the sense of justice of the Congress of the United States in respect of its duty in protecting its citizens against the acts of the enemies of the United States. That is a duty, but it is only a duty of degree. It is only the duty of any political community to do the best it can.

Whether in a given case special compensation or aid should be given to a particular citizen or class of citizens growing out of a state of war, depends upon all the circumstances of the case. If it appears that in such a case of war special and unequal hardships and burdens and distresses have been borne by particular citizens or particular sections of a country, then a just and wise government usually en-deavors to make some compensation to them. The whole body of the deavors to make some compensation to them. The whole body of the State contributes to these special and individual hardships in order to make the equality of a just government more complete; just as we give, as was stated the other day, pensions to the soldiers of the United States, not because they had either a legal or equitable right to them in the sense of succession and security against the United States, but because in the course of the performance of a public duty in a public emergency the misfortunes that all such calamities bring upon the whole body of the community fell with special hardship upon them. The duty of political justice therefore prompts us to make these provisions, just as in the case of the New Madrid earthquake on the Mississippi in the early history of this country, that everybody is familiar with, where the homes of a great mass of settlers located in a particular section of the country were destroyed by an earthquake, a calamity that, I take it, even my friend from Ohio would not claim to give a right to subrogation or anything else against the Government of the United States, it was thought wise, and I believe by the unanimous vote of Congress, to make provision for a special hardship and to give new lands that had not been shaken by the forces of nature to all the settlers of that region-just as in dozens of instances in respect of refugees during the war of 1812, in respect of refugees from Nova Scotia during the war of the Revolution driven out by the Tories there, who came to this country, we made provision for them; they adhered to our side—just as in a thousand instances that occur from Congress to Congress where some special calamity or hardship has fallen upon some special citizen or class of citizens of our commonwealth, the justice of Congress in its political character and in its political sense gives them out of the contributions of all something to make it good.

It was upon that principle, and upon that only, as I understand it, that we passed the act of 1874 providing for the payments that it did make and those that we would pay to every sufferer whose vessel was destroyed by the cruisers named in the treaty enough money to make the sufferer whole and no more. If he had got that money from an insurance company upon a war risk, as he must have got it if he got it at all, he got it from a corporation that was enabled to take war risks and make money or lose money upon them from the simple fact that war existed. If there had been no war there would have been no war risks, there would have been no risks to be taken by insurance companies and no profits or losses to be made. Therefore, acting upon the principle that I have tried to state, and have stated so imperfectly, but still which I think can be understood, we endeavored to say to him, "just to the extent that your hardship as a citizen of the united States has been special and peculiar growing out of this war, and no further, we will make it good to you. Whatever you have and no further, we will make it good to you. Whatever you have lost by the destruction of your property on the high seas by the belligerent cruisers we will pay for, if you have not got it back from somebody who traded in the event of war and got an indemnity from him." We said at the same time and upon the same principle that those even who traded and were enabled to trade alone upon the fact that the war did exist—and that was going a great ways—should have compensation made to them if on account of it they had been special sufferers by making losses instead of gains out of this great national calamity, and they were paid.

The people who now come to be paid upon the principle of subrogation to a right which I have endeavored to show never existed at all, are those who were enabled out of the very business that they suffered this particular loss in, in a given case, and without which they could not have made any money at all on that kind of risks, to make more money than they lost. Yet it is said that here is a right to this money, an equity of some kind or other, I do not care by what name you call it, that they shall take this money; and it is put upon the ground apparently that we have got the money from Great Britain, and if we got it did we not get it for somebody? We did get it for somebody, Mr. President. We got it just as the treaty states that we claimed it, on the part of the Government of the United States, for public acts committed against the Government of the United States by Great Britain in aiding our enemies to inflict injury upon us in our character as a nation. That is how we got it; and we got it in no other way. In ascertaining the extent of these injuries against us in our character as a nation, it was, of course, necessary to make a summation of individual instances of how much of the property of citizens of the United States was destroyed and under what circumstances? That makes up the sum, and it is finally got

If I am right in supposing, or if I have succeeded in proving to the satisfaction of the Senate, that these belligerent destructions of American ships were destructions that left no right on the part of the ship-owner to complain of anybody, to seek redress against any government, then it necessarily follows that there is no right on the part of somebody who was subrogated to him as an insurer or otherwise to make any claim, because if the right did not exist there was nothing to subrogate. I take it, my friend from Illinois would agree to that. You must first establish the right before you are able to assign it. That, as it seems to me, is exactly this case; and it does not appear to me that there can be any question upon it. Suppose some of the owners of these vessels had applied directly to the English government, as on the principles of public law they always may for a private wrong, and as according to the act of 1790, if that was the date of it, against carrying on intercourse with foreign governments, &c., might be done, for while it punishes any citizen of the United States for engaging in negotiations or communications with the representatives of foreign governments touching matters pending between the governments of international concern, it adds the usual and necessary and proper proviso, according with public law, that that act shall not be construed to prevent any citizens of the United States from appealing to any foreign government to redress a private right of his.

Then suppose that a ship-owner (I will say nothing of an insurance company, because it, gentlemen say, stands on his rights) had applied to the government of Great Britain; he had sued the Lairds who helped to fit out some of these ships, is there anybody who hears me now who would say that he had any right to recover whatever? Suppose he had appealed to the government of Great Britain in its sovereign capacity for general redress, what would have been the answer? The government of Great Britain would have replied, "If we have done anything at all which is worthy of reproach, we have not done it to you; we have done it in aid of a belligerent enterprise being carried on against your Government; if we had done it directly in our own names and not through the confederate government that we were aiding, you would have had no cause of complaint against us in our character as a sovereign; you have no relations with us; we have done you no injury."

That is the same answer that, as I said a little while ago, would be made in any court of justice, not upon principles of technical law but upon principles of the broadest consideration resting in the very fundamental conditions of the existence of government at all, that no action could have been maintained against Semmes who commanded the Alabama by the owner of the ship that it destroyed. I am now speaking of it in the sense of public law. Whether a municipal action in our own country, treating the rebellion as an unaccomplished fact, could be maintained or not is another question; but that is entirely immaterial to what I am now speaking of. I do not by any means say it could, but I only say it is not necessary to go into that to settle this question.

Then it appears to me that if these gentlemen had appealed to the government of Great Britain they would have been met with this conclusive answer: "We have no relations with you, no officer of ours has." If the loss had been the direct act of a British cruiser, a belligerent act and not a private and illegal act, the answer would have been as to you and as to us, "it is the same as if the lightning or the tempest had sent your ship down; we are under no responsibility, either in law or in morals; our responsibility whatever it may be is to that great political community of which you form a part and not to you at all, and whether that great political community of which you form a part is bound to indemnify you or aid you on account of the destruction of your ship depends upon its own considerations of justice and expediency, and has not the slightest relation to the question of whether it can get anything out of us or not."

Since I have studied this subject, and with great deference to the opinions of gentlemen who are perhaps better able than I am to settle

Since I have studied this subject, and with great deference to the opinions of gentlemen who are perhaps better able than I am to settle a question of this kind and who disagree with me, it has always appeared to me, from the very provisions of the treaty itself, recognizing the broad distinction that I have endeavored to state between what are called the Alabama claims on the part of the Government for public destructions that no citizen could have complained of either against the confederates or the British government, and the claim for private and personal rights and injuries provided for in the twelfth article, that the only duty of the United States in respect of the disposition of this money or any other money, (because to my mind it does not make any difference) is the duty that I have endeavored to describe of relieving the special hardships of particular classes of its citizens, growing out of a state of war. Those special hardships were recognized in the act of 1874 to the extent that we then recognized them by making good to the owners of ships destroyed by particular vessels all that they had actually lost themselves, and by going a step farther and making good to the insurance companies all that they had lost growing out of their business based upon a state of war; that is, where they had lost in their war-premium business we made it up; where they had not lost we said, "you have no claim upon the political justice of this Government, and you have no other at all; there is no special hardships that you have suffered out of the existence of this state of war, which has enabled you to make profits out of the calamities of your country rather than to make losses;" and when I say "make profits out of calamities" I do not say it as a reproach upon the insurance companies. It is a perfectly legitimate, proper, useful, and sometimes a necessary business. I only speak of the simple fact that the war risk only exists from the circumstance that there is a war, and when the political justice of the people is Now let me say a word or two about the war-premium claimants. They stand in a little further degree on this question, but not much, from the insurance companies. A state of war has always been found, and I am afraid it always will be found, to produce a disturbance in the ordinary avocations of men. It is not a convenient thing to have for the prosperity of a community in any true sense of the term. Prices rise and fall. Particular commodities become in great demand; other commodities fail to be demanded at all. Avenues of trade in cases of invasion are cut up and cut off by contending armies. The highway of the nations, the sea, becomes insecure and dangerous; and the whole body of the people, according to their various callings and pursuits, suffer or gain more or less. I think that this is the first time in the history of a civilized or uncivilized government in which there has been a demand or a claim on the part of citizens of such a government engaged in a war for compensation or redress or whatever else you call it based upon these incidental disturbances and distresses that arise out of it except those special and peculiar hardships of destruction of property as distinguished from not being able to make so much or being obliged to pay more as this case is. I think I am safe in saying that this is the first instance that can be found in history of a claim of that kind. I am bound to say, therefore, that I think the tribunal at Geneva, although I admit that does not decide the question with us if I am right in what I stated before, were right in saying that the war-premium claims were not within the competence of adjustment and adjudication; they were too remote.

A man is engaged in business. A war has not exactly broken out but there is a state of irritation between the Government of the United States and Great Britain, for illustration, and it is expected by everybody and according to the newspapers that a war is to break out immediately. An American ship is to sail from New York to Singapore, if you please. The owner of the ship and the shipper of the freight expect that war will break out in two weeks, and it will take a hundred days for the sailing-vessel to go to Singapore. They want to make a war risk. They make one, and they pay $10,000 upon a value of a million, and the vessel gets there, but the $10,000 is gone. That is one of the fortunes of trade; that is all there is to it. Suppose war does break out. Not a belligerent ship is on the sea at that time, but with peaceful gales and sunshine all the way the vessel gets there. The insurer has found that he has paid for a risk that is no risk at all in that particular case. Is that one of the things that you can summate in such a way as to show that a particular man has suffered that special hardship that it is the political duty of a government to redress? Suppose you reverse the case. The ship is coming from Singapore or from Hong-Kong with fifty thousand pounds of tea, and there is the war risk and the war is on. The tea reaches the market. Who pays for that war risk on that tea, because you will observe that this war-premium claim is not merely for vessels that were destroyed, where there was a loss, but for all war premiums paid? The tea man, if he is wise, as New England people generally are, is not going to keep up the importation of tea for the sake of supplying his fellow-countrymen, as fond as our revolutionary fathers were of tea, at a loss to himself. He figures up the price of his fifty thousand pounds of tea, how much it stands him in when it is in the warehouse in Boston or New York; and as an element of that, the warehouse in Boston or New York; and as an element of that, the price he has paid for the war risk on insurance he puts in. He sells his tea accordingly, and you and I, and all of us who drink it, pay that war premium. It is we and all the other people of the United States who drink tea who pay that war premium. He advanced it, and he charged it just as an intermediate railroad does in carrying a freight over to the other road. He advanced it and he charged it to the cargo, he charged it to each chest, he charged it to the country merchant, and the country merchant charged it to us, and we paid for it as best we could. I think that is a perfectly fair and just statement.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the honorable Senator make that statement

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, Mr. President, I cannot make it again. I will tell you what I mean in a minute. Several of these war-premium gentlemen are among the most intimate and kindly of my personal friends; I have talked with them about the subject at the fireside; and a very distinguished importer, a man of great property and wealth, and, I will add, of great kindliness and generosity of heart and public spirit, some years ago, when this matter was up before and public spirit, some years ago, when this matter was up before, mentioned this question of war premiums to me, although that was at a time when there were very few people in the United States who had very much faith that the war premiums would ever cut much of a figure in this business, as they do now, and I asked him about the nature of his business during the war. He was a very heavy importer of teas and such things. I asked him if he had ever had a more nature of his business during the war. He was a very heavy importer of teas and such things. I asked him if he had ever had a more successful four years in his business career, that had been a long one, most profitable as well as honorable to himself, if he had ever had a more prosperous four years than during this war period. He said it was true he never had. He made a great deal more money in that time than he ever had before. I asked him then how it was that he thought he ought to have these premiums, amounting in his case I think to more than $100,000 that he had paid. Well he said—and that is the whole strength of the argument—"if I could have imported the tea in the same way and sold it for the same price and not had to pay the war premiums, although prices went up enormously. had to pay the war premiums, although prices went up enormously, I should have made $100,000 more." That was true. If you could have had a state of war in which the importers ran no risk and the people suffered the calamities of a state of war by the rise of prices people suffered the calamities of a state of war by the rise of prices, then the importers, the war-risk men, could have carried on their business without taking the risk, which everybody else did in the country, and they would have made more money. That is apparently as to importers the real ground on which this thing stands.

Of course you may say in a given case as it is always in matters of commerce, that you will find some importers who paid war premiums and who were actual losers, who failed and who were ruined, not because they paid war premiums but because just as in time of peace men are sometimes ruined from the misfortune of trade and from want of good management, and so on. When you come to the owner of a ship, there the argument can be made in favor of the claim in a different way and apparently for the moment with more plausibility, for the rise in the price of freight probably (although I am not quite the rise in the price of freight probably (atthough I am not quite advised about that) was not as great in proportion as the rise in the price of commodities, and the foreign ships not being obliged to pay the war premium could make the rate—as I believe the railroad phrase is—could fix the rate of freights between foreign ports and the United States at any price to suit them. Of course they would be glad to fix it as high a price as they could, but still there being competition they could make the risk and the American owner of a bottom could not carry freight at the same rate that the foreign owner of a ship could, unless he made the war risk, because everybody would naturally prefer to ship in a neutral bottom and not run any risk at all and not be obliged to pay a war premium himself upon the goods that he shipped. That is plain enough; but there is a countervailing consideration to that, aside from what I have stated about this whole matter, eration to that, aside from what I have stated about this whole matter, the business being one of those general things that a state of public disturbance and calamity affects everybody without giving anybody a particular right to redress, and that is that there was a countervailing consideration. Our currency was greatly disturbed, as I have heard a good many statesmen say within not many years, during the state of war and was vastly depreciated, and the premium upon gold and the difference of exchange became enormous comparatively, growing out of the simple fact that there was a state of war. Now I have been told on what seemed to me to be good authority, and it looks very reasonable, that the ship-owner, as distinguished from the man who owned goods although he participated in that benefit as well, but the shipowner in making his freights, taking his outward and inward cargoes together, made up his expenses for war premiums and frequently a good many times over, on account of the premium on gold and the great many times over, on account of the premium on gold and the great many times over, on account of the premium on gold and the great disturbance in the rate of exchange. So if you struck an average of a man's general business he would be obliged to say that he never made so much money in any four years of his life as he did then, although there are a great many individual exceptions, and not growing out of the single circumstance of war premiums. That is what I believe to be the state of the case.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the honorable Senator let me interrupt him with a question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. If that be the condition of things, as the Senator states, I should like him to explain why it was that during those four years the general disaster was so great to the shipping interest of America that it met with practical destruction. As the honorable Senator states it, it was rather a time of jolly prosperity. The actual fact was that it received a staggering blow under which it has been senator states it, it was rather a time of jony prosperity. The actual fact was that it received a staggering blow under which it has been staggering ever since.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not observe the question so much as I—Mr. BLAINE. How do you account for it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We cannot both talk at once. I was trying to reply to what the Senator called a question, and found that I was not able at the moment; that is all. The commentary of my honorable friend from Maine, for whose zeal and fidelity in this business I have a perfectly sincere admiration, because I know he means exactly what he has stated, I think is answered by this: in a state of war or public calamity of this kind, timidity plays a great part in respect of business transactions. I am not speaking of personal timidity in respect of being a soldier and so on, I am speaking of what is known as the proverbial timidity of capital and business. How far American commerce was driven from the seas, as the phrase is, by this state of war compared to the tendency of things if there had not been a state of war, I am not able to say; but I am able to say that I believe that has been vastly overestimated, for if it had depended solely or chiefly upon this four years' state of war the fifteen years since should have restored it over and over again, because the cause ceasing the effect should cease at once. effect should cease at once.

The trouble with American shipping I think is not chiefly owing to the rebellion, as injurious as that was to it for the time being, I agree; it is owing to other causes that this would not be the time or the place to go into, but I think that would be reasonably obvious to any reflecting person. The business of shipping, like every other business in a free world, as this is among civilized nations, is, as it re-spects private contracts, an effort of common carriers to get business and is the effort of people who have business to be done by common carriers to get it done in the cheapest way they can, just as we get our horse shod at the blacksmith's who can do it best and cheapest, carriers to get it done in the cheapest way they can, just as we get our horse shod at the blacksmith's who can do it best and cheapest, or buy our clothes at the tailor's who makes them best and cheapest. As long as foreign builders of ships can build them for less money, and so can run them at lower freights than American builders of ships can, they will get the greater part of the business naturally. That is a law that I do not think any act of Congress can very easily overcome. How it happens that a foreign ship can be built for less money and so can be run for less cost, is a question apart from this; it is one that I think we might address ourselves to with some effect to a certain degree. But I certainly shall not weary the patience of the Senate by going into that now. It is enough for my present purpose, in reply to the very proper question of my friend from Maine, to say that I think he overestimates the point that he refers to, and yet which is entitled to considerable weight in opposition to what I have stated. Now let me go on a little further because I had only intended to state very briefly the various suggestions I have to make. I am not able to see why the United States owes any duty to the war-premium men that it does not owe to the owner of a ship that was not destroyed and who did not insure at all. You and I, Mr. President, are respectively owners of two ships sailing from the port of New York to Hong-and who did not insure at all. You and I, Mr. President, are respectively owners of two ships sailing from the port of New York to Hong-Kong if you please, which is half way around the world. Here is this state of war. The Alabama, the Shenandoah, the Georgia, &c., are afloat, and there is a certain amount of risk. You think it wise and prudent in the management of your business to take a war risk on the voyage of your ship from New York to Hong-Kong, and it costs you $10,000. I think that I will insure myself, and that I will not take any war risk at all. I take the ordinary risk of the seas. We are laden with the same freight; our vessels cost the same money; they are manned by the same number of crew; they set forth. Our freight money to be paid to us when our vessels get to Hong-Kong. They both sail the same day and arrive the same day. Neither of them has been disturbed. You are $10,000 out of pocket to what I am, and I have not run any different risk from what you ran or that the man that insured you ran. You only got somebody else. My learned friend from Ohio you ran. You only got somebody else. My learned friend from Ohio is an underwriter, and you give him your $10,000. He takes it and says to you, "Mr. Chairman, I will run your war risk for you for that sum of money." Now we three have got to Hong-Kong with our ships on exactly the same terms, only that you are minus $10,000 of ships on exactly the same terms, only that you are minus $10,000 of the profits you would have made on that voyage and I am not, and our friend from Ohio is plus on his business that $10,000, and the three things equalize each other. I should be glad to have somebody tell me how it is that the Congress of the United States ought to pay you or ought to pay my friend from Ohio that $10,000 any more than they ought to pay it to me? I took the risk on my ship; he took it on yours; but between us three we all ran exactly the same risk. Does this bill provide, do my war-premium friends propose to provide that this bill provide, do my war-premium friends propose to provide that we shall pay a sum equal to what the war premiums would have been upon the uninsured vessels of the American citizens during this time? Of course not. I am afraid some enthusiastic Senator might say in the heat of debate that it was preposterous; certainly it would be untenable; and yet one case with the other stands upon precisely the same principle and precisely the same equity, if you call it equity, but I say there is neither principle nor equity in either.

But I have spent too much time, Mr. President, with what I had proposed to say, as I had not intended to mix in this matter, but it is so old a question with me that I thought it right to state as briefly as I could these few suggestions that have occurred to me. The subject is not by any means exhausted on the points that might be suggested; is not by any means exhausted on the points that might be suggested; but I think I have said enough to explain to the Senate the substance of the ground on which I think there is nothing due either in legal equity, in political justice, which Congress is bound to administer, or in morals, to the insurance companies, that has not already by the act that has gone into effect been paid to them, and that nothing is due to the war-premium people for the reasons that I have stated and many others that could be suggested.

Mr. CONKLING. Before the Senator sits down, will he indulge me in an inquiry? I understand the Senator to assign reasons why the underwriters are not entitled, and also reasons why those who paid enhanced marine insurance are not entitled to this money. May I ask the Senator who, in his construction and understanding of the case, is entitled to receive it?

entitled to receive it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly, that is exactly what I was about to conclude with. I believe that the party who is entitled to receive it has received it—the Government of the United States. I believe that out of it the Government of the United States has so far paid what, upon of it the Government of the United States has so far paid what, upon precisely the same principles and considerations, we ought to have paid to the people who have received the money already, even if we had not got a dollar, and that is through the sense of political justice, equality, and the redress of special hardships growing out of public calamities. When the sense of political justice is appealed to, we might have made—I do not know that we would—precisely the same provision for the uninsured owners of the vessels destroyed and same provision for the uninsured owners of the vessels destroyed and the insurers who stood in their place so far as they were losers in their business, that we have made already out of what is called this Alabama fund. I think the word "fund" is a misnomer. It is not a fund. It was money claimed on the part of the Government of the United States for injuries that no private person had any title to redress for at all and injuries that, aside from the special instances that we have already provided for, distributed themselves as nearly as anything can be distributed over the whole body of the people of the United States; and it is no answer either in morals or good taste, or in fact. States; and it is no answer either in morals or good taste, or in fact, states; and it is no answer either in morals or good taste, or in fact, to say that we have got more money than we have distributed.

As I said in the beginning, I believe there is no dispute that this money was awarded for the destruction of vessels that were actually destroyed, and it was of no consequence to the government of Great Britain or to the confederates if we had levied it upon them, for it would have been exactly the same thing, if they had succeeded or if they had not—if we had levied it by a confiscation or taken it out of they had not—if we had levied it by a confiscation or taken it out of their public property if they had any—that those vessels had belonged to private persons. It is no answer whatever to say, "Why do you not give this to somebody?" That is no affair of theirs. When we take it in the sense of interior morals as to our own duty to our own citizens, that I say must be governed by the special circumstances of each case, and where there is a hardship we redress it; but the public is a hardship we redress it. lic injury that Great Britain committed upon the people of the United States, and for which we demanded redress on the part of all the people of the United States, that public injury committed upon the property of particular citizens has been atoned for, and not excessively—rather the reverse. Whether those particular citizens have been reimbursed and redressed by the course of events, or whether they are entitled to any redress, depends upon the considerations that I have already stated as to whether theirs is really a case of special and extraordinary calamity and hardship. For those cases we have already provided, and provided fully.

There is one class of cases, sufferers by what are called the exculpated cruisers, although I had great doubt about it before, that I should be inclined to make provision for, not upon the principle that they have any right, because I deny that the other people that we have paid had any right, but on the principle that they fall within probably the class of peculiar hardships that we would make some provision for whether we had got this money or not.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, if there be any Senator who desires to address the Senate I will resume my seat. I do not wish to take the floor if there is any other Senator who wishes to proceed now. If there is not, I will proceed with the remarks I desire to submit. lic injury that Great Britain committed upon the people of the United

If there is not, I will proceed with the remarks I desire to submit.

Mr. EATON. I think the argument of the Senator from Vermont is entirely conclusive on the proposition I have submitted; but I may desire to be heard hereafter on the substitute which I have offered. I do not desire at this time on the question before the Senate to submit any remarks whatever.

Mr. THURMAN. I shall have no objection whatever to the Senator proceeding upon his amendment when he offers it, or at any other time that suits his convenience.

Mr. EATON. I may not desire to be heard at all. The argument has been very full and very thorough.

Mr. WITHERS. I would submit to the Senator having charge of the bill whether it would not suit his convenience to lay it aside informally for the purpose of taking up the Army appropriation bill for consideration.

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir; that would be very disagreeable to me.
Mr. WITHERS. Then I will not make the proposition, hoping that we may arrive at a vote soon.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope so too, and I shall be very glad if we can arrive at a vote to-day, at least on the amendment which is pending.

I propose to ask for a vote on the amendment, and if it be possible, on the whole bill.

Mr. WITHERS. That is right.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I do not remember ever to have risen to address the Senate with more reluctance than I do to-day, and this for several reasons.

and this for several reasons.

In the first place I have argued the question now before the Senate, again and again, in years gone by, and far more elaborately than I am accustomed to speak. It is therefore a subject that has no charm of novelty to me; on the contrary, the performance of that duty which I think rests upon me is the performance of a task.

Then, again, I speak with reluctance; because I am fully aware—no one could be more so—that I cannot present one single argument or one single fact to the Senate in support of this bill that has not in substance been already presented to it by those who have preceded

Med. And, again, Mr. President, I am reluctant to speak for a reason that, however, has existed whenever this bill has been before the Senate or any similar bill, if we except some days when a sensation was impending. Sir, when the first bill on this subject came before the Senate, and when the amount to be distributed was more than $17,000,000, there was not at any one time during the whole of that debate one-half of the Senators present upon whose votes depended whether that money should be given to the lawful owners of it, whether the national honor should be maintained, or whether it should be given to somebody else and the honor of the United States be brought into disgrace. And when the bill came up the following year we saw precisely the same thing. Senator after Senator addressed this body for and against the bill; and never until the vote was taken was there for and against the bill; and never until the vote was taken was there a quorum of the Senate present, although upon the votes of the absent Senators depended the distribution of seventeen millions of money. Now, sir, when there are ten millions of this money to be distributed, half of the seats in this Chamber are vacant, and have been during the whole of this discussion, no matter who was speaking, except, as I said, when a sensation was impending. The expectation of wit, of repartee, of thrust and parry, things that had nothing in the world to do with the merits of this question, will fill these seats and fill the galleries; but when it comes to listening to the arguments which to do with the merits of this question, will fill these seats and fill the galleries; but when it comes to listening to the arguments which ought to govern the mind of every honest man in the distribution of this fund, half the seats in the Senate are vacant; and they would be if you were to discuss it for a week more. At the end Senators will come in one after another; and one will inquire, "How did Tom vote?" and another, "How did Bob vote?" And according as Dick or Tom or Bob voted, they will vote, and thus dispose of $10,000,000 which they are bound as judges to dispose of according to law and according to justice and according to common honesty.

It is rather discouraging to speak under such circumstances; but I have nothing to do but to discharge my duty, and if some people can by intuition discover exactly that which others take long study can by intuition discover exactly that which others take long study to ascertain, so be it. I congratulate them on that faculty. I do not possess it. What little I know has been acquired by hard study. I do not pretend to have any familiar genius to tell me exactly what is the right, to inspire me with thought. No benevolent sage presided over my birth to tell me, without labor or without study, exactly what I ought to do and to guide me in my action and in my course.

Now, Mr. President, I say it is my duty to speak on this subject. First as the organ of the committee that reported the bill, it is a duty due to that committee. Again it is, I may be permitted to say, notwithstanding the able arguments which have been made in support of the bill, a duty that I owe to the Senate itself. Why, Mr. President, how many Senators of this body heard the arguments on the bill of 1874, the last time this subject was discussed in this body, not quite six years ago? It is a melancholy fact—perhaps it is not "melancholy" either in some sense, but it is a remarkable fact that although but six years have elapsed since that debate, there are only sixteen Senators now occupying seats in this body who were members of the Senate at that time. Sixty new members occupy seats on this floor who heard not one word of that discussion and who therefore have not made up not one word or that discussion and who therefore have not made up their minds after hearing the argument of the case, but new men come to hear for the first time the discussion of this bill. Hence manifestly it is the duty of those who support the bill as well as of those who oppose it to ask of Senators a patient and careful hearing of what they have to say for or against it.

Mr. President, let me first ask what were the claims in respect of which the General was reade. About this question there are which the Geneva award was made. About this question there cannot be, it seems to me, any difference of opinion. I will show presently that the supposed differences of opinion are nothing but a difference in nomenclature; it is calling the same thing by one name or by another name. In the first place, was that award made in respect to what are called the indirect damages? Was it made on account of loss to the United States by the prolongation of the war? The record of the tribunal says "no." Was it in respect of the pursuit of the confederate cruisers? The record of the tribunal answers "no." the confederate cruisers? The record of the tribunal answers "ho," and these questions are answered in express terms, remember. Was it in respect to the transfer of American commerce to the British marine? Again the record in express terms says "no." Was it in respect of war premiums? Again the record in express terms says "no." And when these negative answers have been given to these questions, you have nothing but the direct losses occasioned by the acts of the confederate cruisers; and when you come to them and ask was the award in respect of the injuries committed by certain confederate cruisers, the record again says "no." In respect of them Great Britain was exculpated; hence we call them for convenience the excul-

When you have thus eliminated all these claims which we at first made, we find ourselves narrowed down to the direct losses occasioned by three vessels and their tenders, the Alabama, the Florida, and the Shenandoah after she left Melbourne. After this elimination had taken place, and when the reconstructed tables of damages were made by the counsel and agent of the United States at the instance of the tribunal itself, not one single element of computation of damages remained before the tribunal but the direct losses occasioned by these three confederate cruisers and their tenders—not one single thing else under heaven. For the one hundred and thirty-five ships destroyed by them, and belonging to private individuals, for the car-goes on those ships captured or destroyed by them, for the private property of the officers and sailors of those ships, for some an allowance of wages for the common sailors—for all those there was a computation and there was an award; and in addition to that the United States herself had to come in on the footing of a private citizen, and claim $200,000 for the loss of a revenue cutter or two. There is the basis of the award. No man can deny it.

basis of the award. No man can deny it.

I know that you may call these private claims by some other name. That does not alter the fact. The ship Brilliant was lost, for instance. Does it alter the fact? Was it an element of subordinate attitude that you called the claim for the ship Brilliant a national claim instead of a private claim? Does it alter the morality of this case? Does it alter the duty that we ought to perform that you thus give a nickname or a new baptism to a thing that was already baptized and had a legal name? Not the least in the world. It was then simply on the foundation of these private claims and of the then simply on the foundation of these private claims and of the claim the United States themselves presented as if it had been a private claim for the loss of one or two revenue cutters captured by these confederate cruisers that that award of $15,500,000 was made.

Mr. President, the protocol of the tribunal makes this just as manifest as ever the record of any court made its judgment and proceedings; and not only that, but the amount of damages proves the fact equally well. In our case first laid before the Geneva tribunal we claimed $26,000,000 damages, but that included all the losses by the exculpated cruisers; that included some other items; that included some cases where there were double claims; it included divers other matters that were excluded by the tribunal; so that when we came to state, at the request of the tribunal itself, our revised bill of particulars, so to speak, our claims were reduced to $14,000,000 in round numbers on our own statement.

The committee of the English Board of Trade employed by the British government to sift and revise these claims of ours, insisted that they did not in fairness and fair valuation amount to more than $7,500,000, to which they afterward made an addition, I forget of how much, but I think about $800,000. It has been said that the Geneva tribunal split the difference. What if they did? Does that disprove that these claims were elements upon which the award was made, the that these claims were elements upon which the award was made, the elements of the computation of damage? Undoubtedly they did something like splitting the difference. How was that? Because they esteemed the American valuation too high and the British valuation of the property too low. It was not by eliminating the elements that went into the computation of damages; it was not by striking out this ship or that ship, or this cargo or that cargo; but as our estimate of the value of the ships was proved by ex parte testimony, ex parte affidavits, and as the estimate made by the committee of the British Board of Trade was too low according to the opinion of the tribunalas that would reduce the valuation made by our people to too low a sum, the tribunal, if you please to say so, I do not care for the term, split the difference. But now let us see how wisely they acted and how carefully they scrutinized. Split the difference and then compute interest upon it as they computed interest upon it, as the British arbitrator said at 6 per cent. and as our own arbitrator said at 6 per cent., and it makes fifteen million four hundred and odd thousand dollars, within less than $100,000 of the amount of the award.

My friend from Indiana [Mr. McDonald] talked about their giv ing punitive damages. Not a cent, sir, of punitive damages. We never claimed punitive damages. We should have made a poor showing claiming punitive damages for a mere omission, a mere non-feasance. As my friend from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] said, that doctrine has no application in such a case. There were no punitive damages has no application in such a case. All you have to do is to take the figures, compute the interest upon them, and you have within a fraction of, less than $100,000, the amount of the award. Oh, that was no marking on a barn-door; that was no guessing. That man of business and long-headed man, Mr. Stæmpfli, who went back to his home and took these estimates with him and spent days upon days, and I do not know but more than two weeks, in revising them and going over them, did not mark figures on a barn-door. The only wonder after all is that they came as near the actual damages as they did. Of course they intended to give damages sufficient to cover these claims. Our counsel urged them to do it. When they were urging them to make the award in gross instead of providing for a board of assessors, they said: "You ought to make it in gross, and you ought to be sure that it will be sufficient to cover all the losses for which you award damages."

Why? "Because," said our counsel to them, "the United States will be bound to these losers to pay the amount of their losses, and if you do not make it sufficient to pay them, then the United States will have to make up the deficiency, and instead of receiving a full indemnity the United States will be out of pocket." There it is to be found, and if any one wishes to hear it I will turn to the book. It is right before me. That was the statement, that was the argument that our counsel made. Mark it, Mr. President; they said here are these claims which the United States has presented to you in reare these claims which the United States has presented to you in respect to which you are asked to make an award; we ask you to make it in gross; but now take care, if you make it too small, the United States will have to make up the difference. Whether that was good law or not I am not here to say; but that is what our counsel said in their arguments before the tribunal in favor of an award in gross. And yet with that staring us in the face, we are told that individual claims were not considered at all, and that nobody understood that the United States would be under any moral obligation to give this money to the sufferers whose claims were allowed by the Geneva tribunal ?

If there is any Senator who is in any doubt about this subject, all he has to do is to refer to the elaborate speeches that have been made he has to do is to refer to the elaborate speeches that have been made by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS,] the Senator from Ar-kansas, [Mr. GARLAND,] the Senator from New York on my left, [Mr. KERNAN,] the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER,] and the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] They laid the whole matter before the Senate so that no man can have any excuse for not under-

But, Mr. President, that is not all. The process of elimination of which I have spoken, which left nothing in the world but private claims, part of which was the claims of these insurance companies, and which were presented as belonging to the insurance companies presented by us as belonging to the insurance companies and the British counsel Sir Roundell Palmer, the attorney-general of England, admitting that the insurance companies were subrogated to the rights of the insured, and Sir Alexander Cockburn, the British arbitator dis-tinctly stated the same thing—this process of elimination leaves these claims the sole element of the computation of damages.

But it has been said here with great vehemence sometimes that there is not an individual named in the decision of the Geneva tribunal. I have seen, and so have you, Mr. President, many and many a time in our courts of justice where a court of equity marshaling assets and decreeing their payment or providing for the distribution of an insolvent's estate, has again and again laid down in general terms that such and such classes were to be paid and such and such classes were to be rejected; and who ever heard that there was any difficulty in identifying the persons? Here the Geneva tribunal has said such and such classes shall be rejected, nothing shall be allowed on their claims, and such a class shall be paid; in respect of this class there shall be an award of damages, and there was a bill of particulars be-fore them down to the very sailor who was before the mast, showing in every instance how the claim was made, how much of it was made by an insurance company, how much was made by the owner of the vessel if she were not fully insured and had not been paid for as for a total loss, so much for the man who had freight on board of her, so much for the officers and for their property, ay, even to the clothing of the sailors, and a reasonable allowance to them for their expenses in getting home, their wages during the time it would take them to get home—a bill of particulars in each case accompanied by the proof going into the details of every individual. The name of perhaps every sailor, the humblest sailor who was on board of one of these destroyed vessels, is in the proofs which we submitted to the Geneva tribunal.

Mr. President, it is idle therefore to talk about there being no individuals mentioned. "That is certain which can be rendered certain," and those proofs which were laid before that tribunal, those proofs upon which we claimed damages, those proofs upon which the damages were awarded, gave the name of every corporation or human being who suffered by these acts down to the lowest sailor upon any of the vessels destroyed.

But Congress itself recognized that these were the persons to be paid by the act of 1874. I know my friend from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who has argued this morning with that ability which marks every argument he ever makes, attempted to show that that bill did not proceed upon any such ground, but proceeded upon a mere be-nevolence—for that is what it comes to—or charity of the Govern-ment. His argument when analyzed is that these were all national claims and the money when recovered was national money, charged with no trust, imposing no moral duty—I think I use his very words—upon the Government in relation to its distribution, and that the Government in distributing that money was actuated simply and alone by a feeling of compassion for those who had suffered most. Why, Mr. President, is that so? Was that the thin and shadowy ground on which the act of 1874 was passed? No, sir; not at all. What claims did it provide for? To what claims did it give preference over all other claims that were allowed in that bill? Did it provide for war-premium men? No; it rejected them. Did it provide for No; it rejected them. the sufferers by the exculpated cruisers? whom did it provide ? For not one single human being except those in respect to whose claims the Geneva tribunal awarded the money. No man whose claim was rejected by that tribunal could under the act of 1874 present his claim before the Alabama commissioners' court

Mr. JONES, of Florida. How as to the insurance companies?

Mr. THURMAN. They could come in; and were not they direct losers? Were not they provided for by the award of the tribunal? Was it not upon their claims that the award was in part founded? To be sure they were allowed to come in. The only difficulty was in regard to them that the act made an unjust discrimination against them in respect to the foundation of the amount that should be recovered. They were allowed to come in, but they were allowed to come in on conditions that made a marked distinction between them and all other people who were allowed to come in. I will speak about all other people who were allowed to come in. I will speak about that distinction presently.

The truth remains that that bill did not provide for the payment of one single being or one single claim that had been rejected by the Geneva tribunal. It followed the award; it recognized the award. It recognized it as fixing the principles upon which this money ought to be distributed by the Congress of the United States. It recognized at least the moral obligation which was spoken of in the case cited by the Senator from Vermont, Rustomjee's case, the moral obligation by the Senator from Vermont, Rustomjee's case, the moral obligation resting upon the Government to give the money to the persons whose claims produced the money and without whose claims there would have been no award at all. That is what the act of 1874 did.

Mr. President, this being the case, what answer is made to these claims? We have had two principal answers, the one by the Senator from Vermont, the other by the Senator from Massachusetts, the junior Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hoar,] junior in service, I do not pretend to say that he is junior in years. I propose now briefly to allude to these answers.

The first is a theory of the Senator from Vermont upon which he dwelt to-day, but which he elaborated much more fully in his celebrated—I may call it celebrated—and certainly very able speech in 1874. That theory is, first, that belligerence existed between the United States and the Confederate States, a fact which no one denies; secondly, and a corollary from this, that the loser of a ship, being a citizen of the United States, by the act of a confederate cruiser could get no right of action whatever, no claim whatever, against the Confederate States—another proposition that no one denies. But so far he has not touched Great Britain. We did not get this money from the Confederate States. So far his argument does not touch Great Britain. He must bring Great Britain into this net and apply the same law to her that he does to the Confederate States or his proposition lacks a leg to stand upon; and hence in his speech in 1874 he very strenuously asserted, and he has said the same thing to-day but in somewhat milder terms, that Great Britain was an accessory to the confederacy; that she was aiding the confederacy as an accessory, and therefore was herself a belligerent; that there was belligerency not only between our Government and the confederate government but between us and Great Britain. And then as belligerent captures give no cause for reclamation except to the Government in its character as a government, the nation in its character as a nation give no private rights for reclamation, he says there could be no reclamation against Great Britain by any individual; these were captures made in effect by Great Britain as a belligerent, as an accessory of the con-

That has been answered again and again, and surely it does not require much effort to answer it. Was there a state of belligerency between Great Britain and the United States from 1861 to 1865 or during any part of that time? If there was, then every contract made between a British subject and an American citizen during that whole time was absolutely null and void; then every venture of trade between the citizens and subjects of the two powers was a penal offense, subjecting the parties to criminal punishment. Did any such thing occur to any one? Was trade interrupted between the two powers during that time?

Again: here in our capital during all that time was the representa-tive of Her Britannic Majesty. At the court of St. James was the representative of the United States. So far from their being belliger-representative of the United States. So far from their being beingerency, all the pursuits of peace between the two countries were followed just as if no war existed on the face of the globe.

But, Mr. President, there is another answer that I will give presently that ought to silence forever this argument if anything more were needed, but I will give that in connection with the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts to which I have not yet alluded. The Senator from Massachusetts does not rest upon the same ground with the Senator from Vermont. The Senator from Massachusetts does not claim that Great Britain was a belligerent or an accessory or aider. Upon no such ground does he rest his opposition to the bill. He says truly, just as the Senator from Vermont says, that no claim against the confederate government in favor of a citizen of the United States could arise out of these captures because the confederate government was a belligerent and we recognized it as such. But the Senator from Massachusetts does not venture to affirm, he is very Senator from Massachusetts does not venture to affirm, he is very careful not to affirm, that Great Britain was a belligerent or an aider, abettor, or accessory; but he puts his objection to the bill upon the ground that the omission of duty of which Great Britain was guilty was the omission of a public duty, and he affirms boldly that in no case whatsoever can the omission to perform a public duty give a cause of action to a private citizen either against his own government or against the government of a foreign country.

Mr. President, I deny that that is the law. I deny that that is either international or municipal law. In the Senator's own State the people of a town are liable, if they neglect to perform the public duty of repairing the roads, to any citizen who is injured by their failure to perform that public duty. That is a specimen of municipal law. Again and again has a neutral nation which has permitted its ports to be used by a belligerent to destroy the property of another belligerent, within its jurisdiction, been held accountable for that loss, been held accountable to those whose property was thus destroyed, although it was simply the omission to perform the duty of stroyed, although it was simply the omission to perform the duty of a neutral in preserving the neutrality of its own territory.

But, sir, what is the use of talking about what is international or municipal law on this subject? The treaty is the all-sufficient answer to both the argument of the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Massachusetts. The treaty answers those questions. We claimed from Massachusetts. The treaty answers those questions. We claimed damages of Great Britain upon the ground that she was a neutral, and for her omission to perform the duties that are incumbent upon such a nation. Upon that ground, and upon no other ground under heaven, did we make that claim, and it is embodied in unmistakable language in the treaty itself.

Nay more, sir, in order to obtain an award of damages, in order to relieve the case from any controversy as to what was the law of nations, there were inserted in the treaty the well-known three rules, every one of which is declaratory of the duty of a neutral power, and which were made for the express purpose of making the treaty retrospective, so as to cover the whole period when these losses were sustained by our citizens.

But that is not all. We presented the most elaborate arguments before the Geneva tribunal, beginning with what is called the American case, a voluminous document of five hundred or six hundred pages, followed afterward by the arguments of learned and able counsel. Upon what ground did they place our right to an award? Upon the ground that Great Britain was an accessory; was a belligerent? Not one of them ever intimated such a thing; not one of them ever hinted such a thing, but the whole argument from first to last, from the first page of the American case to the last words of the American counsel, was devoted to proving that Great Britain as a neutral power had been guilty of omission of duty, and therefore under the three rules was liable to us. Upon no other ground whatever did we claim damages, and when the tribunal came to decide, and every one of the arbitrators delivered an opinion, when they delivered them seriatim, the four abitrators who concurred in awarding us damages, every the four abitrators who concurred in awarding us damages, every one of them, put the award upon the ground that Great Britain was a neutral power and that she had been guilty of a want of due diligence in preventing the fitting out of these cruisers and by the omission of that duty had rendered herself liable.

It does not rest in their opinions alone. In the solemnly recorded judgment of the tribunal, which fixed her liability, the same thing is reported, and she is held in that judgment itself to be liable because of this omission to use due diligence to prevent the escape of the cruisers from her ports. There it is. The treaty, the arguments on both sides before the Geneva tribunal, the statement of the case on both sides, the opinions of the arbitrators, and the solemnly recorded judgment of the court, all say that these damages are claimed and these damages are awarded because Great Britain was not a belligerent but a neutral power, and because not that she aided the confederates, but she omitted to use due diligence, such as a neutral power is bound to use, to prevent the escape of these cruisers of the confederates.

Now, what becomes of all this talk about a government not being liable for an omission to perform a public duty? If that were municipal law, which I deny, it would have no application; if it were international law, it would have no application, for this treaty made a law unto itself for this case, and by the law thus made the case was tried and the case was decided and judgment rendered. No, Mr. President, it will not do to go rambling around in vague declarations of what might be the case under a wholly different state of circumstances. You are absolutely going away from the very fountain head, this treaty, when you have to look to something else to find what were the principles upon which the award was made.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. Blaine] when he last addressed the Senate suggested two other theories. One was, if I took down his point aright, that there is no subrogation in the case of claims against the Government, citing a decision of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury. I stated then that I would not say the Second Comptroller was not a good lawyer, because there were plenty of good lawyers who were not in high positions as well as there are those occupying high positions, and I said, or if I did not say it then I say it now, that I had never heard his decisions quoted before outside of the Department. I did not know then who was the Second Comptroller of the Treasury who rendered this marvelous decision. Looking at the the Treasury who rendered this marvelous decision. Looking at the decision and getting its date, I found out who he was; and I will not retract what I said the other day, because de mortuis nil nisi bonum is a charity; otherwise I might be tempted to say that if ever he had any stature as a lawyer nobody that ever I heard of knew the fact. But there was a very marvelous thing about citing that decision of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury that was expressly overruled by the Attorney-General of the United States, and it was not only expressly overruled but it is in direct conflict, if the application could be made of it which the Senator undertook to make, with no could be made of it which the Senator undertook to make, with no less than four solemn decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. I undertake to say that a more erroneous decision never was pronounced by any lawyer, high or low, than was that decision of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, and it absolutely shocks one's sense of justice so much that one is scarce able to speak of it with toleration unless it is put upon the ground that I suggested the other day.

What was that case of the steamer Robert Campbell? She was a steamer that during the war was impressed by the Government and therefore I beg leave to remind my friend from Vermont that his sug-gestion to the Senator from Maine the other day that the insurance companies could have gone into the Court of Claims to recover for her there has no application.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to suggest to my friend from Ohio, if he allows me to make the suggestion, because I would not interrupt him without his consent-

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly; go on.
Mr. EDMUNDS. The case of the Robert Campbell did go into the Court of Claims and will be found in 3 Otto's Reports or 93 U.S. Reports, where the Supreme Court held that it was not a case of imssment, but under the circumstances an ordinary charter-party and therefore that the claimant had no ground of claim against the United States for the destruction of the vessel which was an accidental destruction by a fire and not a belligerent destruction. The court, however, did say, I ought to state to the Senator, to the effect that if the owner had a right against the United States in that case, the insurance company would have been substituted to his rights to the extent of the insurance.

Mr. BLAINE. One moment just there, so that the case may be fully understood, if the Senator will permit me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. THILDMAN. Corrections.

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.
Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Vermont does not state what is an essential feature of the case, that the actual settlement of the Treasury was that the owners of the Robert Campbell got their insurance and the Government paid them the difference. The Comptroller ruled as of course was consequent upon that, that had there been no insurance the Government would have paid the whole value

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator from Ohio will pardon me, that was the ruling of the Comptroller. Undoubtedly he ruled that way and made an allowance which according to the decision of the Supreme Court afterward he ought not to have made at all, because the owner himself had no claim.

Mr. BLAINE. The owner had no claim?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, the Supreme Court held that the owner had no claim.

Mr. THURMAN. I am very much obliged to my friend from Vermont; the decision of the Supreme Court had escaped my attention. I said that the decision upon the ground upon which it was placed by the Second Comptroller of the Treasury (and who now I have learned for the first time instead of being a lawyer was a doctor, not a doctor of law, but an M.D.) would make it the most outrageous decision that I almost ever saw. He held that if there had been no insurance the ship was lost under such circumstances that the Government would be liable to the owner, and hence the ship being valued at $57,000 and the insurance being $25,000, he paid the owner $32,000 and would not pay the owner any more; and then when the insurance companies came he said, "You cannot be subrogated to the owner's right against the Government, and therefore we will not pay you anything at all, and the Government will take the $25,000," which ought to be paid to somebody certainly. I will not pay any attention further to that point. The Senator from Vermont has stated that case clearly enough.

The next point made by the Senator from Maine relates to war remiums. I may as well notice it here, because I shall dispose of it very briefly. The next point he makes is that this Government sur-rendered claims for the war premiums and for the losses by the ex-culpated cruisers for a great public consideration. What was that great public consideration for which the Government surrendered these claims? It was that henceforth and forever it should be held that these three rules applied to the case of a neutral power, and that as we expected to be a neutral nation many more years than we expected to be at war, and had such an immense coast, it was of great interest that we should get these three rules established as a part of the international law of the world, and that for the purpose of getting them established we agreed to surrender the claims of war-premium men and of the sufferers by the exculpated cruisers.

Mr. President, the Senator is entirely mistaken. We presented the claims of the war-premium men; we presented the claims of the war-premium men; we presented the claims of the sufferers by the exculpated cruisers; and they would have been considered by the Geneva tribunal and passed upon by it, but that Great Britain said sternly, "If you insist upon them there is an end of this tribunal; we will have nothing to do with it." That is what the British government said. They we set shout the ward of the said. tribunal; we will have nothing to do with it." That is what the British government said. Then we set about the work of excusing ourselves for backing out of these claims. Then Mr. Fish wrote that remarkable letter to General Schenck, in which he says, (I am speaking now from memory alone and may not quote his words exactly, but it is too fatiguing to read it although I have it right here before me,) "neither the United States nor any considerable number of our people eyer expected an award of damages upon these claims." In his letter of April 18, 1872, my recollection is, he said that neither the United States nor any considerable body of our people eyer expected an award in damages upon those claims; what we want is a decision of the tribunal that a neutral government is not liable for such claims; if we can get that decision of the tribunal, that is all we ask, and you need not further press those claims, and then they will be considered as out of the case. It is a curious little piece of Instory—if I had time I would go into it for the amusement of those who have not looked at it—to see how much diplomacy there was by the counsel, to see exactly how they could get that thing done. It was all fixed up, and the arbitrators came in, and without having heard the arguments upon the question at all, and said they had looked at it, and they individually and collectively, irrespective of the question what the true interpretation of the treaty was, were of the opinion that neither upon the three rules nor according to the principles of international law was Great Britain liable for these things. Then with great gravity Mr. Bancroft Davis asked for an adjournment of two days to consult his Government. He sent a cable dispatch to Washington and got an answer. Of course he knew what the answer would be just as well before he sent the dispatch. He got his answer, and said he was instructed to say that the President regarded it as a definitive determination against those claims, and that they would not be further pressed. Then Lord Tenterden asked that he might have a day to consult his government, and he sent a telegraphic dispatch and got an answer, and when the tribunal met again he came in and said that the statement made by the agent of the United States was entirely satisfactory to his government, and that he would request that it might be entered in the docket of that day's proceedings that these claims were excluded, and it was so entered, and thus we got what we wanted to cover the retreat that we made; we got what purports to be the decision of the tribunal that these things were not allowed. Was that a matter of treaty between Great Britain and us in respect to which and for the considerations contained in which we abandoued the war-premium claims and the claims of sufferers by the exculpated cruisers? Not a bit of it. There was no such treaty. There was an attempt to get up such a treaty, as every Senator who was here at the time and who attended the secret sessions of the Senate knows, but that came to naught, and this legal jugglery was resorted to in order to get out of the difficulty, and to save the tribunal; that is all.

Now, I want to call the attention of the Senate and of the Senator from Maine himself to what kind of a predicament he puts himself in by his argument. He says it was of such great importance to us to establish that a neutral is not responsible for these claims, among which were the claims for war premiums, that we surrendered all these claims in order to get the principle established as a part of international law, that a neutral nation is not responsible for war premiums under the circumstances of this case or in a like case; and yet that great principle which he says we sought thus to establish is the very principle that he wishes to utterly disregard in the distribution of this money. What kind of a showing should we make in the face of this money. What kind of a showing should we make in the face of the world if these three rules were universal international law, and we should recover for that which international law gives us the right we should recover to that which international law give us the recover, direct losses by the destruction of our property, and when we have got the money and come to distribute it should say to the nations of the world, "We laugh at your international law, and we give this money to war-premium men for whose losses a neutral nation was in no sense responsible?" Yet that is precisely the situation of

But, Mr. President, I must hurry on, for I do not want to speak too long, and I find it fatiguing to me to speak at all. This case is in a nutshell. Much has been said about it, and I have come to the conclusion, after a long practice at the bar and some experience in public life, that the plainer a question is the more speaking it gives rise to. I am pretty well satisfied of that. When I heard my learned friends deny absolutely that there was any such thing as law on the subject, when I heard them deny that subrogation applied at all in a case where there was a total loss or a total destruction of property, when I heard such propositions as these advanced, and when I heard my learned friend from Indiana say that this award was in part punitive damages, then I came to the conclusion that there is nothing that an ardent man may not be drawn in to assert and equally ready to deny. I do not know, if I live much longer, but that I shall hear somebody deny that there is a sun in the heavens. There is a very distinguished man who is going about denying his Creator, and I do not know but that very soon the sun itself will be said to be a mere hallucination of the imagination.

I say again that this whole case is in a nutshell. What is it? It is simply this: The Government of the United States upon the foundation of certain claims of its citizens and a two-hundred-thousand-dollar claim of its own, for the loss of a revenue-cutter or two, has by the judgment of the Geneva tribunal received from Great Britain $15,500,000, and the plainest principles of common honesty require it to distribute the money upon the claims which thus produced it until they be satisfied. It is wholly immaterial by what name we designate these claims, whether we call them national or individual claims; and it is equally immaterial whether Great Britain was a belligerent or not in fact, or whether a nation is or is not liable for an omission to perform a mere public duty, or whether the doctrine of subrogation applies to the case. All these are in point of fact immaterial.

The all-sufficient answer to all these points is that we presented these claims to the Geneva tribunal as valid claims; that we asked for damages commensurate with their amount and for nothing more; that Great Britain acknowledged them to be the proper elements in a computation of damages if she were liable; and that the tribunal founded its award upon them and upon nothing else. Having thus recovered and received the money upon this foundation, it does not lie in our mouth to repudiate it. That is what any unbiased, unprejudiced man, any man who represented no constituency having claims adverse to a clear and correct decision of this case, would inevitably say if you should state the case fairly to him. He could not say otherwise. How could he say otherwise? What brought that money into your Treasury? Was it not the claims of these insurance companies and the claims of others who suffered direct loss from the inculpated cruisers? There was nothing else under heaven that brought the money, and having produced the money—

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to trespass on him a moment in order to ask a question?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. SAULSBURY. I understood the Senator to say, in the course of his argument, that as these claims entered into the basis of the calculation of the award to be paid by Great Britain to the United States we are precluded, when we come to distribute this money, from examining the equitable character of the claims that were presented. I want to know if I understood the Senator correctly to say that we are precluded by that award, upon the supposition that it was made upon the basis, as he alleges, of these direct claims, from examining the question for ourselves as to the equitable character of

Mr. THURMAN. I do say that it was these claims that brought the money into the Treasury, and nothing else brought it in. I do say that after having presented these claims to the tribunal, after having argued in their favor, after having convinced the tribunal of their justice, after having procured an award upon them, and after their justice, after having procured an award upon them, and after having received the money upon that award, it does not lie in our mouth to say that they were not equitable claims, or that they were sham or were false. What would be thought in my State if a suit were brought on a marshal's bond in the name of the State, as it would have to be under the old law, and as in most of the States it would have to be now, because the bond is given to the State, to recover for money of a private suitor embezzled by the marshal, and when the State had recovered the money upon the bond and it was in her treasury she should turn around and say to the beneficiary of the bond "You have no equitable case at all?" What would be said of a lawyer who should collect money for a client, and when he had it in his pocket, and his client came to get it, should say, "My dear fellow, it is true that I convinced the jury that you had a good case; it is true that I got the judgment of the court upon their verdict; but between me and you, you are a very great rascal; there is no foundation at all for your case, and, therefore, I will keep the money, or I will give it to somebody else; I shall not give it to you?" What would we say in cases of that kind? Sir, they are not one particle more plain than this case.

I say, then, the fact that we got this money upon these claims, and upon nothing else, that these claims produced the money, require us to employ that money in satisfying the claims that produced it until they shall be satisfied. Then, if there is a surplus, that we can dispose of according to our best discretion.

But, Mr. President, there is another reason why this provision in the act of 1874 should be repealed, if that act is to be revived, and that it is applied by the same terms of the same contents.

that is it applies alone to insurance companies and it applies to nobody else. It makes one rule as to them and a wholly different rule as to Let us take the case of a ship that was not insured and was captured by one of the inculpated cruisers. What do you give in the way of damages under the act of 1874? The whole value of the ship, of her cargo, of the personal property of the owner, of the clothing of the sailors if it was lost, and four months' wages, or someclothing of the sailors if it was lost, and four months' wages, or something like that, to the sailors to take them home. That is what you give. You pay the entire loss. You do not go into a calculation to find whether that man, by sailing his ship, in the business of that ship during the war, made or lost. The other day when I put a supposititious case that the ship may have made more than she was worth before she was lost the Senator from Maine said that it was an impossible case. I do not think it was; but suppose she did not make more than she was worth, suppose she made only half that she was more than she was worth, suppose she made only half that she was worth, or 30 per cent. of what she was worth by voyages during the war, do you deduct that 30 per cent.?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. As the Senator addressed that question to me when I had the floor, I should like to ask him why it was that in the act of 1874, the statute which he and other members of the Judiciary Committee reported, no provision was made to take into account the earnings of those vessels that were paid for? A large sum of money has already been paid out, over $9,000,000, from this fund for direct losses, losses which are not questioned by the honorable Senator or anybody who takes the same view of this subject, losses that were occasioned by inculpated cruisers, and in no case was it ever pretended either here or before the commission that one of them should be called to account for any of the earnings that they of them should be called to account for any of the earnings that they

Mr. THURMAN. That is precisely what I said. That is precisely wherein the act of 1874 makes a distinction between them and the insurance companies. In respect to the uninsured vessels which were lost the act of 1874 took the right ground, that we had nothing to do with the business of an owner, whether he made money by his commerce or did not make money by it. We had no hing to do with that. It was sufficient that his property was lost, and his loss is precisely the same whether he had made money in his business or whether he had lost money in his business. What was his ship worth when she was destroyed? Does that depend on whether he had made money or lost money? Not in the least degree in the world. It is the value of the ship or of her cargo or of both at that time which the man has a right to claim and for which he was allowed by the act of 1874. We could not go into his business to find whether it had been profitable or not. But when it comes to the insurance companies a wholly different rule is applied. Take the case of a merchant who freighted the ship. We allowed him to recover the value of his merchandise which was captured or destroyed. We did not ask him to present a balance-sheet to show whether upon all his ventures during the civil war he had made or had lost money. No, sir, we went upon the ground that we had nothing to do with his business, whether it was profitable or not. It was sufficient that these goods and chattels were his, that they were worth so much money on the day they were de-stroyed. That was his loss, and just as much his loss if he had made millions by his commerce as if he had lost millions. That is the rule in that case; but when it comes to the insurance companies then a wholly different rule is applied. Then we say to them, "Unless you have lost money in your business you shall recover nothing, and if you have lost money it is only in respect to the amount of your loss that you shall be paid."

But, Mr. President, the act does not stop there in its injustice and in its wrong. It said the insurance companies must exhibit a balance-sheet and prove their loss. That they lost what? That they lost more sheet and prove their loss. That they lost what? That they lost more money by insuring a specific vessel which was lost and for which they paid than they had made. Not a bit of it. The ship Brilliant was lost; she was insured. If the company insuring her had come into the court of Alabama claims, could they have presented a balance-sheet and said, "We have insured the ship Brilliant for so many dollars, and received so much war premium upon her, and now we have paid so much for her loss, and we have come for the balance ?" Not paid so fruch for her loss, and we have come for the balance! Act a bit of it. They would have been immediately asked, "Did you not insure some other ship?" The company would have to say, "Yes." "Did you not insure a ship that was not taken by an inculpated cruiser at all, but was taken by one of the exculpated cruisers?" "Yes." "Did you not insure ten bits that was destroyed by available or givers and for whose less no one of the exchipated cruisers?" Yes." Did you not insure ten ships that were destroyed by exculpated cruisers, and for whose loss no money was awarded at all?" "Yes." "Put the whole of them down in the balance-sheet, and come to us for the balance of loss, and we will see if you sustained any loss." That is the way the act of 1874 was. It was not even limited to losses occasioned by the act of 1874 was. It was not even limited to losses occasioned by the inculpated cruisers. It required the whole business of the insurance company, the premiums it had received on ships that were never destroyed at all, the premiums it had received on ships that were destroyed by the exculpated cruisers to be put in the same boat, and required a balance-sheet of all.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the honorable Senator permit a question?
Mr. THURMAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. BLAINE. Rather I want to get an understanding. I understand the Senator admits, then, that the insurance companies got the benefit of the war premiums they paid and also of all the losses they met at the hands of the exculpated cruisers? Is not that the fact? Mr. THURMAN. The insurance companies got no benefit of any ar premium at all.

Mr. BLAINE. What they paid to reinsure?

Mr. THURMAN. Oh, what they paid to reinsure. Will the Senator never be contented with an answer? I am quite sure he was answered enough upon that both by the Senator from New York and by the Senator from Wisconsin. I am not able-

To gild refined gold, to paint the lily.

Mr. BLAINE. I did not hear the Senator from Wisconsin even refer to the subject.

Mr. THURMAN. I am sure he did. If he did not I want to say once more that if there was an insurance company that came in under that act because it had sustained losses in its business, it was perfectly right for it to charge in the balance-sheet what it had paid for reinsurance; and on the other hand, it would have to credit itself with what it received from the reinsured. The one would offset the other, and there would be nothing gained one way or the other.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator will permit me; then I understand him to say that it was perfectly right to give the insurance companies the benefit of the war premiums they paid, and it was further perthe benefit of the war premiums they paid, and it was further perfectly right to give the insurance companies the benefit of the losses they paid for captures at the hands of the exculpated cruisers in making up their general accounts for what they were entitled to under an award of which he says the whole scope and limit was confined to the inculpated cruisers. No individual can have the benefit of a war premium, but the insurance companies have it; no individual has been paid for loss at the hands of the exculpated cruisers, but the insurance companies have received consideration for every loss they not at their hands. met at their hands.

Mr. THURMAN. I have tried several times and I believe I shall give up in despair, of having the idea enter into the head of my friend.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator does not dispute it, does he?

Mr. THURMAN. The insurance companies, what few of them made any claims, and there were very few I believe before the tribunal created by the act of 1874, were required to exhibit a balance-sheet, showing what they received for war premiums, and what were their losses. If they reinsured any part at all they would necessarily have to state in the balance-sheet what they received from the reinsurer, and certainly they would have a right to show what they paid out. If that will help the war-premium men any, which for the life of me I cannot see, although I do claim to be some little of a book-keeper, let it go for what it is worth. It is altogether too small a matter upon let it go for what it is worth. It is altogether too small a matter upon which to distribute ten millions of money.

I have shown what an unjust discrimination the act of 1874 makes,

I have shown what an unjust discrimination the act of 1874 makes, and how it would make an equally unjust discrimination if these war premiums were to be allowed. Here is a merchant who carried on commerce; he freighted twenty ships, perhaps, and on his whole business he made an immense fortune. He lost the last cargo of goods. He comes in for the whole claim, according to these gentlemen. They do not propose to apply to him the principle they apply to the insurance companies and make him exhibit a balance-sheet of his business on which he paid war premiums, and if on the whole of that business he made money, then exclude him from the court altogether. They do not propose any such thing as that. They propose to pay him all his war premiums without respect to whether he made money or lost money by the commerce he carried on; directly the contrary principle to that which they apply to the insurance companies.

But all the insurance companies, said the Senator from Maine the other day, if I understood him, were a mere set of gamblers betting with the owner whether a ship would be lost or not. That is, the insurance companies undertook to bet three to one that a ship would not be lost and they were nothing but a set of gamblers, and therefore these gamblers, these men who were giving the long odds in this kind of way, have no right to appeal to the moral sense of the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator does not pretend to be quoting anything Levid sense.

thing I said, surely.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not pretend to quote the words, but certainly that was the sentiment.

Mr. BLAINE. Not anything whatever of the sentiment, and I said nothing justifying it or resembling it.

Mr. THURMAN. Did not the Senator say that it was a bet by the insurance company with the owner as to whether the ship would be

Mr. BLAINE. Yes; but I never said that they were gamblers and had no moral right. If the Senator will permit me, I said that like all men who took hazards on chance they calculated the chances and they calculated them just as a man who runs roulette or deals rouge et noir; but I did not state that from the fact they took their chances and calculated the chances of loss or gain they did not have rights under the law. I never said so at all.

Mr. THURMAN. I would not misrepresent the Senator for anything in the world. I am perfectly willing to take his last statement. If they bet, they were gamblers; if it was nothing but a bet, if they were parallel cases to a game of roulette or a game of rouge et noir, then they were gamblers, and no disavowel of the Senator can make then they were gamblers, and no disavowel of the Senator can make them anything else but gamblers, and very mean gamblers at that.

Mr. President, I have not been accustomed to think that the insurance companies were a mere set of gamblers. I have been accustomed to think that it was a lawful occupation. I certainly have thought that a mutual insurance company, where ten merchants or more agree to make up the loss of any one of them who may incur loss and thus enable a man comparatively poor to carry on commerce when he could not carry it on at all if he had to run the risk of losing his all either by shipwreck, or by capture, or by fire, was a lawful business and a not carry it on at all if he had to run the risk of losing his all either by shipwreck, or by capture, or by fire, was a lawful business, and a meritorious business in my humble estimation. It has existed many, many centuries. It has been cherished by every civilized government on the face of the earth. Among the shareholders and officers of such companies are some of the most intelligent and worthy men of the country. I have never supposed that they were a set of low gamblers to be likened to players of roulette and keepers of a rouge et noir bank; but I shall not say more on that subject; I should be offending the sense of the Senate, its own sense of intelligence and respect for a lawful calling, if I should notice it further.

Mr. President, let me call attention to a letter, a copy of which the Senator from Maine produced yesterday, a letter written by the presi-

Senator from Maine produced yesterday, a letter written by the president of an insurance company to Mr. Fish, Secretary of State in 1870. August 6, 1870, it was received at the Department. The Senator from Vermont called our attention to the fact that the act of 1790, if my Vermont called our attention to the fact that the act of 1790, if my memory is correct as to the date, did not prevent a private citizen from asking from a foreign government payment for a private loss. But what does this letter show? It shows that the president of this company applied to Mr. Fish to have the sanction of the Government that not only he but all others who had claims against Great Britain growing out of the captures by the confederate cruisers might be permitted to negotiate individually with the British government; and what was Mr. Fish's answer? It was said, "Without the sanction of the Government we never can proceed; Great Britain will not negotiate with us at all without the sanction of the Government; Great Britain will not negotiate in respect to these claims with us unless she shall know that the American Government will hold itself concluded by whatever may be done between us and the British government. Without, therefore, the aid and sanction of our own Government we cannot take one single step toward negotiating individually with Great Britain," and that was as true as anything could possibly be; but so far from assenting to that request our Government put its foot down on it flatly and told these men "You are to do no such thing." Instead of permitting them to take this course, while it did not deny that they had private claims, it said "No, you must leave this matter with the Government," and it issued a circular to all claimants in the United States to send their claims to the Department of State to be prosecuted by the Government. But Mr. Fish went further than that. This letter says, recurring to interview between the writer and Mr. Fish:

You were pleased to say to me in Washington that the United States Government would eventually assume these "Alabama claims."

And we very soon saw that the Government did want to assume nem. We very soon saw a recommendation of the President of the United States to Congress to authorize him to pay them off, take an assignment of them so that they might be no longer mere private claims, but might become national claims belonging to the Government of the United States. There was no talking then about "We say these claims have no validity." There was no hint then that if Great Britain should be condemned in damages or should agree by negotiation to pay us a sum of money in respect to these claims we would hold on to the money. No; so far from that, the Secretary of State tells this man that the United States will assume the claims, without placing any limitation whatever upon the statement.

There are some very excellent remarks made in this letter in support of the request made to be allowed to present these claims to England; but it is unnecessary to be attending to these small matters, for the decision of this case does not depend on what was the ters, for the decision of this case does not depend on what was the opinion of Mr. Cushing, or what was the opinion of Mr. Fish, or what was the opinion of President Grant. As so much prominence has been given to the opinion of Mr. Cushing, which is entitled to no more consideration than that of any other lawyer equally well informed on the subject, let me say—and I assume, in saying it, that the paper produced by the Senator from Maine, which bears no date, does not show where it is written, is addressed to nobody, is a genuine paper; and what is the case so far as Mr. Cushing is concerned? His first opinion, published immediately after his return from Geneva. His first opinion, published immediately after his return from Geneva in the Journal of Commerce, and unmistakably authentic, and the paper read by the Senator from Maine, are in as direct conflict as any two opinions could well be. Did Mr. Cushing know anything more about what was done or about the principles that governed the tribunal in awarding this money when he wrote this paper and handed it to the accordance of the principles and the principles that governed the tribunal in awarding this money when he wrote this paper and handed bunal in awarding this money when he wrote this paper and handed it to the agent of the war-premium people—Mr. Spofford, I think his name was—than when in the city of New York he wrote what was published in the Journal of Commerce, in which he advised all these claimants—for his words embraced everybody, insurance companies and all—not to sell their claims at a discount, not to pay exorbitant lawyers' fees, because the claims were so plain that they did not require the payment of exorbitant fees to secure their allowance. Mr. Cushing may have given two opinions, one one side at one time, and the scales having fallen from his eyes by some miraculous interposition he may have given one on the other. Again I say de mortuis nil nisi bonum. If he were alive, I might have something to say in regard to these opinions of his.

Mr. President, I believe I have said all that I need say now, and with this brief statement of the case I leave it.

with this brief statement of the case I leave it.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I wish to make a personal explanation, not for myself at all but for others, and I regret that I do not see the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Carpenter] in his seat. I am compelled in his absence to refer to the extraordinary attempt made and not quite abandoned even in the last remarks of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] to throw discredit upon the authentic character of the opinion of Mr. Cushing which I read in this debate. I presume that the evening papers in Boston may have contained something of the discussion in the Senate yesterday; and last night I received two dispatches dated Boston, Monday evening, addressed to myself. One is:

BOSTON, April 19.

BOSTON, April 19.

Hon. Jas. G. Blaine, United States Senate, Washington D. C.:

Caleb Cushing's letter quoted in the debate on Geneva award was written by him at the request of George O. Shattuck and myself. GEO. M. BARNARD.

George M. Barnard, who sends the telegram, is a well-known, very prominent, and highly respected merchant in Boston. At the same time I received the following dispatch; evidently written in conjunction with Mr. Barnard's:

MATTAPOISSETT, MASSACHUSETTS, April 19.

Hon. James G. Blaine, Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Caleb Cushing's letter in favor of war premiums was written at the request of George M. Barnard and myself. I discussed it fully with Mr. Cushing and know it to be genuine. GEO, O. SHATTUCK.

Probably George O. Shattuck may not be known to all the Senate, but he is reputed at the Boston bar as among the very first lawyers of Massachusetts. I think I am correct in stating that.

Mr. DAWES nodded assent.

Mr. BLAINE. This morning, after the more elaborate debate was published, and this most extraordinary affidavit was read yesterday by the Senator from Wisconsin—this morning I received the following from Boston:

BOSTON, April 20.

Hon, James G. Blaine, United States Senate, Washington, District of Columbia:

I have read this morning the telegraphic reports of Senator Carpenter's statement relative to Caleb Cushing. After Mr. Cushing had stated to me his opinion at the suggestion of my counsel, Mr. Shattuck and myself, he prepared it in writing to be printed for, as he proposed, the information especially of the Senate. Excepting his absence in Spain, I was thenceforth in constant communication with him until his death. After his return from Spain, he emphatically repeated and confirmed to me his opinion in favor of the war premium claimants, from which I do not believe he ever swerved during my whole intercourse with him.

GEORGE. M. BARNARD.

I have also the following letter that I want to read, sent to me last evening, a letter that I ought to have read yesterday:

WASHINGTON, April 19, 1880.

Hon. Senator BLAINE:

Dear Sir: During the long session of the Forty-fifth Congress I was present when Hon. Caleb Cushing made a statement before the House of Representatives Judiciary Committee relating to the action of the American counsel and the tribunal at Geneva. This statement was in accord with his declarations in the pamphlet entitled "Opinion of Hon. Caleb Cushing," copies of which had been given to the members of the committee.

Afterward an attorney for insurance companies called attention of the committee to the published letter of Mr. Cushing, which Mr. Carpenter has had read, and claimed that the letter was inconsistent with Mr. Cushing's statement and "opinion."

Just as the Senator from Ohio has now said:

I procured a copy of the letter and "opinion" and took both to Mr. Cushing's room in Gray's Hotel, and told Mr. Cushing of the claim that this letter was inconsistent with his statement and "opinion." After reading he replied in effect that there was no inconsistency whatever; that the letter was written to an uninsured owner of a ship destroyed by an inculpated cruiser; that his advice to him was good and not inconsistent with his statement or opinion.

I will add that early in 1874 I received a copy of "Opinion of Hon. Caleb Cushing." I was so pleased with its admirable statement of the case that I had 800 copies of it reprinted; and from that time to this have frequently brought it to the attention of members of Congress.

Very respectfully,

Very respectfully

E. W. METCALF.

I find Mr. Cushing's letter quoted by Mr. Mead, of New York, in the House five years ago; I find it quoted at length a little earlier than that by Hon. George W. McCrary, since Secretary of War and now a circuit judge of the United States. And in the presence of all these facts, with not a suspicion, with nothing in the world to ground it upon, it has been bandied on this floor and affidavits brought in here to prove that the letter was not genuine; and the affidavit brought in from Mr. J. Langdon Ward states that he took this exbrought in from Mr. J. Langdon Ward states that he took this extraordinary opinion, as it is termed, to Mr. Cushing at his hotel, and Mr. Cushing declared to him that he had never seen it. Although it had been circulating four or five years around both Houses of Congress, in the public press, and in the records of both Senate and House, Mr. Ward says that Mr. Cushing declared to him that he had never seen it and was not responsible for it. If Mr. Cushing was jealous of anything, it was his fame as a lawyer; and the idea that he would of anything, it was his fame as a lawyer; and the idea that he would permit an opinion of that kind to be circulating in the national capital for a period of six years and never make the slightest attempt to contradict it if it did not correctly represent his sentiments, is something which I leave Mr. J. Langdon Ward and the honorable Senator from Wisconsin to justify as best they may.

There is sent to me this morning the account of the printer, Mr. McGill, with Mr. Cushing, in which Mr. Cushing was charged for having had this opinion printed at his own expense and paid for.

I hope I have put in accumulative evidence in regard to the authentical contradiction.

I hope I have put in accumulative evidence in regard to the authentic character of the letter, a question which in a society of gentlemen, as the Senate of the United States is esteemed to be, never should have been raised.

If the honorable Senator from Wisconsin thinks it proper that he should leave the matter where it now is, I do not object or ask any expression from him. His course in the premises must depend wholly on his own sense of propriety. I do not desire to say anything more about it, except that I felt insulted at the suggestion that I could by any possibility bring into the Senate a paper whose genuine character was doubtful. I have known of this paper certainly myself for six years. I had talked with Mr. Cushing very frequently in regard to the subject; had heard from his own lies resolution regard to the subject; had heard from his own lips precisely the same sentiments advocated over and over again in conversation; and I was as certain of the authenticity of the document as I would be of my own signature written five minutes ago.

I do not want to detain the Senate for I have had more than my share of this debate; but I desire to trespass on its indulgence for a few minutes.

The honorable Senator from Ohio attempted I might almost say to ridicule my statement in regard to the mode in which the Government of the United States dealt with the indirect claims. I desire to say that I only in effect reproduced, and reproduced in a poor manner probably, a terse and concise statement of the whole position contained in a report of the House Judiciary Committee of the Fortythird Congress—as good a statement of this case as has been made anywhere. That committee say:

Having, for its own interest, withdrawn from the arbitration the "cause and only cause of the evil," thus leaving the tribunal without evidence of that liability of England which the United States had over and over again, in every diplomatic form, insisted upon, is not the United States estopped from denying reparation to its citizens based upon the finding of a tribunal to which, for its own purposes, it would not submit the evidence? Indeed, by so doing, did not our Government assume this class of losses of its citizens?

I desire to make no further statement on that point. I am willing to leave it there.

The honorable Senator from Vermont made some very extraordinary statements this morning in regard to navigation, statements so entirely at war with not only the experience of the country but with everything of proper theory on that subject, that I cannot but comment briefly upon his remarks. If any person in looking in the Congressional Record a hundred years hence should happen to come upon the speech of the Senator from Vermont—and of course come upon the speech of the Senator from Vermont—and of course his speech would be among the first looked at, from his eminence in this body—he would wonder what in the world could possibly have given rise to any suggestion that the commerce of the United States had suffered during the war of the rebellion. It was in a most prosperous condition, the Senator says; some friend of his made a hundred thousand dollars; everything went on swimmingly. He says all war premiums were charged in and paid by the consumer. He takes up and reproduces the extraordinary statement of the honorable Senator from Ohio on that point to show how; it was charged in able Senator from Ohio on that point to show how it was charged in. I hold in my hand (and I might have bushels of them if I chose to get them) two charter-parties for American ships to take guano from the Chincha Islands to Europe, and in the body of the charter-party these words are inserted:

The ship is to furnish a policy of insurance as agreed before commencing to load, covering the cargo against war risk at the rate of $60 per ton in gold. Premium paid by ship.

Here was an American vessel loading with guano on one side of the bank and a British vessel on the other, and of course the two vessels were going to receive the same rate of freightage to carry their cargoes to the same port in Europe or America, and in order that the American vessel might have any chance at all she had in the first American vessel might have any chance at all she had in the first place to insure the cargo and take the cost of that directly out of everything she received. Thus it is evident that whatever these ship-owners paid for war premiums they lost entirely, and by a singular perversity of fortune just precisely what they lost went to the enrichment of the very power that was responsible for the evil upon the sea at that moment. Every penny and every shilling and every pound that was taken from the American marine was paid into the British marine, and the British vessel loaded at the same rate, getting possibly even a better rate after the insurance was paid, but supposing it got the same, before the American vessel could put a spadeful of guano under her decks he had in advance of loading to pay insurance on the cargo at the rate of $60 per ton.

And more than that, if the honorable Senator from Vermont will permit me to make a suggestion. The very fact that these insurances had to be taken out by American ship-owners drove them down to coarse freights, drove them down to those freights which had bulk and small value. They could carry coal from the United States or England, they could carry guano from the Chincha Islands, because those freights had small value in proportion to bulk; but they could not afford to take rich freights because the policy of insurance upon it would absolutely outrun the entire amount of the tonnage. I hope I am understood. The entire freight on the tonnage, if she had loaded with a freight for instance of dry goods, if she had loaded with a freight made up of silks or cottons or cloths or of hardware or cutlery or any of the thousand and one articles that we import from European marts and had been compelled to pay insurance on that across the marts and had been compelled to pay insurance on that cargo, the American ship could not have stood it at all, and they were compelled American ship could not have stood it at all, and they were compelled to abandon all cargoes of this kind, and were consequently driven off the ocean. They could not take those freights at all; and by the third year of the war the American ships did not have any chance at all except in the coarse freights which I have already named.

Mr. Cobden understood this perfectly. I read his words before, but I do not think I succeeded in getting the attention of the Senate to what he said. Mr. Cobden did not have the advantage of being a leavest which he was a comparation may be vide knowledge. He was lawyer, but he was a commercial man of wide knowledge. He was an eminent man. Mr. Cobden in the British Parliament stated the whole cas

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was the date of that?

Mr. BLAINE. In 1864 Mr. Cobden said, referring to the United

The honorable Senator from Vermont tells us in the American Senate that it was in a highly prosperous condition; Hon. Mr. Cobden, in the British Parliament, telling Great Britain what her future accountability might be, said:

We have rendered the rest of her vast mercantile property for the present valueless. Under the system of free trade, by which the commerce of the world is now so largely carried on, if you raise the rate of insurance on the flag of any maritime power you throw the trade into the hands of its competitors, because it is no longer profitable for merchants or manufacturers to employ ships to carry freight when those vessels become liable to war risks.

That was the opinion of a candid and eminent Englishman, just in his conceptions of international duty, and distinguished for his impartial friendship toward this country. That is the way he viewed the question in 1864, and I commend the honorable Senator from Vermont to the study of all that Mr. Cobden said on that subject.

Mr. President, one word further and I will not detain the Senate longer. You may discuss it as you may; you may surround it with as many quibbles and technicalities and evasions as ingenuity can suggest; but in the end it will be found and conceded that there were but two great classes of losers in consequence of the Alabama deprebut two great classes or losers in consequence of the Alabama depredation, namely, the men whose ships were burnt and went down, and the men who paid the war premiums, for what the insurance companies paid out they had before received from the premium payers, so that generically when you get down to the bottom of the question and strike what in our homely phrase we call the hard-pan of the whole subject, I repeat without fear of contradiction there were but two great classes of losers, and if this award was got for actual suf-two great classes of losers, and if this award was got for actual sufferers, fair dealing requires that we give it to them.

A word, now, in reply to the Senator from Ohio, who impatiently brushed off a question which I submitted to him. I say to the honorable Senator, and he admits it fully, that the insurance companies that claimed a loss and all that attempted to show a loss and failed were allowed in the computation which they submitted to the court of Alabama claims to put in the losses they had paid at the hands of vessels destroyed by the exculpated cruisers.

Mr. THURMAN. How many claimed?

Mr. BLAINE. I do not know, but one would establish it as well

Mr. BLAINE. I do not know, but one would establish it as wen as many.

Mr. THURMAN. One would not establish it.

Mr. BLAINE. Why?

Mr. THURMAN. It would not establish it at all. It would not be binding on those who did not claim.

Mr. BLAINE. The principle was established and the Senator contends for it. I understood him to say that it was perfectly fair, that it was perfectly just. I repeat in making up their accounts the insurance companies were allowed credit for all the war premiums they had paid out. The insurance companies wherever they could show a loss at the hands of an exculpated cruiser on anything that they had insured were allowed to put that in the account; and therefore that was credited to the insurance company which was denied to the individual. dividual.

The honorable Senator from Ohio, he will pardon me for saying, in a manner which does not become his usual style of discussion—for if that honorable Senator is distinguished for anything it is for squareness and candor in debate—endeavored to get, if he will permit me to say it, a very unfair advantage in misconstruing and quibbling at some words in which I said that the whole system of insurance was based on the doctrine of chance, and that in that respect it resembled a gambling operation. If insurance is not rested and founded on chance, if the tabulations are not made through the experience of centuries, if the whole complicated machinery does not have its origin and has not had its growth out of those calculations of chance which long trial has produced, then I have entirely misapprehended the whole theory.

Mr. EATON. Even on the life of man.
Mr. BLAINE. Even on the life of man, as my friend from Con-States. You insure a man's life because there are so many men who die, out of so many thousand, in a given time. You insure a house for such a rate because out of so many thousands the chances show for such a rate because out of so many thousands the chances show that just so large a percentage will burn. You insure a ship at such a rate because all the tables have shown that, trusting to the sands and the winds and the storms and the rocks, the chances show that in a series of years, by that doctrine of certainty which is evolved out of chance, there will one year with another happen just about the same result. That was what I said about the insurance companies and the horselfs Senator transfer to state that I have libeled nies, and the honorable Senator attempts to state that I have libeled them as gamblers. I have taken their dividends and owned their

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that true as to war risks the same?

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator asks if it is true as to war risks. The doctrine of chances presents extraordinary results, and I do not know but that it might be true even in regard to war risks. The Dead Letter Office shows some strange evolutions of the doctrine of chance. The same amount of lost photographs of girls, sent to their engaged lovers, turn up month in and month out, the same amount of photographs of old men sent to their grandchildren, of dead husbands sent forward to their wives. You may take any one of the various things that the Dead Letter Office evolves and I have been told by those who have dived into its mysteries and dug through all its sta tistics, that there is in the whole of that, which seems to be as fortui-tous as the shooting of the meteor to the human eye, a law regulating it as immutable as the fate which directs the star and overhangs us all. Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Maine can settle the matter of that so-called Cushing opinion with the Senator from Wisconsin. I have said nothing about the genuineness of the paper purporting to be by Mr. Cushing, and on which the Senator

Mr. BLAINE. No; but the Senator gave a hypothetical supposition of its genuinenes; he did that much honorably.

Mr. THURMAN. Undoubtedly so. I have not examined it : I am

Mr. THURMAN. Undoubtedly so. I have not examined it; I am not going to swear that it is genuine.

Mr. BLAINE. You are not called upon to do so.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know; I am not called upon to form an opinion as to whether it is genuine or not, but this I will say about it, that if the Senator had been bent on destroying the reputation of Caleb Cushing as a lawyer giving opinions, he could not have very well had done more to destroy it than by producing the letter of Mr. Metcalf, which he has just read to the Senate, for what does Mr. Metcalf say? calf say?

In the first place I call attention to the fact that Mr. Metcalf shows conclusively that the letter which was published in the Journal of Commerce in November, 1872, and signed by Mr. Cushing was a genuine letter, for Mr. Metcalf says that he took that letter and also the paper produced by the Senator from Maine and laid them before Mr. Cushing, and Mr. Metcalf says that he and some other persons thought there were inconsistencies between these two papers, but Mr. Cushing said there was no inconsistency at all. Now all I have to do is to ask any Senator on this floor to lay them side by side and read one and then the other and say for himself whether they are inconsistent or not. I want Senators to just take the two letters and lay them side not. I want Senators to just take the two letters and lay them side by side and read them and then say what kind of a mind must the by side and read them and then say what kind of a mind must the man have had, what must have been the pressure on his intellect if he could write those two letters and then read them and say there was no inconsistency between them! If the Senator from Maine is bent on proving that Mr. Cushing was, according to PROCTOR KNOTT'S story, outside of his mind, he could not very well have done it better than by producing this testimony.

Mr. President, I might have something to say in reply to the speech the Senator from Maine has just made if it were only to exercise the usual privilege which is allowed to the person who has a bill in charge of closing the debate; but as I am very certain that if I were to make another speech the Senator from Maine would close on me, I shall forbear.

Mr. BLAINE. Before the Senator sits down, though, while he occupies the floor—I will not take it of my own right—I wish to make a suggestion. The honorable Senator has made broad assertions in regard to the utter incompatibility of these two letters. If that is so palpable, the honorable Senator ought to be able to state a point in which they are contradictory. I have read them both carefully this morning; I have read them with as much attention as I could give, morning; I have read them with as much attention as I could give, and I maintain that every position in the one is entirely logical and reconcilable with every position in the other.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I am obliged to include the Senator from Maine in the remark I made about Mr. Cushing.

Mr. President, some Senators have asked me to agree to an executive session and let the vote be taken on this bill at half past one o'clock to-morrow. My own impression would be in favor of going and taking the vote.

on and taking the vote now.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the courtesy of the Senator from Ohio for one moment. I desire to have the opportunity of reading two brief letters which I have received from constituents, bearing upon the subject-matter of this debate, and which I wish to read for the purpose of their appearing in the RECORD. They bear upon one of the important points in the debate, as it seems to me, and not proposing to participate in the discussion myself, I should still like that my constituents might be heard in their own words, which will not

Mr. THURMAN. I have no objection to their being read. If they give rise to discussion, though, I may interpose, but if they are only the usual kind of letters that people having claims write, I have no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. I will not occupy more than five minutes of the time of the Senate. The impression has seemed to be conveyed in the course of the debate that most of those who have claims for the payment of war premiums were importers, men of wealth, men able to bear the losses which they suffered during the progress of the war. Now, in my own State there was a large number of men engaged in the carrying trade, none of them men of wealth, but owners of vessels, many of whom, themselves and their families, have been reduced to penury in consequence of the progress of the war and the destruction of our commerce, and I have recently received a letter from the representative of one of them, as follows:

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., February 8, 1880. PORTSMOUTH, N. H., February 8, 1880.

DEAR SIR: This is to call your attention to the Geneva award bill soon to come before Congress on the ground of a simple act of justice. I know of parties here, one a widow of eighty years, and another a widow with a family of children. In both of these cases the amount due would do them much good should they get it. I hope you will use your influence to pass a bill to give the money to those who paid war premiums. I think that would be simply right.

Yours truly,

CHARLES H. MINDUM.

HOB. H. W. BLAIR. There is one other point which was alluded to by the honorable Senator from Vermont that the payers of these war premiums recompensed themselves from the purchasers of the country. I wish to read another letter, which is dated March 5, 1880, and addressed to myself:

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., March 5, 1880. Sir: The statement has been made in Congress by those opposed to the payment of the claims on the Geneva fund, known as the war premiums of insurance claims, that the owners of cargoes and ships were reimbursed for such payments by the consequent enhanced prices of goods and freights. This is a very great error. Goods are sold without much reference to cost, as every one knows, supply and demand fixing the price, and as regards freights, doubtless there are multitudes of cases where ship-owners were obliged to pay (or agreed to pay) for war policies on cargoes, of which they were merely the carriers, before they could effect charters or get business at the current rates obtained by neutrals; for instance, the owners of the ship Rockingham of this city (burned by the Alabama) chartered that ship to Grierson, Cole & Co., of London, England, to take a cargo of guano from the Chincha Islands to Great Britain, one condition of the charterparty being that the owners of the ship should pay to the owners of the cargo (Grierson, Cole & Co.) the premium for a war-risk policy on the value of the cargo. The amount of that premium was $1,240.38, and it was paid to Thayer & Peabody, of Boston, agents of Grierson, Cole & Co., February 17, 1863.

The captain of that ship also paid $88.50 premium for a war-risk policy on his primage, (his pay.) which was so much out of his year's carnings.

I repeat, there must have been large sums paid out in this way for which no compensation in any shape has been received. If this point has been made by any one in Congress in the discussion of the subject it has escaped my notice, and representing large interests in the war-premium claims I have felt compelled to draw your attention to it.

Trusting you will excuse it, I am, very respectfully, yours, &c.,

MARK H. WENTWORTH,

Administrator of estate of William P. Jones.

Hon. HENRY W. BLAIR, United States Senate, Washington.

It should be borne in mind that the payers of these war premiums did business not in competition with their own countrymen but with neutrals, and that the great mass of the carrying trade was in the hands of neutrals who were enabled to bring goods to this country and to afford them to very much greater advantage as to price than the American citizens who were engaged in the same business.

the American citizens who were engaged in the same business.

It is upon that point showing at what disadvantage the American carriers conveyed goods that I think this letter is very pertinent.

Mr. THURMAN. I gave notice that I should ask the Senate to sit this bill out yesterday; but the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Edmunds] wished to speak, and he was entitled to be heard. That made the bill go over until to-day. This day has been occupied to so late an hour that I am appealed to all around not to ask the Senting of the state of the ate to sit the bill out to-day. I hope to-morrow the Senate will dispose of the bill. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and thirty-one minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 20, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

REPRINT OF A BILL

The SPEAKER. The Committee on the Militia makes a request through the Chair that there be a reprint of the bill H. R. No. 5638. There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SALE OF FORT LOGAN.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I am unanimously directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report a bill to authorize the sale of Fort Logan, Montana, and to establish a new post on the frontier, and to ask for its immediate passage, in view of the public exigency set forth in the report

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read for information, after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., Section 1. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to establish a new military post at or near the Mussel Shell River, in the Territory of Montana, as he may deem best for the protection of the frontier from Indian incursions: Provided, The total cost of the same shall not exceed the sum of $50,000.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, after due notice, to sell at public auction or otherwise dispose of, as he may deem most advantageous to the Government, the site, reservation, and buildings of Fort Logan, Montana Territory, and reinvest the proceeds of such sale in the erection of the post authorized by the first section of this act: Provided, That such portion of said buildings or of the materials thereof as can be profitably removed to said new post may be reserved from sale and so removed.

Mr. MACINNIS. Let the report of the committee now he read

Mr. MAGINNIS. Let the report of the committee now be read.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
The bill (H. R. No. 5894) was accordingly received and read a first and second time.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs beg leave to report that Fort Logan when established was on the frontier, but that the settlements have outgrown it and the post needs to be moved out about a hundred miles on the present frontier, which is now the scene of continued Indian raids and conflicts.

It is thought that sufficent money can be obtained by the sale of the old post to establish the new one.

The troops now have to be sent continually to the front and their transportation back and forth is expensive, and their service is much more unsatisfatory than if stationed where needed. The military authorities have repeatedly urged this change and present exigencies make it immediately necessary. The accompanying letter of the Secretary of War, and the indorsements of General Terry and General Sherman, having been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, that committee have prepared this bill. In view of the pressing necessity of the case, on account of recent and threatened conflicts and the approach of the season when war parties of Indians can make their raids with the greatest impunity, the committee unanimously recommend that the rules be suspended and the bill passed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIBRELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

VOTE ON THE CURRENCY RESOLUTION.

Mr. HOUK. In the RECORD of April 6, on the resolution of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] known as the currency resolution or the greenback resolution, I am recorded as voting "no." Mr. WEAVER. What resolution did the gentleman say?

Mr. WEAVER. What resolution did the gentleman say?
Mr. HOUK. Your resolution; the currency resolution or greenback resolution. I did vote "no;" but I am reminded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wise] that I was paired with him. I therefore desire to state that I voted inadvertently.
Mr. WISE. Let the gentleman ask that the record be corrected.
Mr. HOUK. I make that request.

The SPEAKER. The Journal has been approved and cannot be corrected. The statement of the gentleman will go into the RECORD and will serve as a correction.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is perfectly proper that this statement of the gentleman from Tennessee should go into the RECORD as his correction, which it is just to the gentleman with whom he is paired should be made. But it is not proper that we should go back two weeks and strike off one of the votes on the roll, because in that case we might change the result of a vote; although it would not change the result in this case

The SPEAKER. It would not, of course, change the result in this case; but the Chair has not allowed it to be done even in this case, for the reason that the RECORD is in print and the Journal has been approved, and no change of either can now be made. But the statement the gentleman has made will accomplish all that he desires.

FORT RIDGELY MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. POEHLER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3751) to amend chapter 198, volume 16, of the Statutes at Large, with an amendment reported by the Committee on the Public Lands.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That chapter 198, volume 16, of the Statutes at Large, being an act for the disposal of the lands within the Fort Ridgely military reservation, Minnesota, be amended by adding thereto a new section:

"Sec. 4. All lands within the limits of the said reservation shall be open to homestead settlement and timber-culture entry as other public lands in Minnesota from and after the passage of this act: Provided, That all persons now residing on any of said lands, or who have filed on any of the lands of said reservation as bona fide settlers, shall have sixty days from and after the passage of this act to refile on the same tract as homestead or tree-culture entry, and shall have a preference over all other persons as to the tracts so settled on by them. And all persons who were allowed to pre-empt any of said lands, and who have paid for the same at the rate of $1.25 per acre, shall be entitled to a patent for the same."

The amendment was read, as follows: In line 8, after the word "reservation," insert the words "and not embracing any Government improvements;" so that it will read:

All lands within the limits of the said reservation, and not embracing any Gov-ernment improvements, shall be open to homestead settlement and timber-culture

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill at this time?

There was no objection.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engressed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POEHLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT IN KANSAS.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2481) to create an additional land district in the State of Kansas.

The SPEAKER. Is their objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all that portion of the northwestern land district in the State of Kansas lying and being situated west of the third guide meridian west of the sixth principal meridian be, and hereby is, constituted a new land district, to be called the northern land district.

SEC. 2. That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is hereby authorized to appoint a register and a receiver for said district, who shall discharge like and similar duties, and receive the same amount of compensation allowed to other officers discharging like duties in the other land offices of said

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration is general in its character, and is one which materially affects the interests of many thousands of intelligent and hard-working farmers in the northwestern portion of Kansas. It provides for the creation of a new land district by the division of what is known as the northwestern or "Kirwin" land district into two equal parts.

That there can be no reasonable objection to the passage of the bill is apparent from the extraordinary size of the existing district and from the amount of business transacted in the Kirwin office. This district embraces fourteen large counties and is over two hundred miles in length, the land office being located near its eastern boundary. Only ten years ago this territory was almost wholly in possession of Indians and buffaloes, and so long as the advancing line of settlement was confined to the central portion of the Solomon Valley no especial inconvenience was felt by the pioneers on account of the magnitude of the land district. But ten years in Kansas are equal to magnitude of the land district. But ten years in Kansas are equal to fifty years in the Eastern States, as the waving grains and smiling gardens of the Solomon Valley gladly testify. County after county has been organized and filled; the fertility of the soil, the geographical relations of the region, and the market facilities furnished by existing and rapidly extending railways have attracted a population which has already swept one hundred and fifty miles west of the eastern boundary of the district and is rapidly filling the counties on the Colorado line.

This fact is signally illustrated by the amount of business transacted at the Kirwin office during the past year, as stated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. He says:

There were 12,929 entries of all kinds made within the limits of the Kirwin district as at present constituted, and of these 4,732 entries, or more than one-third of the entire number, were made within the limits of the proposed new district. The business of the entire district represents an amount of $45,500 received by the officers as fees and commissions. A maximum office is one where the fees and commissions are equal to the salaries received by the local officers, which is $3,000 each.

It thus appears that the present Kirwin district is doing a business equal to seven maximum offices, and as the fees and commissions are paid by the settlers and others making entries of the public domain, it is but just that their convenience be served as far as practicable by the creation of new offices when needed.

In other words, the wise policy devised and observed by the Land Department would justify the establishment of seven land districts within the limits of the present Kirwin district; so that the division of this Territory into two districts is clearly justifiable and imperatively required. Accordingly the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the honorable Secretary of the Interior have approved the bill, and the Committee on the Public Lands have unanimously recommended its presents by the Henrich and observed by the Henrich and the committee on the Public Lands have unanimously recommended its presents by the Henrich and the committee of the committee ommended its passage by the House.

While it thus appears that there are no objections to the measure so far as the general interests of the Government are concerned, it is certainly apparent that the people who now reside and those who soon will find homes in this valley will be largely benefited by the enactment of this law. The immigrant, after examining a particular "quarter," must then travel a hundred or one hundred and fifty miles to the lad office when he way find that some one has already filed. to the land office, when he may find that some one has already filed upon the quarter selected by him, when the same process is again to be gone over. In other words, he must travel a distance equal to that from Washington to Philadelphia, requiring both time and money which he can illy afford to spare, and which there is no possimoney which he can flly afford to spare, and which there is no possible reason why he should be required to expend. And I submit that while in one sense, and a just sense, this measure is local in its effects, yet in another sense it appeals directly to the general interests and sympathies of the National Government, because the tens of thousands of settlers who are occupying this valley are a part of "the people" for whose benefit this Government was created and is maintained.

They are turning wild land into mellow fields, are erecting houses, stocking farms, building school-houses and churches, and securing to themselves and for those who shall come after them the highest privileges of American citizenship. They are but repeating the process which fifty and seventy years ago converted the wild territory of Indiana and Ohio into great and prosperous States. I hope the bill will need.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the House Calendar and was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ANDERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GULF AND SHIP ISLAND RAILROAD, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. HOOKER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5895) granting public lands to the State in aid of the construction of the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad, in the State of Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

NIGHT SESSION FOR POST-OFFICE COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Mr. MONEY. I ask consent that there be a session of the House held on Wednesday night of next week, commencing at half past seven o'clock, for the consideration of business reported or to be reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. HUNTON. Allow me to suggest that that evening has already been set apart for another committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that Wednesday evening of next week, not this week, be set apart for the purpose he has indicated.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg leave to remind the Chair that the order of the House setting apart Wednesday and Friday evenings for the consideration of the bill to provide a code for the District of Columbia includes next week as well as this week.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman had better ask that a day be set apart for the consideration of the business to which he refers.

Mr. MONEY. I was informed by the Clerk that Wednesday evening of next week had not been set apart for any special purpose.

Mr. HUNTON. I am certain I am right in my statement.

Mr. REAGAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi to ask for a day session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] objects unless a day session be asked for.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask unanimous consent to submit for considera-tion at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on and after Wednesday next, until otherwise ordered, the hour of daily meeting of the House be eleven o'clock a. m.

of daily meeting of the House be eleven o'clock a.m.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is not that a privileged question?

The SPEAKER. It is not a privileged question for consideration at this time. It may be a question of privilege to introduce such a resolution, but if introduced the Chair thinks there is no place for it except perhaps the Speaker's table.

Mr. GARFELD. I hope the gentleman will introduce it and let it go to the Speaker's table, where we may be able to reach it some time. If we are to get through before the dog-days we must begin our daily sessions before twelve o'clock.

sessions before twelve o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Upon reflection the Chair recollects that there is a resolution of this nature already on the Speaker's table, introduced by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Harris.]

IDAHO TERRITORIAL PRISON.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. I ask consent of the House to take from the House Calendar for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 3717) relating to convicts in the territorial prison of Idaho Territory

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for the United States marshal of the Territory of Idaho, and he is hereby authorized and required, to employ at hard labor all United States and territorial prisoners convicted and sentenced to hard labor in the territorial prison of said Territory; such labor to be performed, either within the prison building or upon the land set apart for prison purposes, in such occupations as may be deemed expedient and proper, under the direction of the Department of Justice: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred thereby chargeable to the United States or to said Territory of Idaho.

SEC. 2. That the proceeds arising from such labor shall be applied as follows: In the case of United States prisoners the net proceeds of such labor or moneys accruing therefrom shall be held subject to the order of the Attorney-General of the United States, to be by him appropriated toward defraying the expenses of said prison and the subsistence of United States prisoners confined therein; and in the case of territorial prisoners the net proceeds derived from their labor shall, by said marshal, be paid quarterly to the territorial treasurer of Idaho Territory, to be placed by him in the prison fund of said Territory, and appropriated toward defraying the current expenses of subsistence of said territorial prisoners.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to reserve the right to object to this bill

mr. BLOOKI. I desire to reserve the right to object to this bill until I can hear some explanation of it.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. I will state that there is no law in the Territory of Idaho authorizing the employment of convicts at hard labor. This bill simply provides for that without any expense to the Government; and it is supposed that it will be better for the prisoners themselves.

There being no objection, the bill was taken up and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to have printed for the use of said committee any matter they may deem proper relative to the right of the Senate to originate appropriation bills.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

HARBOR OF REFUGE AT SAND BEACH, LAKE HURON.

Mr. CONGER. I ask consent of the House that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2695) for the government and control of the harbor of refuge at Sand Beach, Lake Huron, Michigan, and that it be considered and passed at this time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act, and until the completion of the work of construction, the Secretary of War is directed to assume full control over the harbor of refuge on Lake Huron, at Sand Beach, Michigan, now in course of construction by the United States Government, and of the piers, breakwaters, docks, wharves, buildings, and other improvements made by the United States appertaining to said harbor of refuge, and to facilitate the use thereof, including the channels of, and approaches to, said harbor of refuge, so far as may be necessary to the protection and use of said harbor and the improvements aforesaid; and said Secretary of War, for the purpose aforesaid, and for the preservation of said harbor in the interests of commerce, shall prescribe such regulations not inconsistent with the laws of the United States respecting the use of said harbor and its channels, and the approaches thereto, and respecting the use of the piers, breakwaters, docks, wharves, buildings, and other improvements of said barbor, made by the United States, as he shall deem needful to fully protect and preserve the said harbor and its several channels and approaches, and the said piers, breakwaters, docks, wharves, buildings, and other improvements. Such regulations shall be promulgated by publication thereof for ten days consecutively in one daily newspaper published in each of the cities of Detroit, Port Huron, Buffalo, Cleveland, and Chicago, and said regulations may be changed in like manner from time to time. He shall also cause four copies of such regulations to be kept posted in conspicuous places on said piers and breakwaters.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War shall appoint, upon a protect the same under the regulations made at a foresaid by the Secretary of War, and to enforce the observance of said regulations, and to guard and preserve and protect the same under the regulations made at aforesaid by the Secretary of War, and to enforce the observance of said regulations, and to guard and preserve the property of the United States at said harbor of rofuge. Said custodian shall also have power to direct and regulate the stationing and anchoring of steam-vessels and water-craft in said harbor, and the mooring thereof at the piers, breakwaters, docks, and wharves of said harbor, and the laying out and discharging of cargoes and ballast in said harbor piers, breakwaters, and docks; and it shall be the duty of said custodian to report to the United States district attorney for the eastern district of Michigan all violations of this act and of the said regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War; and said custodian shall receive such compensation, not exceeding $150 per month, as the Secretary of War may allow.

Sec. 3. It shall be the duty of all persons using or navigating said harbor, its chamels or approaches, or using any of the piers, breakwaters, docks, wharves, or

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to the consideration of that bill at this time.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is that bill on the Calendar?
The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. DUNNELL. Reported from the Committee on Commerce

Mr. CONGER. It was reported unanimously from the Committee on Commerce, so I am informed. The report is a short one, and if gentlemen desire it I will ask that it be read.

Mr. FINLEY. Does it require unanimous consent to consider that bill at this time?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I object.
Mr. REAGAN. I think there must be some mistake about this being the unanimous report from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOWNSEND] reported the bill, and I understood from him that it was reported without objection.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 118, noes 40.
So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the motion was agreed to.
Mr. McMAHON. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the immediate deficiency bill. Pending that motion I move, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, that all general debate on this bill in Committee of the Whole be limited to five inutes. [Cries of "Good!"] man from Onto to limit general debate to five minutes.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope my colleague will not press that motion, but will allow at least one hour and a half for general debate. I know that there are some gentlemen on this side who particularly want to speak on one of the amendments to this bill, and have made special preparation. I think it will hasten the general result if a reasonable time be allowed for debate. The proposition for two hours has been voted down; probably an hour and a half would satisfy everybody. I hope the gentlemen will consent the an expediment has been voted down; probably an hour and a half would satisfy everybody. I hope the gentleman will consent to an amendment to that effect. I would like myself to occupy a few minutes; but I do not urge the proposition on that ground, for I would willingly forego all opportunity to speak if everybody else were willing to do so. As I have said, however, some gentlemen here have made special preparation, and it was supposed the understanding was there should be brief general debate. These gentlemen would feel very much disappointed if all general debate should be cut off. Perhaps there will be more delay by not acceding to this proposition than there would be more delay by not acceding to this proposition than there would be in agreeing to it. I move that one hour and a half be allowed for general debate.

Mr. McMAHON. Before the gentleman makes any motion I desire to say a word. When this bill was before the House originally it was under discussion for five full days. It then went to the Senate; it has come back, and is now here. It is not an ordinary appropriation has come back, and is now here. It is not an ordinary appropriation bill for the next fiscal year; it makes appropriations for the present fiscal year. Among the appropriations which it contains is one of six or seven thousand dollars to prepare a revenue-cutter to go to the relief of about seventy-five whalers imprisoned in the Arctic Ocean, and who, if still alive, are waiting for the ice to open. Now I think gentlemen who come to me and ask for time to engage in political discussion, under a threat of filibustering if the request is not granted, do not come to me in a good case. This Congress will continue in session at least another month. The opportunities for talk will be very great. Indeed, they are always very large in this House. The rine participal complaint the people make of us is that we talk too much. The opportunities for talk upon this subject will be ample. I think that this House ought to-day to act on these amendments of the Senate and send them to a committee of conference, so that the bill may be agreed to to-morrow by both Houses, and signed by the President the next day

Mr. GARFIELD. That ought to be done. I agree with the gen-

Mr. McMAHON. Now I am instructed by the committee to press my motion; and I will insist upon the limitation of five minutes unless the House votes me down.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I repeat it was stated on Saturday that there was no intention to cut off general debate on this bill. The RECORD shows that to have been the understanding. There are genthemen on this side who have prepared their remarks on this bill. They desire to offer those remarks, and we desire they shall. If the gentleman from Ohio and his committee are so sensitive about the whalers on the ice, let him withdraw his political rider from this bill and we can pass it in ten minutes and relieve the excessive sympathy and we can pass it in ten minutes and relieve the excessive sympathy of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McMAHON. The gentleman asks a great deal of me to withdraw an amendment which has been already agreed to by the House and adopted with a modification by the Senate.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me ask the gentleman from Ohio what particular features of the bill are now in dispute?

Mr. McMAHON. All of them.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand the Senate has passed the bill with certain amendments, and the Committee on Appropriations have moved to concur in certain of the Senate amendments and non-commoved to concur in certain of the Senate amendments and non-commoved to concur in certain of the Senate amendments and non-commoved to concur in certain of the Senate amendments and non-commoved to concur in certain of the Senate amendments and non-commoved to concur in certain of the Senate amendments and non-commoved to concur in certain of the Senate amendments and non-commoved to concur in certain of the Senate amendments and non-commoved to concur in certain of the Senate amendments and non-commoved to concur in certain of the Senate amendments and non-commoved to concur in certain of the Senate amendments and non-commoved to concur in certain of the Senate amendments and non-commoved to concur in certain of the Senate amendments. moved to concur in certain of the Senate amendments and non-concurin others; so it seems the issue is particularly narrow as to whether we will concur with the Senate in certain amendments or not. I do not see the necessity, therefore, for a long political debate on those questions when we have had the bill under general discussion on other features of it.

Mr. McMAHON. I insist on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio in charge of this appropriation bill moves that the general debate be limited to five

Mr. CONGER. And we ask on this side an hour and a half for general debate.

The SPEAKER. There has been no motion made to that effect.

Mr. CONGER. I will move, then, that an hour and a half be given for general debate.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order having been made that no quorum has voted, the only business in order will be a motion to adjourn or for a call of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest to gentlemen on the other side whether they will not agree to yield to us on this side one hour for debate on they will not agree to yield to us on this side one nour for debase on this bill, and to take such time as they may see fit for discussion on that side of the House. We are content here if we can have but one hour. We have now consumed fully an hour in this filibustering, and I think we have exhibited sufficiently to the House our intention of remaining here and continuing it until we have a chance to de-bate this bill as asked for. It will facilitate the disposition of this matter if contlarger will consent to allow the time asked for

Mr. CONGER. I object to any other business than that now before the House. We want to proceed with the debate on this bill.

Mr. COBB. This is a bill making appropriations for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the year ending June 30, 1881, and I ask simply that it be printed and recommitted. I hope there will be no objection to the request.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to give notice that I reserve all points of order on the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. This bill has already been discussed, I believe almost exclusively on the other side of the House, for four or five days. most exclusively on the other side of the House, for four or five days. It has been considered by the House and the Senate. It is simply a deficiency bill, and ample time has been allowed for the consideration of it. I want to say that at any time when the minority of this House see proper to obstruct legislation it seems to be only necessary for some member on that side to rise in his place and object, and all the minority follow his lead. Are we to be controlled by a minority who seek to obstruct the public business? I sincerely hope not. For my own part I would sit here for two weeks before I would submit to being dictated to in this way by the minority of this House when they resort to such methods as this to obstruct the consideration of the public business. The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there wereayes 41, noes 59.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The only question now in order is a motion for a call of the House.

Mr. HAYES. Could we not have the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. McMahon?]
Mr. KLOTZ. I move that there be a call of the House.
The question being taken on the motion of Mr. KLOTZ, it was not agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there wereayes 38, noes 53.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CALKINS. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Ohio so as to limit general debate to an hour and a half.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not in order unless the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not in order unless the point as to the absence of a quorum is withdrawn.

Mr. CALKINS. That point of order has been substantially determined by the vote of the House dispensing with the call.

Mr. McMahon. A considerable time ago I offered to concede an hour to the other side, if out of that hour they would give my colleague from Ohio [Mr. Garfield] twenty minutes.

Mr. CALKINS. We have wasted already an hour and a half. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMahon] that he agree to what is asked on this side.

Mr. KLOTZ. I would rather remain here all night than agree to the demand of the other side.

Mr. McMahon. I have heard no response as yet from the other side to the proposition I made at least half an hour ago. I offered as far as I could control the matter to give an hour to the other side if they would give out of that hour twenty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Garfield.]

Mr. CALKINS. We do not know whether he wants it.

Mr. CONGER. Give us an hour and twenty minutes and we will be satisfied.

Mr. EINSTEIN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMahon] that twenty minutes, which is all the difference between us now, is very little time for the great democratic party to give to this side of the House.

this side of the House.

Mr. McMAHON. The question is whether the republican party will give twenty minutes to its leader. That is the question.

Mr. CALKINS. Are we to understand that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] is the leader on that side of the House?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I suggest that we let Ohio fix this matter.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand, then, the arrangement to be, as proposed on the other side, that we are to have an hour for debate on this side of the House. side of the House

Mr. McMAHON. And that twenty minutes of that time shall be

Mr. McMAHON. And that twenty minutes of that time shall be occupied by my colleague, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I presume the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] will have an opportunity to speak if he desires to do so.

Mr. McMAHON. Do I understand the gentleman from New York to say that the gentleman from Ohio declines to speak?

Mr. GARFIELD. I have not stated I declined to speak. If it will be a second many that the gentleman from Ohio declines to speak.

dispose of this matter to count me out I am quite willing; but I would be glad to have twenty minutes to speak on this subject. I do not, however, desire to delay the business of the House on that account.

Mr. McMAHON. If the republican side are willing to give the gentleman from Ohio twenty minutes we are willing to concede them an hour for debate.

Mr. REAGAN. This is a bargain we are not all agreeing to. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas object to the proposition?

Mr. McMAHON. I want to understand if the gentlemen on that side of the House refuse to give the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Gar-FIELD] twenty minutes?

Mr. CONGER. I wish the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMahon] to understand the republican party can take care of itself without his supervision. We do not need him to take charge of this side, and have not invited him to do so.

Mr. WEAVER. If the leader of the republican party desires to state his willingness to take the "bloody shirt" out of politics he ought to have the opportunity to do so, and if necessary I am willing ought to have the opportunity to do so, and it necessary I am whiling to remain here a month to help to give him that opportunity.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion limiting debate to an hour and twenty minutes.

Mr. McMaHON. I have not made any motion of that sort.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there any motion made?

Mr. CONGER. I make the motion that there be an hour and twenty minutes for general debate for this side of this House, as gentlemen on the other side do not seem to desire any time for debate.

Mr. REAGAN. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not,
Mr. REAGAN. I only desire to say that the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Conger,] perhaps in mercy to this side of the House, proposes to take off the strain upon its courage, it having stood now for a half an hour, and that is too much for it to stand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposition to limit general debate to an hour and twenty minutes?

Mr. McKENZIE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. GARFIELD. A single objection does not avail against that motion; the House must determine it.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to a point of order.

motion; the House must determine it.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REAGAN. The point of order was made that there was no quorum voting, and that point of order has not been withdrawn. I object to any proceedings when we have been arrested in our regular proceedings by the point of order that no quorum voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is correct. The point of order having been made that no quorum has voted, until that point is withdrawn nothing is in order except a motion to adjourn or a motion for a call of the House.

Mr. CALKINS. The House dispensed with further proceedings under the call which was ordered after the point of order was made; and that puts the House back into its original position.

and that puts the House back into its original position.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers must resume their places in order to determine whether a quorum is present or not, upon the motion to limit debate to five minutes.

Mr. CALKINS. And pending that a motion to amend is in order.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already decided that the point of order having been raised that no quorum voted, no mo-we may see whether there is a quorum present or not.

The motion of Mr. Conger was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with, and that the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] be entertained, and that we proceed immediately to vote upon it.

Mr. REAGAN. I suggest that cannot be done pending the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Mr. SPRINGER. A call of the House having been ordered, if we I fact that when the division or attempted division took place the fact-now dispense with all further proceedings under that call, the House is restored to its former position.

Mr. PAGE. On the last roll-call the presence of a quorum was disclosed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And subsequently the House found

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And subsequently the House found itself without a quorum voting, and that point of order was made.

Mr. PAGE. There was a quorum, as the record will show.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On what vote?

Mr. PAGE. On the call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But not since the point of order was made. A call of the House having been ordered, the Clerk will proceed to all the roll.

ceed to call the roll.

The Clerk began the call of the roll, and Mr. MULDROW said: Is a motion now in order to dispense with all further proceedings under the call?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not now in order, the call of the roll having been commenced.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the call of the roll, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Lewis, Loring, Loring, Lounsbery, Lowe, Manning, Ellis, Fisher Acklen. Rice, Robeson, Robinson, Ross, Russell, W. A. Bachman. Forsythe, Frost, Gibson, Bailey, Barlow, Barlow, Neal, Newberry, O'Brien, O'Reilly, Lapham, Le Fevre, Young, Casey Young, Thomas L.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of the roll shows the presence of 220 members—more than a quorum.

Mr. CONGER. Now, if it be in order, I move that all further proceedings under this call be dispensed with.

Mr. FINLEY. How many members were present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two hundred and twenty responded. to their names

Mr. FINLEY. I do not see the sense of having these continuous roll-calls.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to dispense with further proceedings is not debatable.

Mr. FINLEY. I am not going to debate it. I was simply remarking that I did not see any sense in this continuous call of the roll. If we are going to fight it out we may as well do it.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. Conger to dispense with all further proceedings under the call; and upon a division there were—ayes 63, noes 36.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. FINLEY said: I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I now move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMahon] so as to limit general debate to one hour and twenty minutes, to be given to this side. This will include the twenty minutes to be occupied by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the motion of the gentleman is not in order in the shape in which he presents it.

Mr. FORT. The meaning is simply that this much time be given to our side; the other side can have as much time as they want.

Mr. REAGAN. Four or five days have already been spent in general debate on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Michigan is unknown to the rules in the form in which he presents it, and cannot be entertained by the Chair.

Mr. CONGER. If gentlemen on the other side desire equal time, I move that general debate be limited to two hours and forty minutes an hour and twenty minutes upon each side.

an hour and twenty minutes upon each side.

Mr. SIMONTON. I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Michigan is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state the reason.

Mr. SIMONTON. I submit that the question now necessarily recurs upon the motion pending before the House some time ago, upon which the vote was taken by tellers, when it was discovered there was no quorum present. The House is, in fact, dividing upon that motion, and therefore no other motion is in order. It seems to me that the only thing in order is for the tellers to resume their places.

motion, and therefore no other motion is in order. It seems to methat the only thing in order is for the tellers to resume their places.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair inclines to the opinion that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMONTON] is correct in the present posture of the question. As the House is dividing upon the original proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, the motion to amend would not be now in order.

Mr. SIMONTON. And the tellers must resume their places.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that when the division or attempted division took place the fact.

* as disclosed that there was no quorum. That vote, then, amounted to nothing; there was no division at all; and the question stands just as it did before. It is the duty of the Chair to put it to the House again, and being again stated, it is in order for any gentleman to move to amend the motion. I submit that the motion to amend is now in order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is that the tellers shall resume their places and renew the count upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, that all general debate in Committee of the Whole be limited to five minutes. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGEE] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMahon] will please resume their places as tellers.

Mr. PAGE. Is not the motion of the gentleman from Ohio subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not now.
Mr. GARFIELD. Let the gentleman withdraw it.
The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 49.
Mr. BROWNE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio whether forty-nine is the strength of his motion on the democratic side

Mr. McMAHON. I respond by asking whether none is the strength of the gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. BROWNE. On this question it seems to be.

The tellers then reported, noes 2.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum!
Mr. ATKINS. I object to the tellers leaving their places. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will resume their places; and the Chair trusts that gentlemen will now vote in order to make a quorum.

The tellers (additional votes having been given) reported—ayes

56, noes 7.
Mr. CONGER. No quorum!
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is made that no quorum has voted.

Several MEMBERS. Further count!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will resume their places; and the Chair trusts that those who have not voted will pass between the tellers.

Mr. McMAHON. I call for the yeas and nays on my motion to limit debate to five minutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announced concurrence in the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 1160) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of peace and the recognition of American Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and the products of the soil and mine in the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the year 1883.

It further announced the passage of the following bills, with amendments in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 2253) to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5623) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to repair and extend the public building owned by the Government at Cleveland, Ohio.

It further announced the passage of the following bills; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. No. 464) for the erection of a public building at Montgomery, Alabama;

A bill (S. No. 1269) for the erection of a public building at Denver, Colorado; and

A bill (S. No. 1349) for enlarging the City Hall for the accommodation of the courts and records of the District of Columbia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the point has been made there is of the House or to adjourn.

Mr. REAGAN. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Does not the resolution which was adopted some time ago provide for a session this evening to consider pension cases? If the House now adjourns will that do away with that evening session? The SPEAKER pro tempore. If this motion prevails there will be no evening session.

Norcross, Smith, A. Herr

Mr. STEVENSON. But there has been an order of the House providing for an evening session to consider pension cases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The pending question is on the motion to adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 43.

Mr. KLOTZ. Let us have the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn. We have fooled away the whole day and now let us see who wants to adjourn to prevent an evening session for the consideration of pension cases.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs, then, on the motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. COFFROTH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the House should adjourn now, under the resolution passed the other day, would there be a session to-night, the terms of the resolution having been that this day at half past four p. m. a recess shall be taken until half past seven p. m.

past seven p. m.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the House adjourns now it will adjourn to twelve o'clock to-morrow, and vacate the order for an evening session.

Mr. MULDROW. I move to take a recess until 7.30 o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It requires a quorum to take a recess, and the point of order has been made by the gentleman from Michi-and the point of order has been made by the gentleman from Michigan that no quorum is present.

Mr. MULDROW. Then I move the House adjourn.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 100, noes 53.

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to the fact that the Clerk has not called my name in reading over the list of those voting on this proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee state that he voted?

Deuster,

Mr. BRIGHT. I did. The circumstances, perhaps I should state, were as follows: the Clerk may possibly have called a name immediately after mine before my attention was called to the fact that my name had been called. I then responded. I find now, however, that my name is not recorded.

Keifer,

Mr. COFFROTH. I move the gentleman be allowed to vote.

Mr. BROWNE. Let him vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rules forbid the Chair to entertain a motion that a gentleman shall vote after the second roll has been called and be has failed to respond.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Whit-

THORNE] states that he heard distinctly his colleague respond to his

Mr. BRIGHT. I did vote as stated, but my name has not been recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Did the gentleman vote on the first roll-call or on the second?

Mr. BRIGHT. I voted on the second roll-call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Did the gentleman vote before the next name on the roll had been called?

Mr. BRIGHT. As I have stated, I think it probable that the Clerk may have called the next name on the roll before I responded to my

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the standing rule and order of the House, unless the gentleman states that he voted at the time his name was called, the Chair cannot entertain a motion to permit him now to do so

Mr. COFFROTH. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. Mr. KENNA. The gentleman from Tennessee states that he was present and answered to his name.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will cause the first clause of the fifteenth rule to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ON CALLS OF THE ROLL AND HOUSE.

1. Upon every roll-call, the names of the members shall be called alphabetically by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, then the whole name shall be called; and after the roll has been once called, the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting; and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair.

Mr. KENNA. With all due respect I submit to the Chair that that rule applies simply where a member fails to answer to his name on either the first or second roll-call, but can have no application where a member did answer to his name but has not been recorded as in this

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman states that he did not answer to his name, or that he did not vote until after the next name was called. The name of the gentleman not appearing on the roll, was called. The name of the gentleman not appearing on the roll, the Chair has no option but to take that as the correct record.

Mr. HULL. I desire to ask, Mr. Speaker, to record my vote. I did not hear my name called by the Clerk at all. I listened attentively, and believe that my name was passed over by him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is bound to assume that the Clerk discharges his duty in calling the roll, and if the gentleman did not appear to his name the Chair is usually to extend the roll.

not answer to his name the Chair is unable to entertain a motion that he shall be permitted to vote after the roll is called.

Mr. BAYNE. Suppose in the confusion that a gentleman failed to hear his name called, but answered to his name at the earliest moment after he had discovered his omission to do so when the name was called. That, as I understand, was the case of the gentleman from Tennessee.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Mr. Beltzhoover with Mr. Tyler.

Mr. FISHER with Mr. O'REILLY for the remainder of this day. The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MACHINE FOR TESTING IRON AND STEEL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President, which, with the accompanying papers was, on motion of Mr. Norcross, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

To the House of Representatives:

The board for testing iron, steel, and other metals, appointed under the authority of "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes," contracted with Mr. A. H. Emery, of New York, for a testing machine, to be paid out of the appropriation made for the purpose. That machine has been completed and accepted, and is now in position at the Watertown arsenal, Massachusetts. It is spoken of by the members composing the late board as the most perfect and reliable machine in the world, embodying new mechanical principles and combinations not heretofore used in any other constructions.

In designing, perfecting, and making this machine the contractor has expended large sums of money over and above the contract price, besides giving years of labor for which he has received no compensation. He now appeals to Congress for relief.

and the papers herewith exhibit a case that calls for congressional action. It is respectfully submitted to the House of Representatives recommending speedy and favorable consideration.

RATE OF DUTY ON IMPORTATIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the The SPEARER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in reply to a resolution of the House of the 6th instant, calling for information as to the rate of duty upon importations into the United States for the last five years which would in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury upon each article have yielded a maximum revenue to the Treasury, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and

SIOUX RESERVATION, DAKOTA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an estimate of an appropriation for the resurvey of the former Sioux Indian reservation west of Big Stone Lake, in Dakota; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

OBSTRUCTIONS TO NAVIGATION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the removal of wrecks, &c., lying in the course of commerce and obstructing navigation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. OSMER, for three days, on account of important business; To Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, from night sessions during this month;

To Mr. BRIGHT, for six days.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolu-tions and a bill of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the Joint resolution (S. R. No. 56) authorizing the printing and binding of additional copies of the report of the Chief Signal Officer of the Joint resolution (S. R. No. 102) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents, flags, and camp equipage for the use of the soldiers' reunion to be held at Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin, in June,

An act (S. No. 1489) to remove the political disabilities of Roger A. Pryor, of New York.

The result of the vote on the motion to take a recess was then announced.

And accordingly (at four o'clock and twenty-four minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 7.30 p. m. ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read the order under which the session of this evening is held.

The Clerk read as follows:

April 16, on motion of Mr. Coffroth, by unanimous consent, Ordered, That on Tuesday next, April 20, at 4.30 p. m., the House take a recess until 7.30 p. m.; said evening session to be for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent to report sundry bills from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER. The order of the House is for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. It does not include reports.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. BRIGGS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the business should not vary from the order under which the House meets this evening. The gentleman from Missouri can present his reports at another time.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. COFFROTH. Pending that motion I move that all debate on the bill pending in Committee of the Whole terminate in five min-

Mr. BRAGG. I call for a division.

The question being put on the motion to limit debate, there wereayes 22, noes 5.

Mr. BRAGG. A quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point that a quorum has not voted.

Mr. COFFROTH. Then I withdraw the proposition.

Mr. BRAGG. I do not know that any discussion may be desired on some of these bills. On some others there may be.

The SPEAKER. The motion to limit debate is with reference to a particular bill.

Mr. BRAGG. Which bill?

Mr. COFFROTH. The bill granting a pension to Caroline Boll.
Mr. BRAGG. I have no objection to limiting debate on that bill.
The motion to limit debate was then agreed to.
The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. Stevenson in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The Clerk will report the pending bill.

CAROLINE BOLL. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3099) granting a pension to Caroline Boll.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Caroline Boll, mother of Louis Boll, deceased, late a private of Company H, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $5 per month, commencing on the 13th day of August, 1862, the date of the son's death.

The CHAIRMAN. A substitute has been offered and is now pending which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, including the arrears-of-pensions act, the name of Caroline Boll, mother of Louis Boll, deceased, late a private of Company H, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to strike out the words "including arrears-of-pensions act."

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG. I understand this is a bill under the act which authorizes a pension to be given to the mother, or father, or other relative where the proof shows that the person making the application for a pension was at the decease of the soldier dependent upon the soldier, either in whole or in part. I have before me a record of the Pension Office in this case, which shows that the soldier died in the service August 30, 1862; and that the declaration was filed January 26, 1873. To entitle to a pension it should be shown in evidence that the applicant was actually dependent on her son at the time of his death in 1862, and that her husband, who is still living, did not and could not, on account of physical disability, procure for her a proper support. The report of the committee makes no reference to the absence of testimony during the period immediately following the soldier's death, which was the reason of the rejection of the claim in the Pension Office.

Before this party would be entitled to a pension it must be shown that the dependency existed at the time of the death of the soldier and immediately following. But I understand from the report and the evidence in this case that there is no testimony showing that a state of dependency existed upon which the right to a pension would rest. That is the reason of my objection to this bill.

Mr. COFFROTH. I think there will be found in the report accompanying this bill evidence showing that this claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions because of a certain letter written by the postmistress of the town, alleging that this party was not dependent upon her son for support. I think the evidence is clear that she was so dependent, and that fact is certified to by a large number of the citizens of the town. If there was a single doubt, this claim being presented here as an equitable claim, the amplicant would be being presented here as an equitable claim, the applicant would be entitled to a pension, because if the case had been made out clearly to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Pensions, it would have been granted there, and there would have been no necessity for com-been granted there, and there would have been no necessity for coming to Congress.

Mr. BRAGG. I would like to have the report read.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] whereabout in this report there is any statement that either the father or the mother of this soldier was dependent upon him for support at the time of the soldier's death?

Mr. COFFROTH. Read the report.

Mr. BURROWS. The report does not disclose that fact. I desire to call the attention of this committee to the fact that this claim was to call the attention of this committee to the fact that this claim was not filed until eleven years after the soldier's death. The applicant did not wake up to the fact of the dependency until eleven years after the soldier died.

Mr. COFFROTH. There was a long contest about this case before the party came to Congress.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. This claim elicited very considerable discussion at our last session for the consideration of pension claims; discussion at our last session for the consideration of pension claims; but one point was not brought particularly to the attention of the House. Although I have no personal interest in this matter whatever, although I am not acquainted with the party who makes this application, I am acquainted with the gentleman who represents the district adjoining mine, and who has charge of this claim; but he is not present this evening. According to my recollection of the case, it is true that this woman, Mrs. Boll, made her application to the Pension Department for a pension on account of the loss of her son, who was killed while in the military service of the United States.

After consideration, the claim was rejected upon the ground that the mother was not dependent upon her son for support while he was

Mr. HUBBELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Certainly.
Mr. HUBBELL. Was there any attempt made by the applicant to supply that evidence before the Pension Bureau?
Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I will answer that question to the satisfaction of my friend in one moment. The applicant furnished evidence which was referred to the Pension Department, showing that evidence which was referred to the Pension Department, showing that in point of fact her husband was an invalid in consequence of the varicose enlargement of the veins of the leg, and that since that time he had become totally disabled. She furnished evidence and laid it before the Pension Department that the son gave to his mother a very considerable portion of his earnings, not only before he went into the service of the United States, but while he was in that service.

The Government made inquiry through the postmistress at Mauch Chunk and received a letter from her, in which she wrote that this family were not dependent upon the earnings of this boy. And upon that letter alone the Department rejected this application for a pension, notwithstanding the sworn testimony of the attending physician sion, notwithstanding the sworn testimony of the attending physician of the father of this young man and the corroborative evidence of neighbors living in the community where this family resided, which I believe was the town of Packerville.

Mr. BRAGG. I do not understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Ryon] to state that this mother was dependent for her support upon this son. He only says that the son gave the mother a portion of his earnings. portion of his earnings.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I have stated the fact that the father was an invalid and that his difficulties had so increased that long before this application was made to Congress he had become totally unable to render any assistance to the support of his family.

Mr. BRAGG. That is not the point. The point is whether the inability existed at the time of the death of the soldier.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Not to the same extent as now; but nevertheless it existed as a fact at the time the application was made to the Pension Office.

Mr. BRAGG. Did it exist at the time of the death of the soldier?
Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. It existed then and at the time the application was made. The testimony proves that it existed at the time of the death of the son, and anterior to that time.

Mr. COFFROTH. Has not the time allowed for debate been ex-

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. FARR. I ask that the report in this case be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Caroline Boll, mother of Louis Boll, deceased, praying for a pension, report:

That Louis Boll, the son of claimant, was enrolled on the 12th day of November, 1861, in Company H. Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, to serve three years, and was regularly mustered into the service of the United States, as a private, on the 27th day of November, 1861, at Annapolis, Maryland, in Company H. Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, to serve for three years, or during the war, and was killed in action at Bull Run, Virginia, on the 30th day of August, 1860

The claim was originally filed at the Pension Office on the 25th day of January, 1873, and was, after a full compliance with all the requirements of that office, rejected upon a final hearing—cause, non-dependence. An appeal was taken to the Secretary of the Interior, who, however, sustained the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Secretary of the Interior, who, however, sustained the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Your committee consider, after a careful investigation of all the evidence in the case, that the decision of the Pension Bureau was erroneous, in that it was based entirely upon a letter from the postmistress at Mauch Chunk, Pennsylvania, Mrs. Jane Righter, whose statement was not made under oath, ignoring thereby the sworn statements (testimony) of sixteen unimpeachable and disinterested citizens of Manch Chunk, who testify to claimant's dependency on account of old age and physical disability of husband. This postmistress, in her reply to Department letter of June 14, 1873, requesting her to forward an opinion relative to husband's ability to support his family by manual labor, and whether the son ever rendered the claimant any material aid, says:

"Upon inquiry have learned from a reliable source that Joseph Boll, the father of the said Louis Boll, has worked at Packerton, about two miles from this place, for the past ten or twelve years. Has supported his family without the assistance of the son, and is therefore not entitled to a pension. Mrs. Caroline Boll is the wife of Joseph Boll."

The affidavits of Dr. Ludwig Elentje, (three in number.) family physician, clearly and unmistakably establish the physical disability of husband, as does, also, the certificate of N. B. Reber, M. D., medical examiner for Pension Bureau, who, in his report to the Pension Office, dated Lehighton, Carbon County, Pennsylvania, July 2, 1873, says:

"The said Joseph Boll, husband of Caroline Boll, who claims a pension as dependent mother of Louis Boll, is and has been physically incapacitated for the support of himself and family. Have had no acquaintance with Mr. Boll until at this examination. I find him suffering with salt-rheum on left leg with varicose veins. The limb is very much atrophied. Apparently his limb may have been affected some eight or ten years. He is now totally disabled, hardly able to walk, and that but a very sh able."

It is further shown in evidence that previous to deceased's entry into the service of the United States he contributed the entire proceeds of his earnings to the support of his parents, being then not quite seventeen years of age; and that while in the service it is shown by the affidavit of his captain, E. H. Rauch, that he, the deceased, on three or four occasions sent the greater part of his pay to his parents for their support. This fact is also corroborated by the sworn statements, submitted in evidence, by some of his comrades in the company of which he was a member. A letter from the deceased to his parents, inclosing funds for their sole use, is also in evidence.

Now, in view of the foregoing, and in addition thereto the affidavits of father and mother in answer to the interrogatories of the Pension Office, setting forth their dependence on their son and the manner in which he contributed to their support, all of which show conclusively their dependence upon and aid from that source, we are of the opinion that the mother is entitled to a pension at the rate of $8 per month from the 30th day of August, 1862, the date of the death of her only son and support, and accordingly report a bill for that purpose and recommend its

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JACOB GINDER.

The next pension bill upon the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3098) granting a pension to Jacob Ginder; introduced by Mr. KLOTZ, and reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Jacob Ginder, father of David H. Ginder, deceased, late a captain Company I. Eighty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, commencing on the 5th day of February, 1876.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 263) granting a pension to Jacob Ginder, father of David H. Ginder, deceased, late captain of Company I, Eighty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

David H. Ginder, son of claimant, was enrolled on the 4th day of September, 1861, in Company I, Eighty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was regularly mustered into the service of the United States as a sergeant in Company I, Eighty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was regularly mustered into the service of the United States as a sergeant in Company I, Eighty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the 15th day of October, 1861; was promoted to the second lieutenancy of said company February, 1863; to the first lieutenancy, May 1, 1863; to the captaincy, April 3, 1864; and was killed in action at Petersburgh, Virginia, June 17, 1864.

This claim was originally filed in the Pension Office on the 5th day of February, 1876, and was rejected, upon a final hearing, on the 26th day of December, 1876; cause, non-dependence at time of soldier's death, in that the claimant was physically able to and did support his family by the proceeds of his manual labor. It is shown in evidence that the deceased was never married; that the claimant is the father of the soldier, born in lawful wedlock; and that the mother died July 2, 1874. It is further shown that the deceased, previous to entering the service, contributed the greater part of his earnings to the support of his parents, the father drawing his wages; and that while a soldier he sent home for their sole use $325, in various amounts and at various times, as shown in five very interesting and affectionate letters to his parents. A petition to Congress, signed by forty-five of the most prominent citizens of Mauch Chunk, Pennsylvania, the home of claimant, sets forth: That he is now sixty-five years of age, ability; that the claim is mentorious, and, it anowed, would be a rices that him in his old days, as he is unable to earn a subsistence or make a living by manual labor, &c.

The affidavit of Dr. R. Leonard, family physician, sets forth that in 1864 claimant was one-third, and in 1865 one-half, disabled by rheumatism. The certificate of N. B. Reber, M. D., examining surgeon of Pension Bureau, dated July 3, 1876, sets forth: That claimant had then been ailing for about one year, and was failing very fast; that his disability consists of rheumatism, palpitation of the heart, and pain and weakness of the bowels and stomach, and that he believes him totally disabled. Your committee, after a careful investigation of all the evidence in the case, find that though the deceased in a great measure contributed to the support of his parents before and after his entry into the service of the United States, the claimant, the said Jacob Ginder, in the year 1864, time of son's death, was not, in the meaning of the law, altogether dependent on deceased's earnings. But in view of the fact that he, the claimant, has since become totally physically disabled, and therefore unable to support himself by manual labor, and being found in great want of the necessaries of life, as would appear by the prayers of the forty-live morialists previously referred to, and bereft of his son, who, by reason of his past kind acts toward him, we believe would gladly support and comfort his aged and helpless father were he alive, we are of the opinion that the claimant, Jacob Ginder, is entitled to a pension at the rate of $8 per month, commencing on the 5th day, of February, 1876, the date of his application for a pension at the Pension Bureau, and accordingly report a bill for that purpose, and recommend its passage.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I offer as a substitute what I send to the desk.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I offer as a substitute what I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jacob Ginder, father of David L. Ginder, deceased, late a captain Company I, Eighty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. BRAGG. I trust that gentlemen of the committee, in considering this case, will remember that we are not here for the purpose of disbursing charity. There must be something more presented to us in support of a bill of this kind than the fact that the claimant is us in support of a bill of this kind than the fact that the claimant is now destitute and had a relative who may have died from wounds received or disease contracted in the Army. Our pension-rolls are now enormous. They are increasing every day. There are upon this Pension Calendar enough bills to add over half a million dollars to our expenditure in this direction. We are increasing the burden of the people in this regard at a rate which it is certain they cannot submit to without very great hardship. The money which we thus give away must be earned by somebody; and we must be a little chary of our gifts, granting pensions in those cases only where by contemplation of law the party has some claim.

Now, in this last case the report shows—what? The affidavits of the soldier's comrades in the Army that he sent home money upon which his family relied for their dependence. How do these men know that fact? They do not know any more about it than you do. Then, again, as evidence that the father relied upon this soldier for dependence there is produced a kindly and affectionate letter of the son inclosence there is produced a kindly and affectionate letter of the son inclosing money to the father. Now, what are the facts? The record in this case shows that this man was killed in 1864. This dependent father never made any application for pension nor did his destitution appear until 1876, twelve years after the death of his son. To entitle him to a pension this state of dependence must have existed at the time of the death of the soldier on account of whose services the pension is included. sion is claimed.

I desire to call attention to the report in the Pension Office. There seems to be a general disposition to attack the Pension Office as the seems to be a general disposition to attack the Pension Office as the cause of all the evils connected with pensions. Gentlemen do not remember, apparently, that in the case of an application for pension it is the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions or of the Secretary of the Interior, upon appeal made to him, to decide upon the law as we have placed it upon the statute-book. In what condition would we be if an officer, having under his control so much money as is under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, could in the exercise of his disregard the provisions of our statutes ignore all the his discretion disregard the provisions of our statutes, ignore all the safeguards we have thrown around this fund, and grant pensions according to his own will or pleasure?

As I have said, the statute requires this state of dependence to exist at the time of the soldier's death. What are the facts as shown in the Pension Office? The deceased was killed at the first assault on Petersburgh, June 17, 1864. During the year 1864 Jacob Ginder, the dependent father, worked as a molder two hundred and seventy-six and one-fourth days at $2.25 per day, and received therefor $690.56. This was about the time of the death of the son, when the state of dependence upon the son for support must have existed. The evidence in the Pension Office shows that the father was a molder and in 1864 was not so disabled but that he could work two hundred and seventy-six and one-fourth days at $2.25 per day, receiving $690.56. In 1865, the following year, the father was employed one hundred and seventy-six and one-fourth days at $2.25 per day, receiving $440.56. Thus it will be seen that during two years immediately following the death of the son the father received an income larger than four-fifths, or I might say nine-tenths, of the laboring-men in America earn. As I have said, the statute requires this state of dependence to exist the death of the son the father received an income larger than four-fifths, or I might say nine-tenths, of the laboring-men in America earn. In 1876 the father wakes up to the condition of things and informs this House that in 1864 he was dependent on his son and was in destitute circumstances. Now, it seems to me that if we are to grant a pension in this case, we must grant a pension in all cases where the applicant, from sickness, disease, misfortune or what not may have become destitute although the verson on account of what become destitute, although the person on account of whose services the pension is claimed may have died five, ten, fifteen, twenty, or twenty-five years preceding.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have attended regularly by night or by day every session of this House devoted to the special purpose of considering pension cases on the Private Calendar. I have never taken any part in the discussion of a single case, and I have never taken any part in the discussion of a single case, and for the reason more especially that I felt anxious to dispose of this large and increasing Calendar. Listening from time to time to the debates which have been had in this House upon this subject, I have come to learn that there are certain practical difficulties in the way of passing these bills; and my object now in detaining the House for a few moments is to make, if possible, some practical suggestions by which we may avoid waste of time in debating every single bill that

Some gentlemen oppose the granting of these pensions upon the ground that we ought to enact some general law which would cover all these particular cases. But so long as it is the policy of the Government to pension only those who are injured while in the service of their country, you can never enact a general law which will do entire justice to all claimants. You may possibly diminish to a certain extent the number of cases which will come before us for relief, but you can never drive from the Halls of Congress a meritorious, equitable class of claimants upon the bounty of their country by reason of services which they rendered during the rebellion. Therefore that mode of getting rid of this large number of cases which we are called upon from day to day to consider will be found in any event a most inadequate remedy.

Again, I find that some of the bills which are reported by the committee pension from the date of the act; others pension from the date when the supposed disability accrued. Other bills fix the rate date when the supposed disability accrued. Other bills fix the rate of pension; others simply put the claimant upon the list as entitled to a pension, leaving the Pension Bureau to rate his disability.

I desire to say that this system of reporting pension claims and granting relief to pensioners will inevitably produce inequality; and I have taken this occasion especially to call the attention of the House for the purpose of suggesting some mode by which we may do entire justice to the pensioner and avoid the delay which debate necessarily occasions. By fixing the rate of pension by a special bill we tend to do injustice to the great mass of pensioners who are now receiving pensions.

we tend to do injustice to the great mass of pensioners who are now receiving pensions.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. I rise to a question of order. What is the gentleman discussing? If he has a special bill before the House to meet this matter, we are ready to hear discussion when that bill is before the House. We have heard discussion about supposable bills several successive evenings and the debate upon them has taken up all of the time which was intended to be devoted to these special pension cases. If the gentleman will get the House to take up his bill, then it will be proper to discuss it; but I now suggest as a point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the bill before the House.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will be patient for a moment. My voice has not been heard a tenth part of the time that his has in discussion upon this floor.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. Then it has been heard but little.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I am vindicating the rights of the pensioner as a creditor of this Government. I propose if he receives his pension to pay him off in good, sound, solid money. [Laughter.] If the gentleman desires to know my purpose in discussing this question, it is that we may come to some agreement by which we may sup-tion, it is that we may come to some agreement by which we may support the principles—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that discussion should be confined to the bill now pending.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman from Indiana had listened to the amendment which was offered he would have seen I am discussing the question before the House for consideration. The am discussing the question before the House for consideration. The amendment proposes to put this claimant on the pension-roll with out fixing the rate of pension and without giving him any back pay; and the suggestion I was making to the House was in the direction of the support of that amendment for the purpose of agreeing, if possible, on some plan by which we may get rid of the risk of inequality which is apparent in these several reports.

Mr. GODSHALK. Mr. Chairman, I understood the debate was

The CHAIRMAN. That limitation of debate applied only to the bill then pending, which has been disposed of. It has no reference to the bill now pending. There is no limit to debate on the other cases coming up for consideration.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I repeat, sir, we have before us now a case which strikes at arrears as well as the rate of disability. My plan, therefore, of suggestion to this House is simply this: that in all bills we should agree to put the pensioner on the pension-roll and leave the Department to fix the rate of disability, and if it be desirable at all to relieve these pensioners or in other words to cover a able at all to relieve these pensioners, or, in other words, to cover a period of time of disability which would not otherwise be covered, do that by a general law, as you paid arrears of pension to the regular pensioners of this Government. You will do justice, then, to this class of pensioners and put them on an equality with those already pensioned under existing laws. But wherever we attempt to fix the rate of disability in one case and omit it in another, we produce inerate of disability in one case and omit it in another, we produce inequality. There is no standard by which you can judge of the disability as well as those engaged in the business and appointed by law for the express purpose. Therefore we will avoid delay if the House can agree to a proposition of this kind. If an amendment like that which has been offered to this bill shall be made in all cases where the rate of pension is fixed by the act, we can proceed to business then without this delay.

I trust there is no man in this House who is not a friend of the soldier and disposed to give relief wherever he furnishes equitable

And in reply to my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. Bragg,] who has treated this question as though we were before the Pension Bureau to establish a rate of pension under existing laws, let me say if that were our standard there would be no occasion for anybody to come to Congress for relief. We are here to relieve those who furnish equitable grounds for relief, who appeal to our judgment, who appeal to the equities of the case, because the law does not relieve the class which we are striving to relieve by granting independent pensions.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My point of order is that the gentleman is out of order in discussing a bill that is not before the committee. I wish to say further in this connection that those who are the best friends of the soldier on this floor will manifest their friendship by making brief speeches, because there are a great many of these pension bills to be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has yielded the floor, as the Chair understands.

understands.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. Before the gentleman sits down, I should like to ask him a single question. He referred to "good, solid money." I would like to ask him what he means by that. Does he refer to greenbacks? If he means that-

Mr. BRAGG. I rise to a point of order.
Mr. DE LA MATYR. I say if the gentleman means that greenbacks are not good, solid money, it is a well-known fact that this Government has been paying off its soldiers in that dishonest money, and I want to know if the gentleman favors that.

Mr. BRAGG. I rise to a point of order.
Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I think that the silver dollar of 412½ grains is pretty solid money.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks all this discussion is out of

Mr. KLOTZ. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a very few words in reference to this bill. I simply want to state that this is a gentleman of my own town. I know him and his family very well. I have no objection to limiting the granting of the pension so that it shall begin from the time of the passage of the bill, and if that is the rule of the House in these cases I shall be content, but I do wish to say in response to remarks that have been made upon this floor that this man is worthy and deserving and very much in need of the money which is due to himself by the Government. There is testimony to show that this young man sent his money over and over again to his parents, and five letters have been produced before the committee to show that fact. The party, the recipient of this pension as I have already said, is old and deserving, and I know him to be worthy, and I hope the pension will be granted.

Mr. HUBBELL. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, in charge of this bill, a question. It appears from the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bragg] that the evidence on file in the Pension Office shows the father who asks relief in this case received for his labor for two years immediately suclief in this case received for his labor for two years immediately succeeding his son's death the sum of about $1,000 in money. I wish to ask the gentleman if that fact was in evidence before the committee when this bill was framed?

Mr. COFFROTH. There was no evidence before the committee at that time in support of that fact.

Mr. HUBBELL. I wish to ask another question. Is it the custom of the sub-committees making up these reports to apply to the Commissioner of Pensions for such information as he may have on file touching the case?

Mr. COFFROTH. The custom is always to go to the Pension Office and obtain all the papers on file in the case.

Mr. HUBBELL. How, then, does it happen, if all the papers in the case were before the committee, that the gentleman from Wisconsin represents this man as having received nearly $1,000 for the two years' labor, which evidence he obtained from the Pension Office, and which appears not to have come into the possession of the Committee on

Pensions 7

Mr. COFFROTH. The reason is this, that sometimes the Pension Department has the evidence of detectives who have been sent out Department has the evidence of detectives who have been sent out to look into the case, and those papers are not sent to the committee. For instance, if a detective had been sent out to investigate this case, in all probability that testimony would not be sent to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, because it would show the names of the parties who gave the intelligence on which the Department acted. The policy of the Department has been of course to keep the names of such parties secret for the public interest.

Mr. HUBBELL. Then another question. I wish to ask if the gentleman had had that testimony before him at the time this bill was reported, would he have favorably reported the bill for this relief?

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Let me say to the gentleman from Michigan—

Mr. COFFROTH. I desire to answer the question of the gentle-man myself. I state this, if the gentleman will hear me: that in this ase the father of this man, the recipient of the pension, is very poor. At the time his son was killed there was some difficulty or dispute about his dependence. That he is dependent now, there is no question. If I now remember the evidence correctly, he had been disabled from work some time after his son's death. Therefore we come down to that period, and under the well-settled principles of law in Pennsylvain that we is heard to set the period of the pennsylvaint that we have the well-settled principles of law in Pennsylvaint that we have the period of the pennsylvaint that the pennsylvaint that the period of the pennsylvaint that sylvania, that a son is bound to support his parents if living, and the sylvania, that a son is bound to support his parents it living, and the son having given his life to his country, and the only son he had who, if he had lived, would have given support to his parents—I say under that principle of the law of Pennsylvania, I reported this bill in favor of his pension.

Mr. BRAGG. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania claim that the Government should support him now?

Mr. CONFROUTH. Containly, for the reason I have stated.

Mr. COFFROTH. Certainly, for the reason I have stated.
Mr. BRAGG. I understand the gentleman to say that under the laws of Pennsylvania this man—
Mr. COFFROTH. If the gentleman is going to make objection to this bill simply on the ground that this man is a Pennsylvanian, I wish to state that that is the kind of balderdash that he generally was in opposition to pension cases.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman has entirely misunderstood me. I was proceeding to ask him if the Committee on Invalid Pensions claim that because of the law of Pennsylvania which he cites, that the son is required to support the parents, the Government should

Mr. COFFROTH. I do say so; because the son's life was given for his country and in the service of his country, and on account of that—his parents being without that support which they would have been entitled to under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania—therefore I hold that the Government should recompense them for that

Mr. HUBBELL. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania another question. I want to get at the theory upon which this bill was favorably reported. Now, I understand that the pension is recommended because the son served in the Army and was killed, and after a while the father became destitute, and hence he has a claim upon the Government?

Mr. COFFROTH. And because while he was in the Army he sent his money home to support his parents and did help to support them; and after they lost this support his father was compelled to go to work and by labor to support himself and keep the family from starv-

Mr. WILSON. I do not intend to delay the Committee of the Whole by any discussion. But I desire to submit a proposition which I think would solve some of the trouble and difficulty we have head to the construction. heretofore. I understand there has been a doubt as to the construction of the language used in this bill. I understand that the authority given by this House in any bill we may pass to the Commissioner of Pensions to grant the arrearages of pension enables him to do so in any meritorious case. I therefore propose after the words "pensionin the substitute of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. PRES-COTT,] to insert these words:

With right to arrears of pension.

Then if it be a case that deserves arrears the Commissioner can give

Mr. STONE. The Commissioner of Pensions has distinctly decided, since the last evening which we devoted to pension bills, that even if the words "including the arrears of pension act" should be added he would not grant the arrears until the general act passed.

Mr. COFFROTH. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. STONE. That is what the Commissioner stated to me, and he told me his letter to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

sions would take that position.

Mr. COFFROTH. If the law which we pass contains any words which would enable the Commissioner of Pensions to grant arrears, he will do so.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman who has this bill in charge, who has Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman who has this bill in charge, who has a direct, immediate interest in it, whose constituent this man is, is willing to accept the substitute proposed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Prescott.] Now I think, that being the case, it is a work of supererogation and a gratuitous kindness on the part of the gentlemen to try to do more for that man than the Representative who introduced the bill desires to do for his own constituent. To make such attempts only delays matters and does not secure the pension.

Mr. BROWNE. I have a proposition to make, and that is, that we

Mr. WILSON. I offer this amendment not with reference to this case particularly, but to cover that large class of cases where arrears are due. But if the gentleman who offers this bill is content with the substitute, I am satisfied.

Mr. VAN AERNAM. I wish to call the attention of the committee Mr. VAN AERNAM. I wish to call the attention of the committee to this fact, that if the amendment just proposed by my colleague from New York be passed it would carry a pension of $20 a month; whereas the bill that has been introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania carries $8 per month on its face. The committee will understand this, that soldiers are paid according to rank and pensions are paid in the same way. The pension of a captain or of one dependent on a captain is $20 a month. In the case of enlisted men the amount of pension is $8 per month. That is the amount fixed by this bill, and the substitute of the gentleman from New York carries $20 a month with it.

a month with it.

Mr. BAYNE. That is an improvement.

Mr. BRAGG. It appears to me that the Pension Committee themselves must have considered this a very dubious case; because if this man be entitled to a pension at all, he is entitled to a captain's pension of $20 a month on account of his son who was killed in the servsion of $20 a month on account of his son who was killed in the service. I think if there is any right to a pension we should grant the pension the party would be entitled to. There must have been some doubt in the minds of the committee or they would not leave the pension in this case at $8 a month.

Mr. COFFROTH. The committee fixed the pension at $8 because we give it as a gratuity to this party. If the gentleman from Wisconsin knew the law he would not make that objection.

Mr. BRAGG. The law which governs the Pensions Committee is like the law of necessity.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia. [Mr. WILSON.]

tleman from West Virginia, [Mr. Wilson.]

Mr. WILSON. I withdraw that amendment because the substitute of the gentleman from New York is said to be satisfactory to the gentleman who has introduced the bill.

The question being taken on Mr. PRESCOTT's substitute, it was adopted. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill as amended, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. BRAGG. Upon that question I call for a vote.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 11. So (further count not being called for) the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

HARRY E. WILLIAMS.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3262) granting a pension to Harry E. Williams; reported by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as Ioliows:

Bett enacted, dc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Harry E. Williams, late hospital-steward of the One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay him a pension from the 26th day of January, A. D. 1863, the date of his discharge, at the rate allowed by existing laws to disabled private soldiers of the late war of the rebellion, for injuries sustained and disability incurred by the said Harry E. Williams while in the service of the United States, and in the line of his duty in the said war of the rebellion.

The recent was read as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

It is in evidence that the claimant was mustered into the service of the United States on or about the 13th day of September, 1862, as a hospital steward in the One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers in the war of 1861, and was honorably discharged at Washington, District of Columbia, on or about the 26th day of January, 1863, and that while in the line of his duty in the service aforesaid he was ruptured, to wit, on the 13th day of December, 1862, while assisting to erect hospital tents on the flats opposite Fredericksburgh, Virginia.

It is also in evidence that he filed an application in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions for an invalid pension on account of said injuries, and that the same was rejected on the ground that the evidence was not sufficient under the act to establish the fact that the injuries were contracted while in the service of the United States.

United States.

In support of his application for relief, the claimant submits the following testimony, to wit: First, a transcript from records of the Surgeon-General's Office, War Department, duly authenticated, as follows:

"It appears, from the records filed in this office, that Harry E. Williams, hospital-steward, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, was admitted to Carver Government hospital, Washington, District of Columbia, December 21, 1862, with hernia, and discharged from service January 28, 1863."

Also the certificate of W. H. Mussey, medical inspector, United States Army, see follows:

Also the certificate of the Also the carefully examined the said Harry E. Williams, and find him incapable of performing the duties of a soldier, because of double inguinal hernia, said to have been caused in the service of the United States."

Also the certificate of Examining Surgeon T. S. Morrison, dated June 3, 1877, to hernia, said to have been caused in the service of the United States."

Also the certificate of Examining Surgeon T. S. Morrison, dated June 3, 1877, to wit:

"In my opinion the said Harry E. Williams is incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor, from double hernia.

"Judging from his present condition, and from the evidence before me, it is my belief that the said disability did first originate in the service aforesaid in the line of duty. The disability is permanent. The hernia is of the inguinal variety, quite large on the left side, very slight on the right side."

"The following is the testimony of E. Cornell Esten, M. D., late assistant surgeon One hundred and thirty-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers, in the form of affidavit: The witness swears that he was—

"Personally acquainted with Harry E. Williams, late hospital-steward of One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, previous to and at the time of his enlistment, and that to all appearances he was a sound and healthy man and free from hernia, and that if hernia had existed he would have known of it; that the said hernia was contracted by the said Harry E. Williams by heavy lifting while assisting to put up tents for the sick, on or about the 12th day of December, 1862, opposite Frederick sburgh, in the State of Virginia, and that he was incapacitated from further duty."

The following testimony in support of the claimant's application for relief is in the form of an affidavit before Charles E. Pancoast, a justice of the peace, Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, of J. Emerson Kent, M. D., a civil surgeon and physician, to wit:

"December and says that he attended and prescribed for said Harry E. Williams delphia, State of Pennsylvania, of J. Emerson Kent, M. D., a civil surgeon and physician, to wit:

"Deposes and says that he attended and prescribed for said Harry E. Williams as follows for the following disability: Rupture in the left groin, (inguinal hernia,) productive of much suffering and unfitting him for manual labor; nor is he at this time capable of taking long walks or engaging in any laborious pursuit. There was also a slight rupture on the right side, which led me to order the use of a double truss. The deponent further states under oath that he was the family physician of the said Harry E. Williams, and had known him from boyhood, and that prior to his enlistment in the military service of the United States, on or about the 13th day of September, 1862, the claimant's general health was good, having had no sickness of any kind subsequent to the diseases incident to childhood. At the time of his entry into the military service of the Government he was in good health and free from rupture and all other physical weaknesses or defects."

In the opinion of the committee the foregoing evidence is sufficient to entitle the claimant to relief, and the application for a pension before the Pension Office should not have been rejected on the evidence furnished by the claimant. The committee, therefore, return the bill to the House, and recommend the passage of the same.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I offer the substitute which I send to the desk.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I offer the substitute which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:
That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harry E. Williams, late hospital-steward of the One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. BRAGG. I notice that the evidence in this case, as stated by the report, like the evidence in all the cases, is very cumulative and strong on the immaterial points and wondrously weak on the material

There is an immense pile of evidence upon the point that the man had hernia; that is clear; there is no dispute about it. But every man who has hernia is not entitled to a pension. It must be necessarily shown, and by competent evidence, that the hernia was contracted while the man was in the service and in the line of his duty.

while the man was in the service and in the line of his duty.

Now, it is within the knowledge of every man who was ever in the service of the United States, or who ever saw men in the military service and became familiar with them, that in the cases of a large number of enlisted men hernia developed in a very few weeks, and in cases that no one had ever suspected had hernia before they reached the field. While they were in camp at home, and were very patriotic, living on soft bread and the fat of the land, being kissed by the girls and called heroes by everybody, they did not have hernia. But when they crossed the river, if they came this way, and went out on picket duty in sleet and snow and mud up to their knees, and went without anything to eat for perhaps twenty-four hours, and was shot at every five minutes, they were very liable to discover that they had hernia. They disclosed what they had not disclosed before, that they were disabled because of hernia, and then they were sent to the hospital, inspected, and discharged. inspected, and discharged.

Now, this man enlisted as a hospital steward. His hernia is alleged to have been caused by his exertions in putting up a tent at Fredericksburgh, Virginia, on the 12th of December, 1862, if I recollect rightly. The man furnishes evidence to show that it was there that he rightly. The man furnishes evidence to show that it was there that he suffered from this rupture, the evidence of the surgeon of his regiment. Now, that would be good evidence prima facie; and upon the record it looks as if it was wondrously good evidence. But when you turn to the military record of that regiment you find that the surgeon was not there at that time. How good is his evidence, then? The military record shows that Dr. E. C. Esten—he is the one who certifies in this case, and whose testimony is corroborative of the averment of the claimant as to the origin of hernia; though the testimony of this surgeon is unsatisfactory—the monthly return of the field and staff of that regiment for December, 1862, states that the assistant surgeon, Esten, is absent without leave. He was absent from his post during the very month when he certifies that from his personal knowledge this man received the rupture in putting up the hospital tent.

What further? The record shows that this surgeon, who was absent without leave, was discharged from the service December 13, 1862, which was the next day after this rupture occurred; that is, the man was discharged the very day after he certifies his knowledge of the happening of this thing. Now, who are entitled to certify in a case like this? The field and the staff are kept upon a separate roll, and that roll is kept by the adjutant, not by the doctor.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG]

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bragg] allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. BRAGG. Certainly.
Mr. BAYNE. Does the record show that Dr. Esten was absent?
Mr. BRAGG. Absent without leave during the month of December, and he was discharged December 13, 1862.

Mr. BAYNE. I did not know that any such case as this was here at all. But my recollection is very greatly at fault if this surgeon was absent during that month. I commanded that regiment myself. I did not know that such an application as this was here in behalf of

I did not know that such an application as this was here in behalf of anybody. But my impression is very strong that Dr. Esten was with the regiment during the month of December, 1862.

Mr. BRAGG. Well, I have given what appears upon the records in the Pension Office.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] if he would put his impression against the record evidence in the Pension Office?

Mr. BAYNE. I have no very great faith in record evidence.
Mr. McMILLIN. It is generally considered as the best evidence.
Mr. BAYNE. And especially about the 13th day of December, 1862, when the Army of the Potomac, including the One hundred and thirty-sixth Pennsylvania Regiment and every other regiment, was in a demoralized condition.

Mr. BRAGG. I would inquire of Colonel BAYNE if he would not take the report of his adjutant as to who was absent? The history of the regiment shows that the doctor was absent without leave.

Mr. BAYNE. Well, the adjutant of that regiment was a very reli-

Mr. WARD. It was my duty as well as my pleasure to introduce this bill and to take some pains to ascertain the facts in regard to it. The difficulty about the matter is not that the claimant was not a meritorious soldier and did not serve faithfully, but that by reason of the apparent cloud upon the record in regard to this surgeon, the claimant was prevented from making out the strict technical proof required by the Department. That is the difficulty the man met with in the Department, and that is the reason that his claim for a pension did not get through.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion which I overlooked ?

Mr. WARD. Certainly.
Mr. BRAGG. The return of the field and staff of the regiment also showed that this same hospital-steward was absent without leave.

Mr. WARD. That is also a difficulty which arose in the case, and is explained by the statement of my colleague [Mr. BAYNE] that at the time when these alleged absences took place the regiment, and indeed the whole corps, were in a state which prevented a correct record of the movement and location of the troops from being kept. The difficulty at the Pension Office was that the surgical evidence required to make out this claim of disability could not be received because Surgeon Esten was reported on the records as being absent without leave. Now this physician makes affidavit, stating specifically how the injury occurred, and that the man was a healthy man previously. The applicant also makes affidavit. There have also been submitted to the committee and read here from the Clerk's desk affidavits showing the condition of this man before he went into the Army and immediately after he left it, corroborating his own evidence and that of the

Now I submit that even admitting the surgeon was absent without leave, that simple fact should not deprive this man, otherwise worthy, of the pension to which he is entitled, nor should he be required to accomplish what is impossible by furnishing the particular form of evidence required by the Department. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" The substitute of Mr. Prescott was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JAMES T. CHRISTIAN.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire unanimous consent of the House to have taken up House bill No. 1655, granting a pension to James T. Christian. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] When I have made a statement I am sure that gentlemen will not object. Every case thus far reached on this Calendar, except two, has come from Pennsylvania. We find no fault with that; but here is a man who is now lying on his bed, having been confined there for the last six months. He was pensioned ing been confined there for the last six months. He was pensioned by reason of disability incurred during the Mexican war, and drew a pension up to the beginning of the last war. Then he threw aside his pension certificate and entered the service from the State of lowa.

Mr. COFFROTH. I rise to a point of order. There is nothing before the House.

Mr. THOMAS. I am simply making an explanation; and I think the gentleman-

Mr. COFFROTH. Well, there is no use in taking up time.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania raise a point of order?

Mr. COFFROTH. Yes, sir. Until the case is taken up the gentleman has no right to discuss it.

Mr. THOMAS. I am simply making an explanation.

Mr. COFFROTH. I object to any debate until the case is taken up.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. COFFROTH. If it is the wish of the House that cases shall be taken up upon the motion of particular gentlemen, alternating one from the other side of the House with one from this, I shall have no

Mr. THOMAS. Inasmuch as every case thus far passed is from the Mr. THOMAS. Inasmuch as every case thus far passed is from the State of Pennsylvania, except two—one from Kentucky and one from Indiana—we will see that the next bill is passed by the vote of a quorum.

Mr. COFFROTH. The gentleman is in error when he says that all the cases thus far are from Pennsylvania.

Mr. THOMAS. I say that so far as I recollect, with the exception of two cases, every bill passed comes from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COFFROTH. There have been cases from Maryland and West Virginia, as well as Pennsylvania; and the very next two cases are from Maryland. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

MARGARET E. WEST.

The next bill on the Private Calendar, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was the bill (H. R. No. 3263) granting a pension to Margaret E. West.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Margaret E. West, widow of Robert M. West, late colonel of the Fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Cavalry, and pay her a pension for herself and her two children under sixteen years of age from and after the date of the death of the said Robert M. West, at the rate of pensions for widows of deceased captains in the Army who were killed while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty in the late war of the rehellion.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3263) granting a pension to Margaret E. West, widow of Robert M. West, late colonel of the Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to submit the following report:

A bill similar to the present one was passed by the House of Representatives in the Forty-fourth Congress, on February 4, 1876.

A reference to the petition of the claimant, supported by affidavits, and to the certificates and testimonials thereto appended, (Mis. Doc. No. 44, first session Forty-fourth Congress,) discloses the fact that Colonel West's record for military service during the late rebellion was conspicuous for marked attention to his duty in camp and on the field, earning frequent promotions and honorable mention in many reports from commanding generals.

In 1868, in a campaign on the frontier against the Indians, he was subjected to hardships and exposures of the most extreme character. These undermined a naturally iron constitution, and with his earlier experience in the malarial swamps of the Peninsula during the rebellion were the ultimate cause of his death, and this conclusion seems to be fully borne out by the records. Colonel West's death occurred at the house of a private citizen near Fort Arbuckle, and entirely away from a surgeon or other medical attendance.

For these reasons the proper technical medical evidence cannot be obtained to bring the case within the strict requirements of the rules of the Pension Department.

In view of the facts above stated, the committee recommend the passage of the

In view of the facts above stated, the committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, what are the records before the committee which, in the language of the report, seem to bear out the report?

Mr. COFFROTH. If the gentleman had been in the committee and seen the records there-

Mr. BRAGG. I supposed the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions would be able to answer a simple question.

Mr. COFFROTH. Well, the records bear out the report.

all I have to say.

Mr. BRAGG. Then I propose to say, Mr. Chairman, if I can get no better answer, that there are no such records in this case; and I will state why

Mr. COFFROTH, (exhibiting papers.) Here is the proof.
Mr. BRAGG. The claimant in this case has never applied at the Pension Office for a pension. There are no records in this case at the Pension Office. The claimant has come to Congress and applied to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions instead of going to the Commissioner of Pensions. There has been no application at the Pension Office, and there are no proofs.

Mr. COFFROTH. Here are the proofs.

Mr. BRAGG. I have here a certificate of the Pension Office showing that no claim has ever been filed.

Mr. COFFROTH. It may be that no claim was filed there; but here is the proof from the War Department, proof which was before the committee the committee.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to ask whether we are called upon to grant a pension in a case which has never been before the Pension Office.

Mr. COFFROTH. Yes; when a party comesto the conclusion that he cannot come within the strict rule as laid down by the Pension Office, the Committee on Invalid Pensions has acted upon the application; but wherever the party has applied at the Pension Office, we require that the case shall be disposed of there before considering it in our committee.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I wish to offer a substitute for the pending bill. and will call attention to the fact that by the substitute the rate of pension is that of a colonel, while the bill as introduced provides only for that of a captain. I do not wish the House to think I am taking advantage of them by introducing a substitute in that regard without making this statement.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:
That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret E. West, widow of Robert M. West, late colonel of the Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry.

Mr. DUNNELL. I certainly hope the committee will seriously consider the fact which has been just disclosed, that we are asked to pass upon a pension case that has never been in the Pension Office.

to pass upon a pension case that has never been in the Pension Office.

That is, again, something new in our legislation this winter.

Mr. COFFROTH. I will state it passed at the last Congress.

Mr. DUNNELL. I say the thing never occurred before.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes; this same bill passed during the last Congress.

Mr. DUNNELL. It passed then without that fact being disclosed.

Now, you will at once see, Mr. Chairman, where it will land us. If office, we shall be flooded with applications; and Congress will be imposed upon in a thousand different ways. I have had men write to me asking whether I would introduce a bill into Congress in their behalf. I have never thought of any other reply than this: Have you applied for a pension in the Pension Office; and, if you have, has your case been rejected?

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman from Minnesota allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. DUNNELL. I understand in the Senate they have an inflexible rule not to consider a case which has not been in the Pension Office.

Mr. TAYLOR. We have adopted that rule in the Committee on Invalid Pensions; but it was adopted since this bill was considered in that committee and reported favorably.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have said but a very few words in all these discussions, although I have been here during all the sessions for the purpose of considering these pension cases.

Mr. COFFROTH. Let me say to the gentleman from Minnesota that when the Committee on Invalid Pensions commenced its work that when the Committee on Invalid Pensions commenced its work we found that certain bills had passed during the Forty-fifth Congress, and no rule was established then in that committee that applications should be first determined in the Pension Department. We accepted the precedent set by the Forty-fourth Congress, and in cases where bills had passed the House we just barely looked at the proof, read the report, and, if proper, adopted the report of a previous Congress, because it had been once before indorsed and reported favorably by the Invalid Pensions Committee. That accounts for the presence of this case on the Calendar.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. As I understand it, this is the case of a widow seeking to get a pension which her deceased husband had in his lifetime.

Mr. WARD. No, that is not it.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Whether or not that is true, as I understand it, it is a case where, as a matter of law, she would not get a pension at the Pension Office; and so there was not the slightest use of her going there, because if she did the Pension Office would inform her she could not under the law receive a pension even if the facts were as she claimed them to be.

Mr. WARD. Mr. Chairman, this claim was not made to the Pension Office simply because there would be no earthly use in making it there. The widow could not have made out any case which would have received favorable consideration from that office. It devolves now upon Congress—the only place to which she can make her appeal for herself and her children—to say whether or not it will grant this pension. There never was a pensioner in the service of this country who deserves more for his gallantry and his faithfulness than this man. The House in the Forty-fourth Congress passed this bill and the Pension Committee in the Forty-fifth Congress made a favorable report, but it failed for want of action in the Senate.

The circumstances of the case as set out in the report are these: This Lieutenant West, after having served faithfully in the campaigns of the late war and after having incurred a disease in the swamps of the Peninsula, was transferred, when the war closed, to the Indian frontier; and there, as the documents show, engaged in war against the Indians. In the rebellion he distinguished himself by signal gallantry, receiving frequent promotions, receiving honorable mention in Bates's History of the War, and on every field, in every battle, wherever duty called him, either in the camp or in the field, he discharged his duty in a manner to call forth the highest encomiums of his officers. When the late war closed, he went to the Indian frontier, as I have already stated, and during the hardships of service the disease which he had contracted in the swamps of the Peninsula was accelerated and he was taken down, forced to leave the service, and there on the frontier, within three months after he left it, in the house of a private citizen, beyond the reach of any one to gather evidence, beyond the reach of any doctor to certify to his condition and the circumstances of his death, he died alone in the wilderness, away from his wife and his children and away from every avenue of evidence such as the Pension Office would require, even if the claim could be brought in the first instance, so as to entitle him to consideration.

be brought in the first instance, so as to entitle him to consideration. The commanding officer at the neighboring fort, as soon as the information was conveyed there of his death, by a general order, published in the fort, recognized his eminent service and expressed regret because of his death. And now, Mr. Chairman, I submit to this House, after that history, which is borne out here by the testimony, showing that this gentleman had served in two wars for his country with fidelity, and incurred the disease that brought on his death, whether his widow and children shall be driven from this door, the whether his widow and children shall be driven from this door, the only door that is open to them from which to obtain the small pittance of bounty which the pension laws allow them to obtain?

The CHAIRMAN. The question will first be taken upon the substitute.

The substitute was adopted.

The bill was then laid aside, to be reported to the House.

MRS. MARY B. DALLAS.

The next bill on the Calendar, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was the bill (H. R. No. 271) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary B. Dallas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Mary B. Dallas, widow of Commodore Alexander James Dallas, late of the United States Navy, deceased, and restore her pension to the amount orginally granted, namely, $50 per month.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The applicant is the widow of the late Commodore Alexander J. Dallas, of the United States Navy, who died in active service in the year 1844, in the command of the Pacific squadron. He entered the naval service in the year 1805, and during the thirty-nine years of his brilliant service he received but nine months leave of absence, making an almost continuous service of over thirty-eight years. He was in several engagements during the war of 1812, firing the first belligerent gun in that contest in the action with the Little Belt. He was a commanding officer under Decatur in the Algerine war, and subsequently was employed in the service against the pirates infesting the southern coast. As commanding officer of the West India squadron he was prominent in affording aid to the Army in the protracted Indian war with the Seminoles in Florida, receiving the thanks of General Winfield Scott for his services. By his tact and judgment he did much in composing the rising difficulties between the United States and the Republic of Mexico in the year 1836, which averted the war that subsequently occurred. Commodore Dallas was the son of the late Hon. Alexander J. Dallas, Secretary of the Treasury under President Madison, and the elder brother of the late Vice-President of the United States, Hon. George M. Dallas.

Mrs. Dallas represents on the pension-roll of the United States the only one bearing the name of this distinguished husband in 1844, at the rate of $50 a month, until 1879, when her pension, by law, was reduced to $30 a month. The bill proposes to restore her pension to $50 a month, the sum the Government originally granted her. She informs your honorable body in her petition that she is advanced in years, and her pension is her only means of support; that she has no property. In consideration, therefore, of the distinguished services rendered to the country by her late husband, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside, to be favorably reported to the House.

SALLY M. BUCHANAN.

The next bill on the Calendar, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was the bill (H. R. No. 3292) granting a pension to Sally M. Buchanan, widow of General Robert C. Buchanan, United States

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sally M. Buchanan, widow of the late Robert C. Buchanan, colonel and brevet major-general in the United States Army, her pension to be $50 per month and to date from the time of the death of the said General Buchanan, it being November 28, 1878.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

That the memorialist in her petition filed in this case substantially sets forth the military history of the said Robert C. Buchanan, and the same will be briefly mentioned in this report to show the grounds upon which the favorable action of this committee is based: The said Robert C. Buchanan entered the Army of the United States, as brevet second lieutenant, on the 1st day of July, 1830, being attached to the Fourth Infantry, ordered to Fort Crawford, Prairie Du Chien, and served with it in and until the close of the "Black Hawk war;" was in command of the gunboats on the Wisconsin River on the night of the capture of Black Hawk; was present at the making of the treaty of General Scott with Keokuk, by which large portions of what is now Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota were ceded to the United States; that he accompanied his regiment as its adjutant to Florida, and in 1838 to Fort Cass, in Tennessee, to assist in removing the Cherokees to Fort Gibson, Arkansas; and, in command of his company as its captain, again served in Florida, and until the close of the war; that in 1844 he was ordered to Louisiana, where his regiment, with the Third Infantry and the Second Dragoons, formed the "army of observation;" that in July, 1845, he proceeded with his regiment to Corpus Christi, Texas, where they formed the "army of occupation;" that he served with the troops under General Taylor until after the capture of the city of Monterey, when, at the request of the officers of the Maryland and District of Columbia Volunteers, he was assigned to the command of those troops, and commanded them until they were discharged at Tampico, Mexico, in May, 1847; that he then rejoined his regiment, and was assigned its junior major, and served in that capacity until after the capture of the City of Mexico; that in January, 1848, that he then rejoined his regiment, and was assigned to the command of those troops, and commanded them until they were discharged at Tampico, Mexico, in May, 1847; that he then signed to duty as assistant provost-marshal-general of the State of New Jersey, until the fall of 1864, when he was ordered to New Orleans to command his regiment in the department of the Gulf; in the following year he was placed on duty at Washington, under the immediate command of the then Secretary of War, E. M. Stanton; and in the latter part of 1867 was ordered to New Orleans to command the district of Louisiana, with his brevet rank of brigadier-general; and in March, 1868, succeeded General Hancock in the command of the fifth reconstruction district, with his brevet rank of major-general, until after the State of Louisiana was admitted into the Union; he then organized the department of Louisiana, which he commanded, after the death of General Rousseau, until April, 1869, when he was ordered with his command to Fort Wayne; and on the 31st day of December, 1870, at his own request, after a service of more than forty years, he was placed upon the retired list, with the rank of colonel, brevet major-general. Your committee, in view of the above-recited honorable and distinguished services rendered by the said Robert C. Buchanan, unanimously recommend the passage of the bill which they now report.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I move to amend by striking out all after the word "Army" in line 8.

Mr. TALBOTT. I hope the gentleman from New York will not insist upon his amendment.

Mr. COFFROTH. This same clause is contained in all bills of this character reported from the committee.

Mr. BRAGG. In addition to what has been said by the historian of the Committee on Pensions in that report in reference to the military services of General Buchanan, I wish to say that he was a distinguished and able soldier and for many years stood high in the Army of the United States both in the regular service and in the volunteer army in the late war. If any single person of all those mentioned in these reports of the Committee on Pensions is entitled to a pension, certainly the ridew of Committee on Pensions is entitled to a pension, certainly the ridew of Committee on Pensions is entitled to a pension, certainly the ridew of Committee on Pensions is entitled to a pension, certainly the ridew of Committee on Pensions is entitled to a pension, certainly the ridew of Committee on Pensions is entitled to a pension, certainly the ridew of Committee on Pensions is entitled to a pension. tainly the widow of General Buchanan ought to be; but I desire to suggest to the committee, so that we may proceed with our eyes wide open, that we will in the passage of this bill establish a precedent about which we ought to be very careful. We have already established a precedent that a woman who gets killed while baking bread is entitled to a pension. We have also established the precedent, in a bill pessed to a pincht that if a man get a second his careful. a bill passed to night, that if a man gets poor and his son was killed in the service, he is entitled to receive a pension. If the man has the hernia he is entitled to a pension. We have opened the door to a great many classes, but now it is proposed to open it to a class that will be ever present with us. We are asked to establish the precedent here by which the wives of officers on the retired list who draw 75 per cent. of their full pay during their entire lives are upon death of their husbands to be entitled to receive a pension independently of the question whether these widows or children are dependent or otherwise.

I wish to state, Mr. Chairman, that I have no special objection to this bill, but I simply desire in what I say to point out and have the House to know what we are doing and what we are asked to do. There has never been a case, so far as I am aware, where these families of officers upon the retired list claimed to be entitled to a pension, and if we are going to establish the precedent now, let us do it knowingly and make the law so that all may get the benefit of it.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Chairman, this bill for the relief of this lady was introduced by my colleague, [Mr. McLane,] who was unable to be present to-night, and requested me to take charge of it if there was any trouble in reference to the passage of it—which I am sure he did not apprehend. After reading this report I myself believed that there could be no trouble. This officer served his country faithfully for forty years and six months. He had gone through, in the interest of his country and for the protection of its honor, five or six different wars, in which he served gallantly. He died in 1878, after having been on the retired list only for about eight years; and now his widow sake this relief of Congress merely as an ext of instinct to herealf and asks this relief of Congress, merely as an act of justice to herself and to the memory of this gallant officer and soldier. He served with honor in the Florida war, in the Indian wars, in the war with Mexico, and in the war for the preservation of the Union. The report sets forth all of these facts fully and clearly. His military record was without a blemish.

I therefore hope, Mr. Chairman, that in justice to this woman, who is poor, the widow of this officer, that the bill will pass as reported from the Committee on Pensions; and I hope the House will vote down the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York. If the bill passes as reported from the Committee on Pensions, she will get only two years arrearages, as General Buchanan died in 1878. She is entitled to it, and her country ought to give it to her. She is very old, as you may know from the reading of the report.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. What is her age?

Mr. TALBOTT. I cannot give her age exactly; but I understand she is quite aged, and must be, as her husband served for forty years in the Army, and I think she was his only wife.

Mr. THOMAS. When a citizen enters the service of the Government of the United States of the service of the Government of the United States of the service of the Government of the United States of the service of the Government of the United States of the service of the Government of the United States of the service of the Government of the United States of the service of the Government of the United States of the service of the Government of the United States of the service of the grant of the States of the service of the grant of the service of the service of the grant of the service of the grant of the service of t

Mr. THOMAS. When a citizen enters the service of the Government of the United States as an officer of the regular Army, or in the volunteer service, he does so of his own volition. He selects that as the business of his life; and the Government, always liberal to its defenders, pays him amply for his service. This officer, it seems, rendered distinguished service for many years to this country. The record, I apprehend, shows that he has been liberally paid for that service. The record discloses the fact that after a long and eventful service he was retired and remained on the retired list till he was gathered to his fathers. gathered to his fathers.

It is not pretended that there is any legal ground upon which this pension can be granted to his widow. It cannot be claimed that there are any equitable grounds upon which this pension can be granted.

If granted, it is as a gratuity, a free gift by the Government to the widow of a man who served his country and was liberally paid for his

While this country owes the debt it does to honest creditors it seems to me that we ought to hesitate before we go recklessly into the Treasury of the United States and make free gifts of the people's money in this way. I hope, sir, that we will have some regard to the rights of the people as well as to the widow of this distinguished soldier, and that we will guard the Treasury as we should do, and grant pensions only to such parties as are entitled to them either at law or under some rule of equity.

The question being taken on Mr. PRESCOTT's substitute, there were ayes 48, noes 6.

So (further count not being called for) the substitute was adopted. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill, as amended to be reported favorably to the House.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 45, noes 13.
Mr. THOMAS. A quorum has not voted.
Mr. HUMPHREY. I hope the gentleman will not make that point.
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to know who makes the point of order that a quorum has not voted.

Mr. THOMAS. I made the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that a quorum has not voted the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. THOMAS, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Cof-FROTH.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Thomas] that this bill be allowed to go over to be voted on to-morrow when there is a quorum; so that if there is a dispute as to the propriety of its passage it may be voted on in a full House. If that shall be agreed to it will not interrupt the bills that are behind it.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the suggestion of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania a good one, and, so far as I am concerned, I accede to it for the reason that I do not wish to stand in the way of meritorious pension cases.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I am quite aware of that.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be laid aside, to be reported to the House upon the understanding which has just been stated.

MARY MEIGHAN.

The next pension bill upon the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2643) granting a pension to Mary Meighan; reported by Mr. Davis,

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, do., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Meighan, widow of Peter Meighan, late a private in Company F, Twenty-fourth Regiment of United States Infantry.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

That it appears that Peter Meighan enlisted in the United States Infantry September 22, 1851, and contracted rheumatism at Fort Columbus, New York, in line of duty, in March, 1853, and was discharged for disability and pensioned; that when the late war broke out he gave up his pension and enlisted as a private in the Sixteenth United States Infantry, August 11, 1861; that at the expiration of his term of service he re-enlisted, and again re-enlisted in February, 1867, and was discharged for disability in March, 1869; and he obtained a pension which was increased $50 per month.

He died of rheumatism, August 29, 1876.

It further appears that from the time of his first enlistment at the outbreak of the civil war to his discharge on account of disability, he served with his regiment in various battles, and was regarded by his officers as an unusually brave and efficient soldier, and commended to favorable consideration of the Government.

The committee believe that his widow has a most meritorious claim, and report back said bill and recommend its passage.

This bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

THOMAS RILEY.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2474) to increase the pension of Thomas Riley; reported by Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll of the United States the name of Thomas Riley, late a private in Company L, Seventh Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month from and after the 17th day of June, A. D. 1878, deducting therefrom any and all amounts received by him on account of pensions since said date; this pension to be in lieu of the pension now received by said Riley.

The report was read, as follows:

That the said Thomas Riley, referred to in this bill, is shown to be in receipt of $50 per month from the Government of the United States on account of disability. That the act of Congress approved June 17, 1878, provides for the payment of an increased pension, as follows:

"That on and after the passage of this act all soldiers and sailors who have lost either both their hands or both their feet or the sight of both eyes in the service of the United States, shall receive, in lieu of all pensions now paid them by the Government of the United States, and there shall be paid to them, in the same manner as pensions are now paid to such persons, the sum of $72 per month."

That it is in evidence that the said Riley, believing himself entitled under this law to the sum of $72 per month, applied for an increase of pension; that the same was rejected from the fact that—"In the view of the department the claim does not properly come within the provisions of the act of June 17, 1878, for the reason that the applicant has not lost both hands. He has lost a large portion of both hands, and the parts which remain are of but little use to him, but there is no provision in the act of June 17, 1878, for the allowance of a pension of $72 per month to any other persons than such as have absolutely lost both hands or both feet or the sight of both eyes."—Extract from letter from Commissioner Bentley to Thomas Riley, November 28, 1878."

It also appears in evidence that all the fingers of both hands were amputated, with the exception of the right thumb; that the amputation included the heads of the metacarpal bones; that practically both hands have been amputated, excepting the thumb of the right hand, in which there is but slight motion, and which is of little or no use.

It further appears from the evidence and from examination that the said Riley is as helpless, is as utterly unable to attend to his bodily wants, and requires the personal ald and attendance of another person, as he would had he absolutely lost both hands; that he cannot prepare his food, and cannot feed or dress himself. Your committee, believing that the said Riley is equally helpless, and that he requires the same attendance that he would were both hands amputated at the wrist, report back said bill with recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Com-

Mr. WARNER. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions whether or not this case is an exceptional who reports the case.

Mr. COFFROTH. It is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Davis]

Mr. WARNER. Then I address my inquiry to the gentleman from Illinois.

I do not propose to discuss the question whether the pension in this case, or in this class of cases, if there be such a class, should be increased or not. I will admit, if you please, that the pension should be increased. But I make the point, if it should be increased in this be increased. But I make the point, if it should be increased in this case it should be for all who belong to that class. And for one I am opposed to increasing a pension for a single individual when there is a whole class of a hundred, five hundred, or a thousand perhaps, equally meritorious behind whose pensions are not increased. The inquiry therefore which I wish to make is whether on the pensionrolls there are others situated like this pensioner, or is the case so exceptional that it stands alone?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I will say, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Ohio that I regard this as an exceptional case. The amputation of both hands, as shown in the report included the heads of the metacarpal bones; nearly to the wrist of the left hand; the of the metacarpal bones; nearly to the wrist of the left hand; the right hand is taken off, including the head of the metacarpal bone, and merely the thumb is left on the right hand. As stated by the Commissioner in his letter, this thumb is of little use, and has little motion. It is simply a prolongation seemingly of the stump, which is of no earthly use. This pensioner, believing that the law passed June 17, 1878, providing that those who had lost both hands, both feet, or the sight of both eyes should have $72 a month, made application for an increase, being equally helpless with those who have absolutely lost both hands.

If gentlemen will notice the letter of the Commissioner they will perceive that he states that this case does not come within the provision of the general law, because of the fact that the claimant has not absolutely lost both hands, although he has lost his hands except one thumb. As stated in the report, the claimant requires personal assistance at all times. I believe and the committee believe that this man is entitled to this increase of pension the same as are those who have absolutely lost their ten fingers instead of but nine.

Mr. WARNER. I will make no objection to this case, if it stands as an exception and ought to go into this class, and there are no others like it.

Mr. DWIGHT. It seems to me that this case is covered by a general bill which has already passed the Senate and has been reported to this House. As I understand, there are some two hundred and sixty cases that are known to exist where pensioners have lost the use of their limbs, by paralysis for instance, and are therefore as utterly helpless as, and in some cases more so than, those who have had their limbs amputated but have sound, healthy stubs. A bill passed the Senate early this session making provision for all such cases. As I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. Cor-FROTH] that bill has been favorably reported from that committee. It seems to me that this special bill should not pass, but that we should pass that general bill which will cover all these cases.

Mr. BAYNE. It will do no harm to pass this bill.

Mr. COFFROTH. This bill was reported from the committee before the other bill passed the Senate.

Mr. DWIGHT. I know that. But why pass this bill separately?

Why not include all the cases in a general bill?

Mr. HAWK. This case has been favorably reported, why not pass

Mr. DWIGHT. I know that; but the other bill has passed the Senate and has been reported to this House and should be passed here to-night. The chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. COFFROTH] understands very well about that bill. I know very well that for three years past bills have been introduced here to cover such cases. I have introduced one myself; the gentleman from Manne Mr. Formal here the serveral covered one was a large to the serveral was a large to t [Mr. FRYE] has introduced one; several members from Massachusetts have introduced such bills. And during the last Congress the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was authorized by the unanimous vote of his committee to report such bills to the House, but the committee was never called and the report was not made.

It has been ascertained, as I have said, that there are some two hundred and sixty-one cases similar to the one for which the pending bill is reported. I know of one such case, an intelligent man, who was in the service. If you were to see him sitting in his chair, you would think that he was as capable of managing himself as any one in this House; but it takes all the time one assistant to attend to him, and some of the time two assistants are required. He has lost by paralysis the use of his lower limbs, and requires the constant attention of one assistant, and a portion of the time two assistants. There has been an effort made to pass a general bill to cover such cases. This case came here, as other cases have come, in separate bills. It has been thought best to pass a general bill. As I have stated, Senator INGALLS introduced such a bill into the Senate, and it passed that body early in the session. It came over here, and the Committee on Invalid Pensions has considered it and reported it. Now, do not let us pass this bill, but let us pass the general bill, which will include this and similar cases

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. If this is a meritorious case, if this man is entitled to this increase of pension, either in law or in equity, why not pass this bill to-night for his benefit? Why wait until we can pass a bill for the benefit of some one else?

Mr. DWIGHT. The reason is that we should not lumber up the statutes with special bills, when a general bill will cover all these

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. This bill has been upon the Calendar since the 9th day of January last. This man is entitled to this increase of pension.

Mr. DWIGHT. Let me ask the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report that general bill in lieu of this and all other special bills of

Mr. DWIGHT. Why not, if you consent to it? No man will ob-

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. We have a special order of business for

Mr. DWIGHT. I know that; but you can pass that general bill to-night if no one objects to it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not want to oppose the passage of this bill, for I think it is a meritorious bill and one that should be passed without any hesitation. But I desire to say in this connection that without any nesitation. But I desire to say in this connection that I think the general law referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Dwight] ought to be presented to this House and urged to its passage as soon as possible. I know a number of cases that are equally as meritorious as this one; and for two years I have been trying to get some of them passed by this House, but have failed to do so. I know of a case of a man who is perfectly helpless, entirely helpless. Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. I will.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Suppose that we lay aside this bill, and then by some accident or other that general bill should not pass; would not that be doing injustice to this meritorious claimant?

Mr. DWIGHT. Is it in order to move as a substitute for this bill Senate bill No. 815?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman from Illinois puts this bill on the ground— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Well, Mr. Chairman, if I knew only one-tenth as much as some of these gentlemen who want to vote think they do, I might be ready to vote on any and all questions that Mr. REED. That is so.

Mr. WARNER. But my difficulty is to know how to vote, and I would like to instruct the gentleman from Maine a little.
Mr. REED (in his seat) made a remark inaudible to the reporter.
Mr. WARNER. If I could get any new ideas into his head, and he would not let them die of solitary confinement but would add to them himself, he might be able to improve even his knowledge. "Vote!" "Vote!"]

"Vote!" "Vote!"]

The gentleman from Illinois says this is a meritorious case. Now suppose it were agreed that the pay of men who have served five or ten years in the Army should be increased by a general law, and there might be justice in that. But suppose that instead of passing a law to increase the pay of all of them alike a bill should be introduced to increase the pay of one man by the addition of $5 a month to his pay, leaving all the rest at their old rate of pay, that might be a meritorious bill of itself, but it would be manifest injustice.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That is not an analogous case.

Mr. WARNER. It is the very essence of injustice to give to one

Mr. WARNER. It is the very essence of injustice to give to one what is denied to others in similar circumstances.

Several Members. That is not analogous.

Mr. WARNER. It is perfectly analogous. Suppose it were proposed to reduce pensions, would it be right to bring in a bill reducing one particular pensioner without affecting the pensions of others?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. This man is asking nothing more than what the general law—

Mr. WARNER. I make no objection to acting upon a particular case when it stands out as distinguished in some way from all others. But if there is a whole class in precisely the same situation, it is injustice to give to one member of that class what is denied to others.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, it seems to be conceded by many gentlemen of the committee that this bill is a proper one to be passed. In my view it is a bill that never ought to be passed. The law which gives $72 a month to the men who now receive it ought never to have been passed. This man now receives from this Government a pension of $600 a year—a greater pension than was ever given by any sion of $600 a year—a greater pension than was ever given by any nation in the world to a soldier of his standing. We have been granting these pensions in an hour of "gush." We raised the pension to $72 a month because there were but few who would receive it. At that time we could almost count them on our fingers. Now in this class there are, I think, about two hundred. Another class, drawing pensions at the rate of $50 a month, have discovered that they are equally disabled; and 270 of them ask to have their pensions increased to $72 a month. Associations are being formed all over the country by those who draw $37 a month to have their pensions raised to $50 a month. Those who draw $24 a month want to be raised to the next higher notch; and those in the next grade below want to be raised in the same way.

This system is going on all over the country. We are paying as pensions to these men twice or three times as much as they could have earned if they had remained hale and hearty. We pay to this man $600 a year. It will support him in competency. It will provide him a servant to take care of him. It will give him such comfort as probably he never dreamed of having when he was obliged to earn his own subsistence; for $600 is a very liberal income to men of earn his own subsistence; for $600 is a very liberal income to men of that class. It is a greater income than a large portion of the workingmen of this country live upon. We ought to stop before making our pensions so high that they will be a source of wealth, instead of a means of subsistence. You all remember the old fable about killing the goose that laid the golden egg. We are very likely to do that. We have already more than two hundred thousand men on our pension-roll. Two hundred and fifty thousand more are applying to get on; and we propose to establish the precedent that when their applications are rejected at the Pension Office they can file their claims here. I tell you the animal cannot live and lay eggs enough to suphere. I tell you the animal cannot live and lay eggs enough to support that kind of a family.

Mr. NEW. This bill is one of great merit and ought to be passed.

Mr. N.E.W. This bill is one of great merit and ought to be passed. I wish to say further, in view of what has been remarked by the gentleman from New York about the bill, that there can be no practical difficulty whatever if this bill should be passed by the House, for if the Senate bill, to which the gentleman has referred, should pass the House before the bill now under consideration shall have been acted on by the Senate, of coarse that fact would be taken into consideration the Senate of the bill passed here would be taken into consideration. tion by the Senate, and the bill passed here would not be passed by that body if the Senate bill embraced a case of the character described and provided for by the bill which we are now considering.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE W. WOODWARD.

The next business on the Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 863) grant-

The next busidess on the Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. cos) granting a pension to George W. Woodward.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Woodward, late chaplain of the Forty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, to take effect from the date of his discharge from the service of the United

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

It is in evidence that said Woodward was mustered into the service as chaplain of the Forty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry January 1, 1862, and was honorably discharged on account of disability January 23, 1863.

It is shown that said Woodward was in sound, robust, and vigorous health at the date of his muster into service; that he rendered good and efficient service while in the Army; that he became debilitated and emaciated by camp diarrhea and bronchitis; that his disability was so great that he became thoroughly broken down and utterly disabled, and upon the recommendation of his surgeon he sent in his resignation on certificate of disability; that the disease contracted in the service continued for more than a year after he had finally left the Army, and produced the greatest prostration and emaciation; and that this was followed by a general disease of the mucous membrane throughout the system, producing granular ophthalmia, catarrhal infiammation of the eyes, which subsequently developed a series of absecsess of the eyelids which discharged profusely; that these symptoms finally subsiding, his general health became better, but that simultaneously with their disappearance evidences of cataracts occurred and gradually developed into practical total blindness.

It is further shown that said Woodward applied to the Pension Bureau for a pension and that his application was rejected.

There is abundant evidence to show that the said Woodward was in good health when he entered the service; that he was diseased and disabled while in the service and in the line of duty, and that he has been emaciated, debilitated, and his constitution almost a total wreck ever since. The examining surgeon, who made an examination in 1872 for the Pension Office, reported on the degree of disability as total of first grade, incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor on account of disease of the eyes.

The evidence appears conclusive relative to his disa

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I do not profess to be a doctor, and am not much of a chaplain, [laughter;] but it is a wondrous suspicious circumstance when a chaplain who only serves about a year in the service closes out with sore eyes so bad that he is not able to go on with his duty. [Laughter.] It looks as if he had taken something in his scope which is ordinarily supposed to be outside of the duties of a chaplain, and had been unfortunate in his investment. [Laughter.]

Now, let us see what this case is, and see when this chaplain contracted his disease of the eyes. I read from the record evidence in the Pension Office, abstracted from his own evidence filed in support of his claim. He claims a pension on account of disease of the eyes which resulted from diarrhea, cough, and debility contracted in the service. That is the claim upon which he files his pension. Yes, I have no doubt a man could be so run out with diarrhea that it would affect his eyes by drawing them inward [laughter] if the draught was sufficiently great. [Renewed laughter.]

Now, when we come to examine the evidence which is filed in support of this claim, the Commissioner certifies that it appears in evidence filed by the claimant that he had disease of the eyes prior to his enlistment, stated to be congenital myopia. Some one of these doctors who passed upon this case in committee will undoubtedly tell what that is. [Laughter.] I wish to know.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Let me ask the gentleman a question right

As soon as I finish the evidence.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I wish to speak about the evidence. Mr. BRAGG. As soon as I finish the statement of what the evidence filed in support of his claim is.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The point I wish to make to the gentleman from Wisconsin is this: I have examined the evidence myself, and in all the evidence submitted to me by the Pension Office there is nothing of the kind, not a single paper of it.

Mr. BRAGG. Just wait and see.
Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I examined that evidence myself.
Mr. BRAGG. The claimant was rejected on medical grounds. It was a medical question and decided by a medical board. Did you

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I did; and I wish to say to the gentle-

Mr. BRAGG. The board said that the cataract was not from any disease as alleged. That is what the medical board testified. The House medical doctors certified it was the result of diarrhea. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry myself that any remarks of this kind should have been made by the gentleman from Wisconsin. The applicant in this case was at the time he went into the service one of our most eminent, most honest, and most eloquent preachers in the State of Illinois. He was located at Geneva, and many of the gentlemen from Illinois here are probably acquainted with him. This gentleman served only about a year. He joined his regiment in Chicago, went to Cairo, was in the fight at Belmont, went through Pittsburgh Landing, was at Donelson, went through Shiloh, all those terrific assaults of 1862. And I say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, there is no man on this floor who knows better than he does that time is no element in the destruction of a man's constitution in the Army.

As to his sickness and his disease, let me say this gentleman was taken ill in the service, was discharged from the service on account of that illness, and has been a total wreck ever since. He is to-day as blind as a man can be.

What is the medical evidence referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin? The medical referee in this case states that if this man could have shown a sound constitution at the time he entered the service it might have been passed, might have been accepted, but that he showed he had an ordinary and moderate shortsightedness; that is all; a moderate and ordinary shortsightedness. What does this scientific referee say? He says that in all cases of shortsightedness there is an antecedent probability of some disease of the eye in the future, and on that he sent this case back, and on that, and that alone, he rejected it. It is a mere theory.

What is the position of this in these papers? Dr. Kittoe, surgeon of the regiment, acquainted with this gentleman five years before he joined the regiment, and who has known him ever since, testifies that he received the man in vigorous health.

Dr. Hempstead, one of the most eminent physicians in Illinois, certifies as to his condition before he went into the service. Dr. Le Barron, another eminent physician and the family physician of this gentleman while he was pastor of the church at Geneva, knowing all of the circumstances in connection with the case, certifies that the man's constitution and health were good before he entered the service with the exception of this moderate or ordinary shortsightedness. In all other respects his constitution was perfect.

Mr. BRAGG. Let me inquire of the gentleman from Illinois if all of this mass of evidence was submitted to the Pension Office?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Every bit of it. It was all before the office, and I examined it myself.

Mr. BRAGG. And the Pension Office referees, who are medical men, examined all of this testimony, and after that examination these gentlemen certified that the cataract was not the result of it.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Yes, sir; but I desire to state that Dr. Hempstead and these other distinguished physicians whom I have mentioned certified that while the cataract is not the result of any direct cause of injury received in the service, yet it is true that it comes from an impaired constitution or an impaired state of health and an emaciated body resulting from the service, and that this was probably the cause of the cataract. Those men have examined this case fully, and the evidence of these four or five physicians is all to the same effect. What does this gentleman say for himself? He says that ten or fifteen years before entering the service he was taken sick with a fever. Eight or ten years before that he had some other illness, and that was all. That was all the illness that he ever had prior to entering the service, and there is no evidence to show that he was not otherwise than a strong, healthy, and vigorous man when he did enter the service, while all the evidence points the other way.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Had the Committee on Pensions any
Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. additional evidence other than that presented and on file in the Pension Office 9

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Not a particle; and they did not want any more. I examined that testimony and I say that it was an outrage when they refused to grant that pension.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. But is it not a fact that the board of physicians who examined this case are likely to know more about it than those who are entirely ignorant of the science of medicine?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I presume they would know more about it. But I have stated that this case was rejected by the medical referee on the ground and on that alone that in all cases of ordinary or moderate shortsightedness there was an antecedent probability of some disease of the eye in the future.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Is not that a theory as well as the evi-

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The evidence in regard to this man's constitution and health from the time he entered the service is perfect, complete, and conclusive, and cannot be questioned. He was residing at Geneva, and was the pastor of the church there. The young men of his regiment endeavored to secure a chaplain from their own home in preference, and they selected Mr. Woodward. He was nearly fortyfive years of age, and was as gallant and faithful as any man in the world. He attended faithfully to his duty. There is no complaint that he did not. He served until he was absolutely incapable of serving any longer, and on a certificate of permanent disability he sent in his resignation. He made an application for a pension in 1865 or 1867, his resignation. He made an application for a pension in 1895 of 1897, and has spent all of this time in endeavoring to show to these scientific gentlemen that he was entitled to a pension. The man is perfectly blind. He is a man of culture, of high education, with an expensive family, and is living to-day a miserable existence in midnight darkness. And I wish to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Proceed a word that I am sorry to have heard from him any remarks. BRAGG] a word, that I am sorry to have heard from him any remarks of an unkindly character in reference to so good a man as this.

Mr. BRAGG. And I regret exceedingly that so good a man as the gentleman has represented him should be afflicted with sore eyes after very short a term of service.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I am unwilling that the remarks in reference to this gentleman's character should go abroad to the country without explicit denial from me and a statement of his true character. acter. I know this gentleman very well. I know the character he bears in the community in which he resides. I know that he is in every respect worthy of all that I have said in his behalf, and I hope that this bill will pass

Mr. PRESCOTT. I move to strike out all after the word "volunteers" in line 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to strike out after the word "volunteers" the following words: To take effect from and after his discharge from the service of the United States.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Upon that amendment I desire to say a word. I am not contentious as a general thing in reference to retaining these arrearages of pensions in these bills; but in this case I desire to call attention to the fact that this gentleman has been knocking at the door for a pension for years, and if any man under the general law is entitled to a pension and to arrearages of pensions, this man undoubtedly is. The evidence in this case, as I have stated, is conclusive. It is certainly conclusive to my mind, and I think to the minds of other gentlemen upon the Committee on Pensions; and I believe that under the general law granting pensions when the Pension Office rejected this case and refused the relief sought, they were guilty of, I may say, almost a crime.

Mr. BRIGGS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. In all of the bills thus far passed for placing private soldiers upon the pension-rolls, we have not gone back and given arrearages of pensions. Now, why treat this chaplain any better than private soldiers are treated?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. In reply to the question of the gentleman, I have stated already all that I wish to say in reference to this case. I think I have said enough to show that he is undoubtedly entitled to the relief sought.

Mr. PRESCOTT. My object in offering this amendment is nothing personal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Thompson] was recognized before the gentleman from New York [Mr. Prescott] rose.
Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. In the few questions I asked a moment since, I do not wish it understood I am antagonizing this bill, because since, I do not wish it understood I am antagonizing this bill, because I shall vote for every bill I believe has merit. From the commencement of these sittings devoted to pension bills, I have urged every time quietly and modestly that the Committee on Invalid Pensions are just as competent to say what the rate of disability was as any board that might hereafter be appointed by Congress. You have absolutely refused to do that, and you put the pensioner whom you place on the pension-roll to extra expense to produce testimony to show, not that he is entitled to a pension, but to show at what rate and what shall be its amount; and that is to be decided simply upon theory, and not upon facts.

I say, after the Committee on Invalid Pensions have heard all the testimony and know the condition of the soldier, know what the disability is and the cost of it, and have the honesty to come into the House and report the facts, we should act upon those facts, and not again send back the pensioner to incur the expense and delay that we have seen these men subjected to so often during the last fifteen years.

And, I would ask, why should this man be put in a better condition than the private soldier who shouldered his musket and marched to the front? The question of the gentleman from New Hampshire is a pertinent one. We should see where we are, and not decide to give special favors to one and deny them to the others. The Committee on Invalid Pensions have had the facts before them and heard the testimony; and we must go upon the supposition that they will report the facts they have ascertained honestly, frankly, and fairly to us. And when they have had all the facts before them, why not let them say when the pension will take effect and how much a month it shall be, instead of leaving it to be decided by others who are not cognizant of the facts, and subjecting the soldier to extra delay and expense in the future?

The question being taken on Mr. Prescort's amendment, it was adopted

The bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. COVERT. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

JUDITH BROWN.

Mr. RICHMOND. As I see the committee is about to rise, I ask Mr. RICHMOND. As I see the committee is about to rise, I ask that a bill be taken up which authorizes the payment of the small sum of $66.09 to the child of a revolutionary soldier. The amount was due her thirty-five years ago. The bill simply grants authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay this money to the person to whom it properly belongs.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I shall not object to this bill being taken out of its order, but I shall object to any other special case

Mr. RICHMOND. The bill is on the Private Calendar. It is the bill (H. R. No. 4264) to authorize the payment of $66.09 to Judith Brown, one-seventh of the pension to Margaret Duncan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Judith Brown, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $66.09, being the amount due her as one of the children of Margaret Duncan, widow of Charles Duncan, a revolutionary soldier, under the act of July 7th, 1838, and subsequent acts; which said sum has not been paid to her or any one for her.

Mr. SAMFORD. I call for the reading of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred bill H. R. No. 4264, having had the same under consideration, respectfully beg leave to report:

From a report upon this case, made by the Commissioner of Pensions at the request of this committee, it appears that Judith Brown is clearly entitled to the sum of $66.09, but that legislative action, as proposed by this bill, is rendered necessary by sections 4719 and 4718, Revised Statutes. The letter of the Commissioner of Pensions is made a part of this report, and, in accordance with the reasons therein stated, your committee return the bill to the House with the recommendation that it be passed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,

Washington, D. O., February 3, 1880.

Sir: In the case of Margaret Duncan, widow of Charles, who was a revolutionary soldier, I have the honor to state that she was allowed a pension of $80 per annum under the act of July 7, 1838, from October 24, 1838, to March 4, 1841, at which latter date all pensions under that act terminated; but, as the act of March 3, 1843, renewed them for one year, and that of June 17, 1844, continued them for four years longer, her pension was renewed, to commence March 4, 1843, and terminated August 29, 1846, the date of her decease. From March 4, 1841, to March 4, 1843, no pensions under the above acts have been allowed or paid. The pension to Mrs. Duncan was authorized to be paid to her seven children, but as the whereabouts of the child, Judith Brown, was unknown, she did not apply with the other children for her share, nor has it since been paid to her. The proportion of one-seventh, amounting to $66.09, was withheld, and it cannot be paid (see section 4719 and 4718, Revised Statutes) without special legislation of Congress authorizing the same with an appropriation for the amount.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. BENTLEY,

Hon. J. B. RICHMOND, House of Representatives.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move that bill H. R. No. 192 be taken up. Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I object. Let the bills be taken in their order on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The next bill on the Calendar will be reported.

MRS. FRANCES M. WILKINSON.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 864) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Frances M. Wilkinson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Frances M. Wilkinson, widow of the late Lorenzo D. Wilkinson, corporal of Company A, One hundred and thirteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, allowing payment of pension at the rate of $25 per month, in lieu of that which she is now receiving, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move that the committee rise. The question being taken, there were—ayes 23, noes 33.

So the motion was not agreed to. The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The evidence on file in this case shows that Lorenzo D. Wilkinson enlisted as a private soldier in Company A, One hundred and thirteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, August 30, 1862; was in service with the Fifteenth Army Corps with his regiment in Tennessee, Mississippi, and Louisiana; that while in service before Vicksburgh, Mississippi, he was stricken with chronic diarrhea, went into the hospital, was pronounced incurable, and was honorably discharged in March, 1863. He returned to Chicago, and died the following July, (July 10, 1863,) never having

He returned to Chicago, and died the following July, (July 10, 1863,) never having recovered.

It is also shown that the widow is now receiving a pension of $8 per month, granted her as the widow of Lorenzo D. Wilkinson.

Evidence is also submitted setting forth that said Wilkinson was a successful law practitioner when he enlisted; was a man of talent, and capable of earning a large income from his profession; that he was capable of filling a position as an officer, and, in fact, declined a commission when he enlisted, wishing to earn such distinction by courage and merit alone.

It is further submitted in evidence that a son, William Wilkinson, enlisted in the regular Army June 12, 1871, for five years, and served out his term of enlistment and was honorably discharged; that while in said service in the State of Texas he contracted malarial fever, of which disease he is now ill, and has been unable to perform manual labor for a year or more; and this son has thus become dependent upon his mother for support and likely to so remain for years.

The family physician testifies that Mrs. Wilkinson is disabled by varicose veins and a severe rupture, and is unfit in a measure for manual labor by reason of these physical infirmities, from which there is no prospect of any but temporary relief; and that she has no means of support except the pension of $8 per month, above referred to.

This case appears from the evidence to be a peculiarly distressing one. The husband and father was a brilliant lawyer, eminently competent to provide liberally for his family; refusing position to which his abilities would naturally call him, that such rank as he might subsequently hold should be earned upon the field of battle; he is stricken down in the prime of life, leaving a helpless family. The son enlisting in the service, and though contracting disease, he is honorably discharged at the expiration of his term of enlistment in comparatively good health, thus cutting off his claim for pension. He subsequently became dependent upon service.

This additional allowance is strongly recommended by parties who were associates at the bar with Mr. Wilkinson, and by those who have been cognizant of the circumstances, in a petition to this House; among whom are the Hon. J. L. Beveridge, ex-governor of the State; Hon. J. F. Farnsworth, ex-member of Congress; Hon. C. H. Harrison, ex-member of Congress and mayor of Chicago; Hon. Marvin Heath, ex-mayor of Chicago; Hon. J. M. Wilson, late chief-justice supreme court, Chicago; Hon. S. K. Dow, ex-State senator; and Captain George R. Clarke, the commanding officer of the company in which Mr. Wilkinson served, and others.

Your committee, believing that the evidence abundantly shows this to be a meritorious case and to warrant this increase, report back said bill and recommend its

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I wish to state in regard to this bill that this is simply a gratuity. This lady is now drawing a pension at the rate of $8 a month. It is for the judgment of this House to vote her this increase or not.

A MEMBER. How much is the increase ?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The increase is to $25 a month. It is recommended by the chief citizens of my city. The husband of this lady went into the service, was stricken with an incurable disease while in the service, was honorably discharged in March, 1863, and died in the following July. He was one of the most brilliant lawyers of our bar. A son who was in the regular Army is now dependent on his

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Certainly.
Mr. McMILLIN. Would the gentleman grant an increase of pension because distinguished citizens of the community in which the sion because distinguished citizens of the community in which the deceased lived petitioned for it?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Not for that alone.

Mr. McMILLIN. Well; would you grant an increase of pension because the deceased party was a distinguished lawyer?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That would not be an objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, would you grant it on that account?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Not on that account alone. But here was a gallant man who went into the service at a time when by his professional services he could have provided his family a magnificent. fessional services he could have provided his family a magnificent income for his whole life-time. His son also went into the service. Now here is a destitute family.

Mr. BRAGG. Suppose he had not gone into the service, but had become sick and died within a few weeks.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It is clearly shown that the disease from which he died was contracted in the service, from the fact that this lady has received a pension on that account.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire once more to call the attention of the House to this question; if the wives of private soldiers draw $8 a month pension, as does the wife of every soldier who died in the service of the United States; and if we are to select one man because it is certified by the distinguished neighbors and friends of a member of Congress that he was a very distinguished man, and make an exception in his case, are we not establishing a rule by which $25 a month is to be the measure of pension to be given to the widows of private soldiers? There are one hundred thousand pensions drawn for private soldiers, which pensions are limited to $8 a month. Now, are we ready, as we have moved from $50 a month up to $72, from $24 a month up to $37 in certain cases, are we ready now to move from $8 a month up to $25 a month in all these cases \dagger a month up to $25 a month in all these cases?

It is said as an answer that this son contracted disease in the service of the United States in the regular Army since the war, and is now at home utterly helpless. If that be true, that son is entitled to draw a pension of $24 a month. That, with the $8 a month to this widow, will give her $32 a month to subsist upon, instead of the $25 which it is proposed to give by this bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I wish to say to the House that I have not been careless in my examination of these cases. I think there are some twenty-five cases on this large Private Calendar which I have reported, and in preparing those cases I have tried to exercise great care. I think that, considering that this widow has lost her husband, that her son contracted disease in the service so that he is now dependent upon the mother, and the mother herself is an invalid and destitute, the Government cannot err much in giving her the pension asked.

Mr. SAMFORD. Was the father a lawyer?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. He was.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. He was.
Mr. SAMFORD. Did he go into the Army?
Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. He did.
Mr. SAMFORD. Did he fight?
Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. He did.
Mr. SAMFORD. Did he do his fighting in a Pickwickian sense?
Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. No; he fought gallantly, bearing a musket, and practically died in the service, for he died shortly after he returned home. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]
Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to say only one word concerning this case. I do not think that it is either democracy or republicanism, or that it is right in any sense to pass a pension bill here founded upon the idea either that the party claiming it was a member of a particular profession, or is recommended by those who are distinguished citizens of the place where he lived. place where he lived.

If there is any region in the world where things of that kindshould have no weight it is where men, forgetting all these distinctions, shouldered their muskets and fought side by side with each other and died while so fighting in the service of their country. I think this pension should not be granted on that ground, and I hope it will

ANNA E. HALLOWELL

The next bill on the Private Calendar, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was the bill (H. R. No. 746) for the relief of Anna E. Hallowell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anna E. Hallowell, widow of Eli Hallowell, late of the Mississpipi Marine Brigade, and to pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act during her widowhood.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 746) for the relief of Anna E. Hallowell, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

That Anna E. Hallowell is the widow of Eli Hallowell, late of New Albany, Indiana; that it appears by the certificate of James Brooks, captain and assistant quartermaster, and chief quartermaster of the Mississippi Marine Brigade, that said Eli Hallowell was sworn into the United States service as carpenter on the United States ram T. D. Hornor, of the Mississippi Marine Brigade, and continued in the service of that boat and on the United States steamer E. H. Fairchild, of the same marine brigade, until he was mustered out of the service in the month of Angust, 1864.

The evidence shows that he was sworn into said service on December 23, 1862, and that while in the line of his duty in said service he contracted an inflammation of the bowels, and died of that disease shortly after his discharge from said service, in the year 1884.

and that while in the line of his duty in said service he contracted an immandation of the bowels, and died of that disease shortly after his discharge from said service, in the year 1864.

By the laws of the United States, pensions are allowed to "any master serving on a gun-boat, or any pilot, engineer, sailor, or other person not regularly mustered, serving upon any gun-boator war vessel of the United States, disabled by any wound or injury received, or otherwise incapacitated while in the line of duty, for procuring his subsistence by manual labor." (Revised Statutes United States, section 4693.) It is further provided that upon the death of any such person by reason of any wound, injury, or disease which would have entitled him to a pension if disabled, his widow shall be entitled to the same pension he would have been entitled to if totally disabled. (Revised Statutes United States, section 4702.)

The widow's application for a pension in this case has been rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions because he says the boats and vessels of the Mississippi Marine Brigade were not technically "war vessels of the United States."

But these vessels were employed by the United States, their officers and men were paid by the United States, they were actively engaged in the prosecution of the war, they gave their lives for the restoration of the Union. Therefore, in the opinion of your committee, the vessels of the Mississippi Marine Brigade were in fact "war vessels of the United States," whether technically so considered or not. Your committee, therefore, recommend that the accompanying bill (H. R. No. 746) be passed, and they refer to the following precedents, to wit, the case of Elizabeth Ravenscroft (Stat at Large, vol. 16, p. 692) and the case of Mrs. Sullivan, (Ibid., p. 687.) in both of which pensions were granted by Congress to widows of men who served in the Mississippi Marine Brigade.

Mr. SAMFORD. I would like to hear that report read again.

Mr. SAMFORD. I would like to hear that report read again. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection ?

Several members objected.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to call attention to the report in this case for the purpose of making a correction. The committee state that the Commissioner of Pensions rejected this claim on the ground that the vessels of the Mississippi Marine Brigade were not technically war vessels of the United States. Now, it is disagreeable to take issue with so distinguished a committee upon a question of fact; but the fact is that this claim was rejected because it was barred by the statute of limitations, section 4718 of the Revised Statutes.

There is another fact in this connection. According to the statement of the report, this vessel was a war vessel of the United States, ment of the report, this vessel was a war vessel of the United States, and consequently the men serving upon her are entitled to pensions under the pension laws regulating pensions to persons wounded while serving upon war vessels of the United States. The Mississippi Marine Brigade was, however, a part of the military arm of the service; it belonged to the Army, not to the Navy. But in fact this claim was rejected, as reported by the Commissioner, under the provision of the Revised Statutes to which I have referred. That provision was repealed January 25, 1879; but since the repeal of the provision under which her claim was rejected this claimant has not filed in the Pension Office any additional evidence, although she had the right to do sion Office any additional evidence, although she had the right to do so. This appears upon the report of the Commissioner. I will add that the testimony in the Pension Office leaves a very serious question of doubt as to her widowhood, and consequently as to the legitimacy of her claim

Mr. BICKNELL. As I introduced this bill and know something about it, I wish to reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. Bragg.] He contradicts the statement that this case was rejected at the Pension Office on the ground that these boats were not war vessels of the United States. I made application in person at the Pension Office for information, and was told by the man having charge of the matter, who took the papers and showed them to me, that this claim was rejected with several others in the same condition on the ground that these vessels were not war vessels of the United States.

It is true, as the gentleman from Wisconsin says, that this marine brigade was organized under orders of the War Department. A large fleet of boats were chartered and men were enlisted and mustered into the service by the quartermasters. But they were paid by the United States; they fought for the preservation of the Union. Each of these boats was armed with one Parrott gun and two twelve-pounders. Their object was to keep open the navigation of the Mississippi River. They were engaged in frequent conflicts with the batteries of the confederates on shore, often landing their troops to drive away bodies of confederates.

In every respect the services which these men rendered were the services of men fighting for the Union. These vessels were substantially war vessels of the United States, because they were vessels carrying on the war for the United States and the men upon them were paid by the United States. Congress has already granted pensions to the widows of men engaged in this service. As to what is said by the gentleman from Wisconsin—

Mr. BRAGG. I think the gentleman misunderstood what I said. I said that this Mississippi Marine Brigade was a part of the military arm of the United States, and, being so, the men engaged in it were arm of the United States, and, being so, the men engaged in it were entitled to the benefits of the pension laws. I did not intend to state otherwise than that they were mustered into the Army of the United States—belonged to the Army properly.

Mr. BICKNELL. Being in the service of the United States and paid by the United States, these men were entitled to pensions for one word as to what the gentleman said in reference to the widow-hood of this woman. She lives in my town. I know her. Everybody knows her there as the widow of this man. She is a respectable woman; and this is no place to make such aspersions as the gentleman has made.

Mr. BRAGG. I wish to say to the gentleman from Indiana that I have made no aspersions. I speak of the report from the Pension Office. I know nothing personally of the woman, whether she lives in the gentleman's district or in mine. I know only what the record of the Pension Office certifies to me. I called for this record, and it shows that the claim was rejected because it was barred by the stat-I know that the statute has since been repealed, and I know that no application has been made at the Pension Office for a pension since such repeal. I state this from the evidence furnished me at my request from the Department.

Mr. BICKNELL. Evidence probably founded upon the report of some of these detectives employed by the Pension Office.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I wish to make a single statement. When the Committee on Invalid Pensions call upon the Pension Office for papers it is expected that they receive all the papers in the case. If the gentleman from Wisconsin has means which the committee has not, of obtaining information from the Pension Office, of course the committee is not responsible. It looks a good deal as if the Pension Office was furnishing evidence to some parties here for the purpose of setting up a defense against claims which the papers before our committee show to be just. Now, if the Pension Office, when called on by us for information in regard to these claims, gives us only a part of the evidence, and then employs some person to come upon this floor with additional evidence which that office has refused or neglected to give to us, then that office has attorneys here to whom is given a part of the evidence relating to cases coming before us, for the purpose of prejudicing claims upon which we act. Now, sir, I undertake to say the evidence in this case is as we have reported it, and if the gentleman has any other evidence than that which appears in the papers presented to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, then it is evidence which the Commissioner refused to furnish us.

Mr. BRAGG. In reply to the gentleman from Indiana, I am an attorney; I represent the fifth congressional district of Wisconsin, and I am their attorney to see that the doors of the Treasury are closed against special cases, which pay out money which ought not to be paid under any law existing on our statute-books. I receive what I receive from the Pension Office by calling on that office for a history of the case, in order I might be apprised whether or not the Pension Committee were acting on law or were granting pensions simply to their own constituents with the view to the result which might ensue hereafter.

Let me say to the gentlemen from Indiana, both of them, that neither one of the gentlemen has answered the proposition I have stated, that the claim was barred by the statute. The statute is plain. I will refer you to a section, and you may read it. That statute has been repealed; and where, then, does it leave the case? It leaves it open for prosecution before the proper department of the Government. But it seems that a congressional election being about presently to take place, it becomes convenient not to send these men through the ordipage, it becomes convenient not to send these men introduction of the nary avenues and channels to get their pensions, but to bring them before a court in which their Representative is a member that they may get their decision more speedily.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have this to say in reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin: that so much of his remarks as refer to me is as far from the truth as hell is from heaven.

Mr. BRAGG. One moment. I desire to say to the eloquent gentleman from Tennessee that that sort of bluster is of no sort of account with me. I have made no allusion to you, sir, whatever, but have referred to the evidence in the case.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. TAYLOR. The whole course of the gentleman from Wisconsin, for the last two or three meetings, has been to cast infamous reflections on the Invalid Pensions Committee. It seems he is in collusion with this Pension Office.

I will tell you the truth about this whole matter. The facts which he proposes to present to the House are obtained from the reports of special agents who are sent out into the country as spies, and who depend upon the number of claims they kill to hold their places in the Pension Office. And, sir, I have examined quite a number of pension cases, quite a number of reports of special agents of this Pension Office and I have never found in a sixele report of a precision Office and I have never found in a sixele report of a precision of the sent of t sion Office, and I have never found in a single report of a special agent a single word of proof in favor of the claimant for a pension; but, on the contrary, every single word of it is against him, all exparte, and it happens it is all taken from the enemies of the party.

Mr. WILSON. And very often not sworn to.
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Will the gentleman from Tennessee let me ask him a question?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It is whether this detective evidence is not open to the committee as well as it should be open to every member of the House?

Mr. TAYLOR. I will reply to the gentleman. In some cases this detective evidence is furnished to the committee. In other cases, and especially a good many which have been mentioned by the gentleman from Wisconsin, it is not furnished to the committee, but is furnished to the gentleman from Wisconsin so as to come here and defend the

Mr. BRAGG. Let me say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I have not read anything which purports to be detective evidence;

but, so far as the cases you speak of are concerned, I inquire whether you have not proceeded on detective evidence?

Mr. TAYLOR. We have proceeded upon sworn testimony.

Mr. BRAGG. But ex parte. Let me say I have made no reflection on any report the gentleman has made, but when we come to the reports made by the gentleman from Tennessee, I propose to show by those reports also-

Mr. TAYLOR. The gentleman from Tennessee is ready to defend every report he makes.

Mr. BRAGG. I have no doubt about it.
Mr. TAYLOR. And challenges the gentleman on them.
Mr. BRAGG. I have no doubt of it; but when we come to those cases I can show there is a bill to grant some arrearages to a man who was never in the service and not upon any roll.

Mr. TAYLOR. Not reported by the gentleman from Tennessee?
Mr. BRAGG. Yes; by the gentleman from Tennessee?
Mr. TAYLOR. What case?
Mr. BRAGG. It is a bill to pay arrearages to a scout not under any

Mr. BRAGG. It is a bill to pay arrearages to a scout not under any pension law of the United States.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why did you not come out and tell what it was? That has been discussed in the Senate. And on that subject, Mr. Chairman, I say that a scout who served his country in that capacity is as much entitled to a pension as a soldier who fought in the front. He fought for the country, and if the gentleman from Wisconsin can afford to get up and on every occasion delay the passage of these honest pension bills, and his people will support him, it is all right, may be; but I could not face my people again and tell them I had been fighting honest pension claims. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.] galleries.

If the gentleman from Wisconsin would only give his attention to the great appropriations which pass through Congress every year, appropriations for the benefit of giant corporations and great monop-olies in this country, by which thousands and millions of dollars are taken out of the Treasury and paid into the pockets of rings, he would show himself a truer and a better friend of the soldier than by fightshow himself a truer and a better friend of the soldier than by fighting these cases where poor soldiers, wounded, hobbling about on crutches, torn to pieces by Minie balls, with their frames emaciated and destroyed by the ravages of disease. I say that if he will leave these cases alone and let these men have their pensions as they deserve, and give his attention to those big steals, the country will think more of him and he will do his duty better. [Applause.]

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman says that a scout is entitled to a pension.

Mr. HAWLEY. I rise to a question of order.
Mr. BRAGG. Then I want to state to the gentleman—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin will suspend.
The gentleman from Connecticut will state his point of order.

The gentleman from Connecticut will state his point of order.

Mr. HAWLEY. My point of order is that these galleries have no right to participate in this debate.

Mr. BRAGG. I want to reply to the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend until the point of order raised by the gentleman from Connecticut is decided.

Mr. HAWLEY. I repeat, my point of order is that this House of Representatives in considering the public business ought not to be applauded or condemned by the galleries.

Mr. PAGE. It was the House applauding, not the galleries.

Mr. HAWLEY. I distinctly observed that there was applause in the galleries.

Mr. BRAGG. Now, I ask the gentleman where he finds that law?
Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a point of order. This delate is entirely ent of order.

bate is entirely out of order.

Mr. TAYLOR. Allow me to answer the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin. I did not say that there was any law to pension the scouts; but I say that this Congress has the right to make a law for that purpose, and that these men who performed faithful service as scouts are entitled to a pension if in the service they became disas scould abled.

Mr. BRAGG. Sir, the gentleman stated explicitly that they were just as much entitled to pensions as the soldiers.

Mr. TAYLOR. In equity.

Mr. BRAGG. That these men are as much entitled to a pension as the soldier who went to the front and fought. Now, I want to know where there is any law or authority for granting a pension in such

Mr. TAYLOR. I reply to the gentleman that justice and equity entitle them to it.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a point of order, that this debate is out of

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to say further, Mr. Chairman— The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BRAGG. I wish to say further in reference to this bill that the buncombe which can be created here about wounded, disabled, crippled soldiers whose constitutions are destroyed, who have lost their limbs, their legs, their heads-I say that this class of soldiers do not come to the Pension Committee to get through their claims; they get them from the Pension Office. This talk in reference to them is all buncombe. These men who come to the Pension Committee for relief are the gentlemen who have "ruptures," who died in hospitals from "chronic diarrhea" ten or fifteen years after the service, and after a service of fifteen or twenty days or three months. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the true soldiers of this country do not need that gentlemen shall come in here and make humbug speeches to raise a cheap enthusiasm here in order to get their pensions through. These speeches are made by gentlemen who desire to get a little piece of the pork because they have some lame ducks that they want to get through here. [Laughter.]

The bill was laid aside, to be favorably reported to the House.

Mr. WARNER. I move that the committee now rise.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 23, noes 25.

So the committee refused to rise.

REBECCA S. ALLEN.

The next bill on the Calendar, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was the bill (H. R. No. 748) granting a pension to Rebecca S. Allen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, dc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rebecca S. Allen, widow of Captain James Allen, late of the Mississippi Marine Brigade, and to pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act during her widowhood.

Mr. HOSTETLER. This case is precisely like the other, and unless it be demanded we might dispense with the reading of the report.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to dispense with the reading of the report.

Mr. WARNER. I call for the reading of the report; I want to see the ground on which this claim is allowed.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. If I was receiving a pension of $5,000 a year I think I would resign the pension and let these other meritorious bills pass, and not obstruct them.

Mr. WARNER. In response to the gentleman from Indiana I wish to say that I do not know why it is not as possible for one who never preached at all to know something of his duty as for one who has preached at all to know something of his duty as for one who has preached all his life to know nothing about anything.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to a point of order. I made the motion that the reading of the report be dispensed with. My point of order is that the House has the right to dispense with the reading by a majority vote.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent, and objection has been made.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report, as follows:

That James T. Allen, the husband of the said Rebecca S. Allen, was master of the hospital steamer Woodford, one of the vessels of the Mississippi Marine Brig-

That James T. Allen, the husband of the said Redecca S. Allen, was master or the hospital steamer Woodford, one of the vessels of the Mississippi Marine Brigade.

That he was regularly employed as such by Captain James Brooks, assistant quartermaster, and was duly sworn into the service of the United States on the 1st day of February, 1864, and served as master of said steamer Woodford until she was sunk in Red River, at the time of General Banks's expedition. That while engaged in such service and in the line of his duty he contracted a disease called diarrhea, and by reason thereof was sent home to New Albany, Indiana, where he died of said disease on the 3d day of June, 1864.

That after his death his wages up to June 3, 1864, were paid by the United States, and the only reason assigned by the Pension Office for rejecting his widow's claim for a pension is that the vessels of the Mississippi Marine Brigade, having been employed by the Quartermaster's Department, were not technically "war vessels of the United States," within the meaning of sections 4633 and 4702 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. But in the opinion of your committee these vessels were really "war vessels of the United States; whether technically so considered or not. They were employed by the United States; their officers and men were enlisted and paid by the United States; they were actively engaged in the prosecution of the war, and when they died in the line of their duty they gave their lives for the restoration of the Union. Congress has heretofore granted pensions to widows of officers and men who served in the Mississippi Marine Brigade, as in the case of Mrs. Ravenscroft (Statutes at Large, volume 16, page 692) and in the case of Mrs. Ravenscroft (Statutes at Large, volume 16, page 692) and in the case of Mrs. Ravenscroft (Statutes at Large, volume 16, page 692) and in the case of Mrs. BrAGG. I regret, Mr. Chairman, to be obliged to oppose an-

Mr. BRAGG. I regret, Mr. Chairman, to be obliged to oppose another bill of a soldier nearly shot to death by the diarrhea. [Laughter.] My purpose, however, is to show how wide of the mark this pension committee are. This man was not enlisted into the service of the United States at all. He was a citizen employé in the Quartermaster's Department on the hospital boat. He was a civilian employé. So all that talk about war vessels, about bleeding and dying for our glorious country and all that sort of thing, did not have anything to do with this case. Neither do the precedents amount to anything. This man, as I have said, was simply a civilian employé of the Government on the hospital steamer Woodford. Employés of the Quartermaster's Department who are not enlisted men do not come in under any law pensioning any one, unless you include all of the well pass a general law to pension all the employés, all the women who may be employed in the Departments at Washington and who may be suffering from diarrhea contracted while serving in defense may be sunering from diarrica contracted while serving in defense of our glorious country in those Departments. [Laughter.] I make this statement simply to correct the erroneous statements contained in that report, that it may go on the record.

Mr. BICKNELL. This James T. Allen was the master of the steamer Woodford, one of the vessels of the Mississippi Marine Brigade. As master of that vessel he occupied the same position as the others belonging to that brigade. There was a fleet of boats all enlisted in the same way. This steamer was engaged in carrying hospital stores, and the wounded were placed on it. He was in the same position as the others exactly.

Mr. BRAGG. I think the gentleman is not correct in his statement.

This man was hired by the Quartermaster's Department and received his pay from the Quartermaster's Department. The Mississippi Marine Brigade did not occupy that position.

Mr. BICKNELL. He was enlisted by the quartermaster and was regularly sworn into the service. That is the truth about it. The quartermaster of that brigade was a citizen of our town, and I know all about it.

Mr. BRAGG. Let me call attention to another fact. steamers and barges were in the service of the United States, but their officers and men were not enlisted as soldiers. They were employed by the transportation department as common carriers to transport freight from one point to another. The men were hired by the quartermaster and had no regular enlistment. They were not soldiers in any sense.

Mr. BICKNELL. The master of this hospital steamer was enlisted by the same person who enlisted everybody else who served in the Mississippi Marine Brigade.

Mississippi Marine Brigade.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. BICKNELL. I think not.

Mr. BRAGG. I could show the gentleman a number of soldiers who were transferred to the Mississippi Brigade.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am very liberal about these pensions, but in this case I must enter my protest. The committee should consider what it is doing. If a pension is granted to one who, as in this case, was employed merely as a civilian, there are hundreds of thousands of men, perhaps half a million of men, who will come here as applicants for pensions. That will be the result if you go outside the list of regularly enlisted soldiers. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] is right about this.

If you can confine this to men who were really in the Army I think the law is right. But if Congress makes up its mind to go to this extent in granting pensions let it do so understandingly. Let it know that it opens the pension-roll to I do not know how many thousands of people who have had anything to do in the running of these trans-port vessels, or doing any part of the civilian work that was necessarily connected with the movements of our Army.

Undoubtedly some of the civilians employed in this service lost their lives and others got wounded. When the captain of a transport was ordered to go up a river to carry provisions, with a commissary on board to distribute them, he sometimes got fired on; sometimes from a fort on the bank, sometimes by guerrillas. I knew such a man, a most worthy man and of an excellent family, who was shot in that way while standing in the wheel-house.

But if you are to pass this bill make up your minds to grant pen sions to others of the same class, and the result will be that you will add ten millions to your present pension appropriation bill.

Mr. BICKNELL. The same authority that enlisted the other officers. and men of the Mississippi Marine Brigade enlisted this man and his boat. It was necessary for the fleet that they should have a hospitalsteamer, and the same authority that employed the other boats and men employed this man.

Mr. HAWLEY. If he was truly enlisted, the law is open for his widow to secure a pension now. If he was simply hired and put on the quartermaster's roll as a civilian employé, he is not entitled to a pension. In that case this applicant cannot get a pension unless you establish a new rule.

Mr. WARNER. And if we establish a new rule, let it be established

The question being taken on laying aside the bill, to be reported favorably to the House, there were—ayes 25, noes 18.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I insist on the count by tellers. The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 31, noes 15.

Mr. SHELLEY.

Mr. SHELLEY. I make the point that a quorum has not voted.
Mr. DE LA MATYR. I move that the committee rise.
The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.
The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Stevenson reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration sundry pension bills on the Private Calendar, had directed him to report certain bills favorably, some with and some without amendments, and to report unfavorably the bill (H. R. No. 864) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Frances M. Wilkinson.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent that the previous question may be considered as ordered and pending upon the bills which have been reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and then they will go over until to-morrow morning and be acted upon at that time. It is now quite late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there will be no difficulty in passing all these bills to-night, if gentlemen will remain here fifteen or twenty minutes longer. The first bills upon which the House will be called to act are three bills which at a former session were acted. upon favorably by the Committee of the Whole, but not reported to the House until to-night.

DANIEL D. LONG.

The first bill reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. No. 2467) granting a pension to Daniel D. Long.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HENRY H. FISHER.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole with a favorable recommendation was the bill (H. R. No. 2468) granting a pension to Henry H. Fisher.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this bill will be considered as ordered to be engrossed, and will be passed.

Mr. BRAGG. I object to the passage of that bill, and move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the passage of the bill; and upon a division there were ayes 39, noes none.

Mr. BRAGG. No quorum has voted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] insists upon his point of order that no quorum has voted, and intends to persist in that point in regard to all these bills which have been acted upon favorably by the Committee of the Whole, I will move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. BRAGG. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend] that when I make a motion or point of order I generally insist upon it.

ally insist upon it.
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Then I move that there be a call of the House. The motion was agreed to, more than fifteen members voting in favor thereof.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll; but before the list of absentees had been called,

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania, said: I ask unanimous consent that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with, and that it be agreed that these bills reported from the Committee of the Whole the roll is the talk and the result of the Whole the roll is the talk and the result of the Whole the roll is the talk and the result of the Whole talk and the roll is the roll is the roll in the roll is the roll in the roll. to-night be taken up to-morrow morning immediately after the reading of the Journal, to the exclusion of other business, and then acted

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent that the previous question may be considered as ordered upon all these bills.
Mr. BRAGG. To that I object.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 21, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers covering a report of Lieutenant-Colonel Q. A. Gillmore, Corps of Engineers, upon a survey of the entrance to Cumberland Sound, Florida, made in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WHYTE presented the petition of Thomas S. Iglehart, John W. Williams, J. Henry Sellman, and others, citizens of Anne Arundel County, Maryland, praying for the passage of a law or laws preventing fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in transportation charges; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Thomas Welsh, Thomas S. Beard, William Gaither, and other citizens of Anne Arundel County, Maryland, praying for such an amendment of the patent laws as will pro-land, praying for such an amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent users of patented articles against prosecution as infringers; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Maryland, in favor of the passage of a bill making an appropriation for deepening the channel of Corsica Creek, in Queen Anne County, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WINDOM. I present a petition of the German Society of the city of New York, asking Congress for such national legislation as will protect emigrants arriving in this country, stating the reasons why such protection should be given, the urgent necessity for it, and closing as follows: as follows:

as follows:

The undersigned directors of a society called into existence in 1784 for the express purpose of protecting and assisting the emigrant upon his arrival here, cannot afford to have the times repeated when those emigrants were robbed and plundered when they set their feet upon American soil, and after that were left to shift for themselves.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

REPORT ON CATTLE DISEASES.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The Commissioner of Agriculture sent a communication to the Committee on Agriculture concerning contagious pleuro-pneumonia or lung-plague of cattle. I understand the report which he sends is to be embodied in a volume that will not be ready for some time, and as there is a necessity for the information I am instructed by the committee to ask that the communication be printed for the use of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and that order will be made.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask leave to introduce a bill. I will state that a bill for a similar purpose has been adversely reported, but the objectionable features have been eliminated in the bill which I now present.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1656) to incorporate the Washington and Georgetown Junction Steam Railway Company, of Washington, in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (by request,) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (8. No. 1657) for the relief of Marcus A. Reno; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RANDOLPH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1658) for the relief of William Anthony Shaw; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Patents.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. BAILEY, Mr. BECK, Mr. BUTLER, and Mr. WITHERS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 5524) to establish post-routes; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COKE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. DAWES, it was Ordered, That the petitioners for aid to the National Monument at Plymouth, lassachusetts, have leave to withdraw their papers from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. PLATT, it was Ordered. That the papers in the claim of George T. Marshall be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Finance.

JESSE F. PHARES.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. No. 2508) to regulate the compensation of night-inspectors of customs. It is a matter which will lead to no debate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the regular order. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded, which is the call of the Calendar under the order of the day, commencing at the point reached when it was last under consideration, which is the bill (8. No. 1185) granting a pension to Jesse F. Phares, and the question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell] that the further consideration of the bill be indefinitely postponed. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. COCKRELL called for the yeas and nays, and they wer ordered.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to add one word to what has already been MALEI. I desire to add one word to what has already been said before the vote is taken. I have listened with great care to the statements made on both sides and to the report of the committee. This man, Jesse F. Phares, according to the testimony in the case, was a scout in the employment of the Union Army, and his services were paid for out of the secret-service fund placed at the disposal of the commander for the purpose of employing scouts. He was in the military service of the United States and in no other service. In the very nature of things he could not be borne upon the rolls, for the object of the secret service is secrecy, and the placing of a man upon the rolls at all would have divulged the purpose of his employment. Hence in no army in the world, I apprehend, was a scout or spy-and they mean the same thing—ever placed upon any rolls which could be brought to the attention of the public. The enrollment of a man upon the company rolls necessarily brings the fact of his employment into notice. The object of his employment was that it should be secret. To the question whether he was in the military service, the answer is yes. Was he at the time he was wounded in the discharge of his military duties? The answer of the committee is yes.

It is said that his pay was much larger than that of enlisted men.

Why? Because every one knows that if a spy be caught he is simply shot or hung. That is all there is in it. His hand is against every man and every man's hand is against him. He is not treated as a prisoner of war, and hence the pay is necessarily much larger. This man was wounded in conveying information to the Army by which he was employed of important movements of those opposed to them. In that condition he was wounded and carried into the Union lines where he did impart this information. In my judgment if there was ever a case where a man was entitled to a pension this is one. I desired to state that because I want the record to show why I shall vote as I do, for I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. WITHERS. The statement made by the Senator I regard as a remarkable one, coming from the source it does. It seems to me the Senator must know that this scout was not in a condition to be hung as a spy if captured; he was not in the military service of the Govas a spy it captured; he was not in the military service of the Government, and consequently, if caught within our lines, could not have been executed as a spy. But that statement having been made I wish simply to say a few words in reference to the principles involved in this bill and the precedent to be established by it.

Mr. MAXEY. Allow me to correct the Senator as to my statement.

My understanding of this case when the Senator reported the bill was that Phares was in the employ and pay of the Federal Government as a scout, as it is termed in the bill as it is termed in the bill.

Mr. HEREFORD. So the report shows.
Mr. MAXEY. So the report shows, and I made my statement from that. If the Senator will look at the dictionary he will find that the word "scout" comes from the French word escout, which means a spy. The words "scout" and "spy" are employed indiscriminately. Therefore I think my statement is sustained by the report of the commit-

Mr. WITHERS. I think not. Whatever may be the derivation of the word "scout," the practical understanding of the term and the practice among armies is that scouts as such are not subject to execution when made prisoners. I have myself known many of them captured on both sides, and I never knew one to be executed as a spy. They go out to procure information it is true, but they are not spy. They go out to procure information to is true, see enlisted men, and consequently do not come under the distinctive definition of "spy," subject to such pains and penalties as are prescribed for spies.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator permit-

Mr. WITHERS. I do not question the correctness of the defini-

Mr. MAXEY. As the Senator said my statement was remarkable, I desire the fact to be placed on record that "scout" is defined in Worcester's Dictionary, which is good authority, to be from the old French term escout, or present French écout; écouter, to listen, to hear, and this from the Latin ausculto, to hear—"a person employed to observe the movements and gain intelligence of the numbers of an enemy; a spy." That is the definition of the word.

Mr. WITHERS. I have never questioned the correctness of the Senator's derivation, but I do deny the correctness of his conclusions.

I reassert that scouts were not treated as spies by either army during the late war, nor in any other war of which I have any knowledge.

So much for that point.

This man was not an enlisted man. He belonged to a class who are not pensionable. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] the other day accepted all the consequences of the passage of this bill, in view of the declaration made by the Pension Committee, that it would be regarded as a precedent and as an expression of a desire on the part of the Senate to extend the benefits of the pension acts to a class not now included in them. I want, in view of that fact, to impress upon the Senate the consequences of such action. It would extend the benefits of the pension acts to a class of men of whom no record exists in the Adjutant-General's Office or the Surgeon-General's Office, certainly not in the Adjutant-General's Office, and it would be impossible for the Committee on Pensions or for the Senate to ascertain whether or not the claim for a pension was a valid claim. No record exists in the Adjutant-General's Office of these employed men. We cannot tell whether the injury received was received in the line of duty or not. We cannot tell whether it was received when they were in service, for they were not technically in the service at all.

Now, if the Committee on Pensions are to be instructed to report pensions to all persons belonging to the civil employés connected with the Army, you see at once the difficulty with which we shall be con-fronted. We cannot obtain from the official records of the War Department anything relating to such a man to know whether he is entitled to what he claims.

In addition to that we are already overslaughed by thousands of applications for the passage of special acts for persons who are entitled to pensions; and if we open the door to a class who are not entitled under the pension laws what will be the consequence? Not a single one of these cases can be adjudicated at the Pension Office, because the existing laws make no provision for them. Consequently every one of them will come before Congress; and we are destitute of all official information as to the status of the parties. If the Senate are willing to pass this bill in view of this representation of the facts of the case and the consequences which will inevitably result from the passage of this bill, I say the Senate Committee on Pensions are perfectly willing to carry out the instructions embodied in the

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. President, I am very anxious to get a vote on this bill if I can to-day. I do not desire to ask any Senator to desist from speaking either for or against it, but I am very anxious to get a vote upon it. But I deem it my duty to say a word or two. It seems that every time the bill is called up a good many Senators have forgotten what it is.

As I said when this case was first presented, it is one of the most remarkable cases that have ever been or ever will be presented to this body. The facts are few and simple. In 1861 this man was a Union man, living at Beverly, in Randolph County, Virginia; a man of family; a man in very easy circumstances, as the testimony shows, worth several thousand dollars. As he had a right to do, he took sides in the contest, and it required a good deal for him to take the side that he did; but he had a right to do it and he did it. He entered or enlisted as a scout under General McClellan in 1861, and remained in that service until 1863, when the circumstances because of which we are asking this pension took place. On that morning in 1863, when are asking this pension took place. On that morning in 1863, when the army of the confederates, commanded by General Imboden, was approaching the little town of Beverly, where he lived, where he had his all, where his wife, his children, and his property were, he did not remain in his own house; he did not remain there and demand of the Union officer in command that he should stay and fight and thereby defend his property and his family. If he had done that, the result might have been very different, but upon that morning, at the break of day, he left his wife, he left his property, he left his family in that little town, and went miles in advance of the Union Army and there saw the confederate army approaching under General Imboden.

Upon knowing that fact he attempted to return to the Union Army, to which he was attached, to inform them, so that they might retire and leave himself and his family and his property undefended, knowing that they could not cope with the superior force of the confederate army. He attempted then to go back and inform the officer in command of the Union forces of the approach of the confederate forces, and when he thus attempted to return he was commanded by the confederate officers to halt, just as my friend from Virginia to-day, the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, calls upon the Sen-ate to halt; but I believe the Senate will do as Phares did upon that occasion, that it will not halt, but that it will proceed to do what it believes to be its duty to a brave and a distinguished man. Phares on that occasion did not heed the order; he did not halt; but he put spurs to his horse to inform the officer in command of the Union forces, then he was fired upon by some one in the confederate ranks and when he was fred upon by some one in the confederate rains and that bullet entered his body, passing through his lungs. Most of us when cold lead or cold steel pierces any of us, although not much hurt, would stop; we generally call a halt. Not so with this remarkable man; although the bullet had passed through his body and through his lungs and his life-blood was spurting out, yet he put spurs to his horse to inform the Union forces of the approach of the superior force of the confederates. He did inform them, and as the report of the committee shows, he did it in time to enable them to retreat, thereby saving perhaps the whole Army, perhaps the lives of hundreds. Yet we are called upon and asked to halt and not give this man a pension for fear that it will set an example. I would be willing to give this man the little pension that is asked for him on this occasion in order to have another example of such heroic bravery in defense of his country in what he believed to be right. He was a remarkable man, but he is now lying dying, as the evidence shows us, with a large family upon his hands; dying gradually, dying daily, his property all gone, as the confederate officer testifies to us that the confederate army on that occasion destroyed all of his property, several thousand dollars' worth of it.

I was glad to see the blue and the grey mingled together in this petition asking to give this man a pension. Colonel Hutton, who was one of the colonels in the confederate service; and who took charge of him after he was wounded and administered to his wants, came here at his own expense and made his affidavit and made an appeal to the Senate to pension the man, and in some way to compensate him for the loss of health and for the loss of all of this world's goods that I hope, Mr. President, that the Senate will not halt. This man was, as I said, a remarkable man. He performed a remarkable service upon this occasion. The ordinary soldier could remain safely in his retreat in the little town of Beverly, but this man went ahead. He was to the Union Army upon that occasion what the petrel is to the mariner on the approach of a storm. For this I ask the Senate that it will place him upon the pension-roll, and I hope, Mr. President, that we can get a vote to-day.

Mr. BLAINE. I have listened to this discussion and have been much struck by the strong presentation of the honorable chairman of the Pension Committee. His ground is the danger of the precedent. The only danger I see in the precedent is that other men equally meritorious with this man may also receive pensions. Each case must be decided upon the evidence submitted in connection with it. For one I feel bound to say that I am quite ready to accept the precedent. I am quite ready that the Congress of the United States, out-side of the regular provision made in its law of pensions, shall consider all cases of the same kind of which this may be the precedent. I shall vote against the indefinite postponement and in favor of giving the man a pension.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, independent of the importance of this bill to the individual mentioned in it, we are told by the honorable Senator from Virginia that he will consider it an instruction upon the Committee on Pensions obligatory hereafter and as an alteration of the present general system of pensions.

Mr. WITHERS. Will the Senator permit me to add a word in this connection?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. WITHERS. That is not a statement made by me individually, but it has been the deliberate action of the Committee on Pensions who have selected this as probably the strongest case belonging to the class in order to test the views of the Senator upon the propriety or impropriety of extending the pension laws to all that class of

Mr. BAYARD. I did not doubt that my friend from Virginia was the organ of his committee in making this communication to the Senate. His present statement only makes more authoritative the statement before referred to. But it seems to me that this is not a proposition to alter the principles of the general pension laws. This is manifestly and expressly an exception not provided for by the general pension laws, and which it is not intended to classify hereafter eral pension laws, and which it is not intended to classify hereafter under a general pension law. I take it that after this case has been passed upon by the Senate the pension laws will remain the same in their terms, in their scope, in their provisions, in their principles as they will be whether we pass this bill or not. I therefore do protest against my vote, which as at present informed is to be in favor of the allowance of this pension, being considered as a vote in favor of amending the principle of the present pension laws.

The principle of the pension is that it is a reward given by the Government to those who have been disabled in its military service and in its defense. The United States have arranged certain rules and in its defense. The United States have arranged certain raies on that subject directly connecting the death or disability of an individual with his service and allowing a pension proportionately according to the proper scale. Here is a case in which military service, strictly military in its nature, of a highly dangerous and meritorious character, was performed by a man who at the time of performing it did not happen to be enrolled in the military ranks strictly speaking. Can there be danger in it when we know that military service as a class is performed by men who are enlisted, enrolled, paid, and regulated for that service? And when an extraordinary service can be performed by a man under military suggestion or military authority, may he not come forward without being enrolled and stand in the same rank with those who have been enrolled? And when both are in the same engagement, shall we not return thanks and pay and honor to the one when we give them to the other? I take it there is no danger in the selection of cases of this kind. Where as in the present case a man not enrolled did perform a highly meritorious and valuable military service, can it be that it is dangerous to take that case with its surrounding circumstances, and testing it by the general pension law and finding that the general pension law does not provide for it, can it be that we are inflicting a wound upon the pension system when we shall allow the special reward of the special case by a special act made necessary because it does not come within the broad rule and distinction of our general pension law?

I confess, sir, if this were to establish a new rule of pensions, I should feel myself very much embarrassed; but I apprehend that this case will leave the pension laws just where we find them. This is a special case; it is for special service; it needs a special act; the general pension laws cannot reach it; and believing that this man has performed for his Government a highly dangerous and meritorious service from a pension for which he is excluded by the present pension law, I am willing to vote for a special act which shall reward

Mr. FARLEY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAYARD.

Certainly.

The difference between this case and that of a reg-Mr. FARLEY. ular soldier is this; this gentleman was in the employ of the Government as I understand at $60 a month; the regular soldier goes into the service under a contract at a much less rate. The committee considered that as this man was employed at a compensation far above that of any of the soldiers in the service, and as he was at liberty to withdraw whenever he saw proper and go where he pleased as he was under no military control, as he was not like the regular enlisted soldier but received $60 or $70 a month, while the regular soldier received $13 a month, this man got extra pay for his service, and the conclusion the committee came to was that he was not in the same line under the law as the enlisted soldiers of the country for whom pensions have been provided.

Mr. BAYARD. There is no kind of doubt that this man's services were extraordinary. There is no doubt that the pay which he received was beyond the pay of a common soldier. So was the pay of a lieutenant, so was the pay of a captain. We cannot regulate the merit of men or their right to recognition by the mere matter of their rank or the amount of their pay. If his pay was greater, so was his risk greater.

But that is not the question. It is simply because as my friend from California remarked that this man was not an enlisted soldier and therefore could not be brought within the line of the general pension laws, that in view of the extraordinary circumstances which surround his case I am willing to vote for a special act for his relief. I do not care whether it takes the shape of a sum in gross awarded to him under the circumstances or takes the shape of an annuity payable monthly or otherwise.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I only rise for the purpose of replying to what the Senator from Virginia was pleased to term a remarkable statement made by me in connection with this matter. I stated the fact that scouts if apprehended were liable to be shot. I repeat that statement. It was stated that this man was not borne upon the rolls. Now I happen to know that scouts are not borne upon any public Now I happen to know that scouts are not borne upon any public rolls; they are not paid out of a public fund; and I call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Burnside] who has had experience in matters of that kind as well as myself, to the fact that a fund called a secret-service fund is placed in the hands of the general commanding an army, and out of that fund he pays the scouts just what he believes is right. They are placed under nobody's orders, and in the secret service of the secret secret service of the secret secret service of the secret secret service of the secret secret secret secret secret secret secre in the nature of things cannot be placed under anybody's orders. Their names are not borne on any public archives kept in the Adjutant-General's office, or the commanding general's office, but if kept are in a secret and confidential paper, and are paid by the commanding general without saying anything to anybody about it, out of the secret-service fund, the very purpose being to conceal from the whole world their employment, and in the nature of things he cannot be under anybody's orders except the general who employs him. That is all I wish to say on that point.

Mr. WITHERS. With regard to the fact of the liability to being shot, the best answer to the argument is the experience in this case. This man was made a prisoner, and was not shot. Therefore he was not regarded or treated as a spy.

Now, in response to the argument of my friend from Delaware, I ask him whether it concurs with his ideas of justice to select this particular individual from a class precisely similar in every other respect as to service, as to danger, as to pay, and make him the recipient of a pension when hundreds and perhaps thousands of the same class are denied it? In the view of the Senator who urges it this case is exceptional in its character? My friend from West Virginia last year proposed to pay a pension to a wagoner. My friend over yonder has a case now on the Calendar where another man was shot above the elbow who is not in a pensionable class. He thinks it a remarkable case where a pension ought to be granted. I have in my desk an application in the case of another scout who is alleged to have been wounded in the head, producing insanity and subsequent death. I am holding it back. Thousands of these applicants have no friends in the Senate to come here and make eloquent appeals to our sympathies. There are many equally meritorious, some possibly more so. ticular individual from a class precisely similar in every other respect in the Senate to come here and make eloquent appeals to our sympathies. There are many equally meritorious, some possibly more so, who are denied a pension because the provisions of the general laws do not entitle them to it. Why, because a man has friends on the floor of the Senate should we erect him into an exceptional case and refuse to all others who are equally meritorious the benefit of the pension laws? The Committee on Pensions are of opinion that this is a wrong principle on which to adjudicate these cases; that if the provisions of the pension law are extended they ought to be extended to the whole class, and therefore they have selected this case, as I stated when up before, to test the question. The Senator who reported this bill presented every fact pertinent to the case bearing upon it so as to make the most favorable showing possible. The committee have selected this case in order to test the view of the Senate as to the propriety or impropriety of extending the benefits of the pension law to a class of impropriety of extending the benefits of the pension law to a class of persons who are not now entitled to it. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I have some views on this question which I expressed before the committee on this bill, which I think it proper that I should state to the Senate.

I think, sir, there is no kind of doubt that this case is clearly within not one but a dozen provisions of the laws regulating pensions, and I have been surprised at the course of the argument here in contest-I have been surprised at the course of the argument here in contesting a bill of this description. Why, sir, the very object and spirit of the pension laws is to encourage acts of gallantry and bravery. They do not discriminate against any; and to my mind it is a great solecism to say that those laws are intended to encourage enlistment. If a man enlists and does not fight, if he exhibits no valor and no courage, of what value is the enlistment? The pension system is intended and in every just government must be intended to encourage bravery, daring, courage, enterprise, and character in the military service and it is no part of our laws, the idea is inconsistent with the whole spirit of our legislation upon the subject, that the pension system is intended as a contract, a compensation for a man's surrender of his life or his health. The requisitions for the military service of a man in no government depend on the idea of compensation. It is an exaction of duty from the citizen to his government.

Now, sir, look at these laws. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kirkwood] was perfectly right the other day, and I ask the consideration of the Senate to the laws for the purpose of showing that there is no doubt whatever that this case is clearly within the direct letter and spirit of the laws. What does the statute say? It says:

Any person not an enlisted soldier in the Army-

Showing clearly that the idea of enlistment cannot be a discrimination against this man-serving for the time being as a member of the militia of any State, under orders of an officer of the United States, or who volunteered for the time being to serve with any regularly organized military or naval force of the United States, or who otherwise volunteered and rendered service.

Whoever shall undertake to say that the term "volunteered" is to be limited because a compensation is paid to the party, speaks without reason and against the spirit of the law. What further? Turn to section 4710 of the statutes:

If applying on account of an enlisted soldier who was not mustered, or a non enlisted man in temporary service—

What does that mean? "A non-enlisted man in temporary service." What does that mean? "A non-emisted man in temporary service." It is plain from another provision of the pension laws. It is not necessary to read the whole section. I am saying that there is no discrimination in the law, and the Committee on Pensions had no right to assume that a man could be excluded from a pension because he was not an enlisted man, and not in the regular service. I mean to say that the terms, words, and discriminations upon which the honorable chairman of the committee and other members of it rely, are of no force and effect as discriminating against the reason, the spirit, and the purpose of the law.

Again, it is said in section 4722:

The provisions of this title are extended to the officers and privates of the Missouri State militia, and the provisional Missouri militia, disabled by reason of injury received or disease contracted in the line of duty.

So throughout the whole system of the line of duty.

So throughout the whole system of the law. The idea that a pension is prohibited to men rendering temporary service, prohibited to men in the militia, prohibited to any other than regularly enlisted men for regular terms of service, has no warrant either in the letter or in the spirit and object of the law.

Again, I am surprised at the idea suggested here that he who more than fulfills the law, he who renders conspicuous and daring service of a military character, he who exposes his life and who does it willingly and cheerfully and is wounded or disabled, is not within the terms and spirit of the law, because he does not do it by virtue of an engagement and contract, because he was not compelled to do it. In the view of some it seems that the end of the law being attained is of no importance and of no consequence unless the man was compelled and constrained by obligation to do the thing he did.

I answer decidedly and earnestly in favor of granting this pension to this man, because he was a gallant soldier, he rendered military service, he incurred risk, he lost his health cheerfully and willingly, and from a high and conscientious sense of duty. Upon that subject there can be no doubt; and I, like the Senator from Maine, would be glad to see every other man standing in the like case in the received. glad to see every other man standing in the like case in the receipt of a pension from the Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion for indefinite postponement, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. INGALLS, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. Hamlin.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Anthony] is necessarily absent. He is not paired upon this bill, which evidently does not divide parties politically, but he is not political questions with the Senator from Tays. [Mr. is paired on all political questions with the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Coke.] The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Bruce] is also necessarily absent. He is paired on political questions, but not on this bill, with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.]

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 40; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that the third reading be in full, to see if the orn of the bill is correct.

The bill was read the third time at length.

Mr. INGALLS. What rate of pension will he be entitled to under the pension laws to which the bill refers?

Mr. WITHERS. There is no law authorizing it. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there is a necessity for fixing the rate of pension in the bill itself, because there is no provision of the pension law governing it.

pension law governing it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no place where he can be classed. The bill ought to be amended to put him in.

Mr. HEREFORD. The bill comes from the Pension Committee in this form. I suppose, therefore, there must be some law which will govern it

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the bill be amended by allowing him $50 a month.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading will be regarded as reconsidered for that purpose. The Senator from Kansas moves an amendment that this man be pensioned at the rate of $50 a month.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend by providing that he be paid as though enlisted as a private soldier.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa proposes to amend the amendment of the Senator from Kansas by providing that he be pensioned as an enlisted man.

Mr. GROOME. Is another amendment in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not. Two amendments are already pending.

Mr. WITHERS. Before the vote is taken I wish to state that as this gentleman's services have been so exceptional as to justify the Senate by a vote of 3 to 1 in granting him a pension, it certainly ought to entitle him to a pension of at least $50.

Mr. HEREFORD. I accept the amendment for $50.

Mr. GROOME. I wish to make one remark. I think the rate of pension ought to be as high, if he is pensioned at all, as the rate of his monthly pay in the service; and that being the case, I propose to move $100 a month if the opportunity is afforded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Laws to the amendment of the Senator from Kan-of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, that this claimant be pensioned as an enlisted man.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is now on the amendment as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask to take from the Calendar Senate bill—

Mr. HEREFORD. I should like to know exactly the condition of the bill just passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, as an enlisted private, the name of Jesse F. Phares, late a scont under General McClellan.

Mr. INGALLS. That is not correct. The bill should be amended at the close by saying "and pay him a pension at the rate allowed to an enlisted private."

Mr. HEREFORD. The Senator from Kansas moved an amendment to this bill, to allow him $50 a month, and the chairman of the Pension Committee, in view of the meritorious services of the party and the expression of sentiment on the part of the Senate that he should receive a pension, agreed that he should have $50 a month. I hope he will have at least that. So I trust the amendment of the Senator from Kansas will prevail, and that $50 a month will be fixed

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will not be in order unless the vote passing the bill be reconsidered.

Mr. HEREFORD. I move a reconsideration with a view to having the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, which I thought and other Senators around me thought was incorporated in the bill, in-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia moves that the vote by which this bill was passed be reconsidered.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from West Virginia to the fact that private soldiers are rated according to their disability. They may receive $4, $8, $12, $24, $50, or $72 a month; so that if this man is so disabled as to place him in one of those higher classes, I think he will be so placed without reference to this amend-

Mr. WITHERS. There is no doubt of the correctness of the position taken by the Senator from Iowa; but the phraseology now would cover the case exactly, because the board of medical examiners would have to atate the degree of disability which existed and fix this rate of pension. But that does not meet the point made by the Senator from West Virginia, which is, that he is entitled to $50, not because of the degree of his disability, but of the very exceptional character of the services rendered.

Mr. HEREFORD. Not only that, Mr. President, but the testimony in this case shows that there were several thousand dollars' worth of property taken from this man at the time by the confederates, and under the law there is no way in which he can be paid at all except in this way. The confederate officer and the Union officer both testify that afterward, at the time the confederate forces entered Beverly; where this man lived, they destroyed several thousand dollars' worth of his property. I hope that the bill will be reconsidered, and that $50 a month will be fixed in the bill as the rate of this pension.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to make one suggestion to the Senators. By the existing law as it is construed at the Department, no special legislative cases like this is entitled to draw pension prior to the date of the enactment conferring the pension. In this case, as in all other cases, it seems to me justice requires that the pension should commence from the date of disability, as well when the pension is conferred by special act of Congress as when it is granted under the general law, and the House has passed a general bill of that kind already. In this particular case, if the bill is to be reconsidered and there is to be any amendment, I would suggest to the Senator from West Virginia, as there may be some indisposition to fix this rate of pension at a higher degree than that of the ordinary enlisted man, that he so at a higher degree than that of the ordinary enlisted man, that he so amend the bill that the pension shall commence with the date of the disability. That would give him ten or twelve hundred dollars, which might be in some sense part compensation for the loss of his property, and would place him where he ought to be, perhaps, with the average of enlisted men for the future.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator permit me to ask him one

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand the Senator as advocating the duty and the right of this Government to make compensation for property destroyed by confederate or rebel soldiers? Is that a ground why this amount should be paid to this man? And are we to understand by voting for this that the Senate of the United States is established the mediant that the Construction of the United States is established. lishing the precedent that the Government of the United States is liable for the depredations committed by the confederates or, as my friends would say, the rebels?

Mr. BLAIR. I should be extremely sorry if the Senator understood me in any such way. I will take specific care to see that he shall not so understand me. I merely made my suggestion in connection with that of the Senator from West Virginia, who alluded to the loss of property as a reason, in connection with the unusually meritorious services of this man, why he should be pensioned at a higher rate than the ordinary one. I made the suggestion that he draw a pension from the date of disability because justice requires that in every such case it should commence from the time when the disability commenced, and such is the law with reference to those who have been placed upon the pension-roll under the ordinary provisions relating to the granting of pensions, and the House, as I have said, has already, as I understand, passed such a general bill applicable to those pensions conferred by special act. If there is any reason why the pension should be given at all by special act, why should it not be given from the date when the disability commenced?

This man was a scout. Everybody knows that in active operations the fate of an army is as often in the hands of its scouts as in the hands of its generals. The high compensation this man was paid was paid undoubtedly for the reason that his services were of an unusually valuable character; and the qualities which enable a man to render that class of service are unusually rare, and are indispensable to an army, and therefore higher compensation had to be given for them than for the services of the ordinary enlisted soldier. But if he is placed on the pension-roll he seems likely to go there as an ordinary enlisted man; and I only suggested to the Senator from West Virginia, who seems to have this case specially in charge, that if the bill is to be reconsidered for the purpose of amendment he should make his amendment cover the whole intervening period from the convenement of the disability. That is simply natural justice and commencement of the disability. That is simply natural justice, and it has nothing whatever to do with compensation for property destroyed under the ordinary usages of war.

Mr. PLUMB. I voted for the bill and I am in favor of its general principles, and I shall vote for the reconsideration so far as it may be necessary to fix some reasonable rate of pension; but I want to say now that I do not care to discriminate against private soldiers in favor of this class of people. I do not believe that any more meritorious class of persons ever served the Government in the Army than the private soldiers. I think the law has gone much too far already in discriminating in favor of the officer as against the soldier. When the Union Army was dissolved into its original elements and men went back to their homes, the actual necessities, social and otherwise, of the private soldier who served his country, whether he was disabled or otherwise, and went back among his associates, were just as great as those of the officer. The law heretofore has discriminated in favor of the officer and against the soldier. I know within my own limited acquaintance that the men who served in the ranks were entitled to just as much social consideration, and received it, lived upon just as great a scale of expenditure so far as their means enabled them to live, as the officers did, and we have perpetuated the distinctions of the war without reason in the granting of pensions.

While I will vote for a private soldier's pension to this man, I certainly will not vote to give him a greater rate of pension than is given to many officers who suffered equal disabilities.

On the other hand, it seems to me that it is not now proper to make the language of this bill an exception to all cases where pensions are granted by private acts, and to make this pension date from the date of disability, when the fact is that among the many hundreds and even thousands of cases where pensions have been granted by special act they date only from the passage of the act. If it shall seem proper, as it may and probably will in due time, to put those people who have been granted pensions by special act of Congress upon a footing with those whom we recognized last year in what is called the arrears of pension act, then let all go together; but do not single out this man, who whatever his merit may be, never could have been more meritorious, even if he was as meritorious, as a man who accepted $13 or $16 a month and served in the ranks as a private soldier.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I must confess my astonishment at the imputation thrown out first by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Hereford] and corroborated by the Senator from New Hamp-shire, [Mr. Blair.] The suggestion of the Senator from New Hamp-shire was that this bill should be so amended as to include arrears of pension pay, that is, to pay him a pension from the date of his disability. Why? To make compensation for losses sustained by this man on account of the rebel soldiers taking his personal property. It was distinctly stated by the Senator from West Virginia as a reason and an inducement why a large amount should be fixed as the pension that this scout lost a large amount of personal property by the depredations of the rebels; that there being no law under which he could be paid this was an incidental way of paying him, and the Senator from New Hampshire suggested the question of arrears of pension, and brought in connection with that the fact of his having lost property. For what reason?

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will allow me, I will answer him as I have already once answered him very distinctly and fully. The Senator from West Virginia spoke of the large sacrifices of property of this man. I said to him in substance that I thought if this man was to be pensioned as an enlisted man, it would be strictly just (as under the general law was already the case, and as it was already clear in the judgment of the House should be the case) that he should be pensioned from the date of disability. I said in substance that I thought the sentiment of the Senate would be against any increased compensation in the nature of a return for the property destroyed, but this would be a perfectly just and right thing to do, that he should draw a pension from the commencement of his disability as in all other cases where services have been rendered of a dangerous and all other cases where services have been rendered of a dangerous and disabling nature. The effort of the Senator from Missouri to give the impression that I am in favor of paying for property destroyed by war is not justified by anything I said. I never intimated that I was in favor of giving compensation for property destroyed according to the usual laws of war. I simply said to the Senator from West Virginia that while the thought which he had in his mind could not be accepted as I thought by the Senate, nevertheless justice to a still greater degree could be done in accordance with all the rules that are applicable to the granting of pensions by allowing this pension to commence at the date of the disability. That is what I said, and that is what I desired to be understood as saying—nothing more whatever.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply desire to call attention to the fact that the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from New Hampshire connected the point they were making that this scout was entitled to a large amount with the fact of his loss of property by the depredations of the rebel soldiers, and to enter my most solemn and earnest protest against the Senate of the United States committing itself to any such doctrine.

Mr. HEREFORD. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.
Mr. HEREFORD. I withdraw my motion for reconsideration. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator can withdraw the motion by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. BLAIR. Let me say to the Senator from Missouri that the Senate and the country decided against the claims he speaks of long before the Senator from Missouri thought it proper to take his position.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is consent given to the withdrawal of the motion to reconsider?

Several Senators objected.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senate to vote it down.

INTERNATIONAL LITERARY CONGRESS.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have received a very interesting paper from the Secretary of State, and I will ask that it, with the accompanying inclosure, which is brief, may be read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication sent up by the Senator from Indiana will be read. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 17, 1880.

Washington, April 17, 1880.

Six: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the information and consideration of your committee, a copy of a dispatch, No. 318, of the 17th ultimo (and also of its inclosure) from Mr. Noyes, minister of the United States at Paris, conveying to this Government an invitation from the president of the International Literary Association to participate in the proceedings of the association by appointing a delegate to represent the United States officially at the Lisbon congress, to be held on the 1st of June next, on the three hundredth anniversary of the death of the root Campeon.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, March 17, 1880.

Sir: I have the honor to forward herewith a letter addressed to yourself from the officers of the International Literary Association, which has been sent to me by those gentlemen for transmittal.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

EDWARD F. NOYES.

Hon. WILLIAM M. EVARTS Secretary of State.

International Literary Association, founded in pursuance of a resolution of the congress of Paris, (1878,) and of London, (1879,) 51 Rue Vivienne, Paris: honorary president, Mr. Victor Hugo.

PARIS, March 15, 1880.

PARIS, March 15, 1880.

Mr. MINISTER: The International Literary Congress, which met at Paris in the month of June, 1878, under the presidency of Mr. Victor Hugo, resolved to create a literary association, whose object it should be to secure the triumph of the great principle of intellectual property and the indefeasible rights of authors.

This association performed its functions regularly during the year 1878-'79, and its labors were submitted to the congress which met at London in June, 1879. During that second session, in which the most eminent literary men of all nations took part, the by-laws of the association were approved, and important questions were examined, the realization of which still belongs to the future. Before its dissolution, however, the London congress designated the city of Lisbon as the place for holding its third session.

The sessions of that new congress will be inaugurated under the presidency of His Majesty the King of Portugal, on the 1st of June next, which time will coincide with the celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the death of the poet Camoëns.

Several governments have already been pleased to designate a delegate to represent them officially at the Lisbon congress.

Your enlightened and progressive Government will perhaps think proper to participate in this civilizing movement by appointing a representative. All the members of the association would gratefully hail such an act, and the most respectful as well as the most fraternal welcome would be extended to the delegate of your as well as the most tratefinate who described to accept, Mr. Minister, the assurance of our very high consideration.

The Presidents of the International Literary Association,

J. DAS. MENDES LEAL.

J. M. TORRES CAICEDO.

The Secretary General, JULES LÉRMINO. The communications were referred to the Committee on the Library. and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2467) granting a pension to Daniel D. Long; A bill (H. R. No. 2481) to create an additional land district in the State of Kansas;

A bill (H. R. No. 3717) relating to convicts in the territorial prison of Idaho Territory;
A bill (H. R. No. 3751) to amend chapter 198, volume 16, of the Statutes at Large; and tana Territory, and to establish a new post on the frontier.
A bill (H. R. No. 5894) to authorize the sale of Fort Logan, Montrea Territory, and to establish a new post on the frontier.

The message also announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate for the printing of 10,500 copies of the Report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1879, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 100) to print extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1879, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 91) to print the eulogies delivered in the Senate and House of Representatives upon the late George S. Houston, a Senator from the State of Alabama.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. No. 1489) to remove the political disabilities of Roger A. Pryor, of New York;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 56) authorizing the printing and binding of additional copies of the report of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 102) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents, flags, and camp equipage for the use of the soldiers' reunion to be held at Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin, in June, 1880.

GENEVA AWARD FUND.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of its unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the considera-tion of the bill (S. No. 1194) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] to the fourth section of the bill, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of section 4 down to and including line 11, in the following words:

That so much of the twelfth section of the said act as provides that "no claim shall be admissible or allowed by said court by or in behalf of any insurance company or insurer, either in its or his own right or as assignee, or otherwise, in the right of a person or party insured, as aforesaid, unless such claimant shall show to the satisfaction of said court that during the late rebellion the sum of its or his losses in respect to its or his war risks exceeded the sum of its or his premiums or other gains upon or in respect to such war risks; and in case of any such allowance, the same shall not be greater than such excess of loss," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senate understands that this is the amendment that if it prevails excludes the insurance companies from any participation.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNSIDE, (when Mr. Anthony's name was called.) On this question my colleague [Mr. Anthony'] is paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Logan.] If my colleague were here he would vote

"yea."

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. My colleague [Mr. Logan] if here would vote "nay."

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (when his name was called.) I am paired upon this bill with the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN.] If he were here he would vote "nay" on this amendment, and I should vote "yea."

Butler,

Mr. DAWES, (when Mr. Hoar's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. Hoar] is necessarily absent, and is paired, I understand, with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. BAYARD. If I had been in the Senate at the moment my name was called I should have announced the pair. I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hoar.] If not paired, I should

Mr. DAWES. My colleague would vote "yea," if he were here.
Mr. BECK, (when the name of Mr. Jones, of Florida, was called.)
The Senator from Florida [Mr. Jones] left the city this morning. I am paired with him. If present, he would vote "yea" and I should wote "nay."

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, (when Mr. Logan's name was called.) On this question the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Logan] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

Mr. THURMAN, (when Mr. McDonald's name was called.) The Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDonald's name was called.) The from Wisconsin, [Mr. Carpenter.]

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 38, nays 19; as follows:

VEAS—38

Groome,

So the amendment was agreed to.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next question is on the amendment

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the substitute of the Senator from Indiana

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is another amendment to the text pending, offered by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Kirkwood.]
Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg pardon.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator From Iowa will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is in section 5, line 5, to strike out the words "and the interest accruing therefrom."

Mr. THURMAN. I only rise to say what I announced before to the Senate several times, that if the amendment just voted on prevailed, it would not be right for me to continue in charge of this bill. vailed, it would not be right for me to continue in charge of this bill. In the shape the bill has now assumed by so decided a vote, I cannot vote for the bill, I cannot support it at all in any way, and it is not right that it should be in my charge when a majority of the Senate are so diametrically opposed to the views which I entertain. I therefore leave it to those who are obviously in the majority to take charge of this bill. I would suggest that the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who is a member of the Judiciary Committee and was in the minority in the committee on this measure, should take charge of the bill; but after what he said yesterday in opposition to war premiums I do not know but that he will pretty soon have to abandon charge of the bill for the same reason that I do. He may find himself in the minority; there is no telling how that will be, and therefore I have no suggestion to make, but I leave it to the Senators who entertain opinions so diametrically opposite to mine to say who shall have this bill in charge.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I am not at present inclined to receive any legislative legacies from my deceased friend from Ohio [laughter;] but I wish to remind him in all seriousness, leaving the joke apart, that in the bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary is still left a provision that the Committee on the Judiciary thought under the circumstances was wise and right, making provision for the destructions by what are called the exculpated cruisers; and I suggest to my friend from Ohio therefore that he ought not to abandon that part of the bill that he, with myself in that respect, (though I was in a minority in the committee on the bill in general) agreed to, until some vote of the Senate shall have proved that although the Senate is not willing to go to the whole extent that he was desirous to go, it is willing to go with him for aught we yet know upon what both he and I agreed in the committee that we would provide for—the exculpated cruisers' destructions.

Mr. THURMAN. A very brief answer will satisfy the Senator from Vermont that that suggestion has no foundation sufficient to support it. The bill as it did stand provided for two classes: those upon whose claims the award was made at Geneva—they were made the first class—and the sufferers by the exculpated cruisers were made a second class. The Senate by a decided vote has said it does not care what the tri-The Senate by a decided vote has said it does not care what the tri-bunal at Geneva decided, that although this money was obtained for these claims it shall be given to somebody else. The Senate having stricken out the first class from the bill, the Senator will see that I cannot take charge of a bill which will make the second class the first, for that would be the effect of passing the second class in the bill now after the first class is stricken out.

Mr. WHYTE. I should like to understand exactly the question pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment of Mr. KIRKWOOD is to strike ont, in section 5 of the bill, in line 5, the words "and the interest accruing therefrom."

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I supposed that the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] would be first in order.
Mr. EDMUNDS. No, that is a substitute.
Mr. KIRKWOOD. How does the amendment offered by me come before the Senate now

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is an amendment to the text of the ill. The Chair understood the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut to be a substitute.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I understand the situation to be this: The Senator from Connecticut presented an amendment which he proposed to offer, but it could not be offered at that time in order. After he had done that, I did the same thing in regard to another matter; I submitted an amendment that I proposed to offer when it should become in order; but I have not yet offered it and I am at a loss to know how it comes before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is an amendment to the text of the bill, and the only amendment to the text of the bill pending.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Very well.

Mr. BLAINE. I thought I heard from the Chair the intimation that the next amendment in order was the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut in the nature of a substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hoar,] in the nature of a substitute, is next.

Mr. BLAINE. That is the way I understood the case, and I must have misunderstood the Chair.

Mr. THURMAN. Has the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS,] been acted on?
Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not offered any yet.
Mr. THURMAN. I thought the Senator from Vermont was on the floor to offer an amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rose to offer an amendment to the text to carry out the spirit of the vote already taken by the Senate, but was told by the Chair that there was a preceding amendment to another part of the text, and therefore I could not make any proposition at the time Mr. THURMAN. Has the Senator an amendment to the text of the bill ?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. THURMAN. Yes, sir.

It is in order.

But the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is Mr. EDMUNDS. to the text of the bill, and therefore that amendment being pending had no status to offer mine at the time.

I had no status to offer mine at the time.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa be reported. I have not heard it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again reported. The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is, in section 5, line 5, to strike out "and the interest accruing therefrom."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This is the only amendment pending to the text of the bill.

the text of the bill.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. When that matter is under the consideration of the Senate I shall desire to say a very few words in regard to it. I am not prepared to do so at this time, at least as intelligently as I should like to do; and if it be in order, I will for the moment withdraw the amendment

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is in order, no action having been had under it, and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move, to perfect the text of the bill before we vote on any substitute, to strike out in section 4, lines 12 to 17 all inclusively, from the word "that" in line 12 to the word "class" in line 17. That portion of the section should have been properly included in the amendment that the Senate has already voted upon, as the chief client in the amendment that the Senate has already voted upon, as it merely follows upon the first part.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont proposes to strike out the words which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the following words, from line 12 to line 17 of section 4:

That any claimant excluded by the provision hereby repealed shall have the like period of time within which to present, file, and prove its or his claim after the passage of this act as he could have had after the passage of the said act if not so excluded; and such claims shall be considered as claims of the first class.

Mr. BLAINE. That is merely conforming to the previous action of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now in order to perfect the text in the same section that as it now stands provides only for the sufferers by the exculpated cruisers, and in order to make the language clear, I move to amend in this way: In line 17 of section 4 strike out the words "and such" and insert "said;" so as to read:

Said court shall consider, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Then in line 18 of the same section I move to strike out the word "also" and insert in lieu thereof the words "subject to the provisions of said act;" so as to read:

Said court shall, subject to the provisions of said act, consider and allow all claims properly proved, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. What is the exact meaning of those words?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The exact meaning of those words is to provide that the sufferers by the exculpated cruisers shall be subject to exactly the same limitation about gross freights and unearned profits, &c., that those who have been paid before were subject to.

Mr. BLAINE. All right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I move in section 4, lines 18 and 19 to strike out the words "and not included in the first class." Those words need to be stricken out because we have stricken out the first class.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then in line 21 of section 4, I move to strike out the word "including," and to insert "to," so as to read in that connection:

Resulting from damage done on the high seas by confederate cruisers during the late rebellion to vessels and cargoes, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. EDMUNDS. After the word "cargoes," in order to make it conform to the provisions of the original act as to vessels destroyed, I move to insert the words "of citizens of the United States adhering thereto during the late rebellion;" so as to read:

Resulting from damage done on the high seas by confederate cruisers, during the late rebellion, to vessels and cargoes of citizens of the United States adhering thereto during the late rebellion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I move to strike out in line 22 the words "on the high seas" and to insert the words "by such cruisers or their tenders," so as to bring it into the same line as the original act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then in line 22 after the word "seas" as it stands in the print, I move to strike out the whole of the rest of that section, being five lines in these words:

Or pursued by them therefrom, although the loss or damage occurred within three miles of the shore, and whether such claims be made by the original property-owner or by an underwriter who paid for such loss or damage, which claims shall be considered as claims of the second class.

That is to make it conform exactly to the original provision about destroyed vessels.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont if by striking out the words last named he would not exclude a vessel that was attacked outside of maritime jurisdiction but finally captured inside?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, Mr. President, because I have stricken out the words "on the high seas" and have left it just as the original act was about the destructions we have paid for, which had no such lim-

Mr. HAMLIN. Neither as to the point of attack, nor the point where

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no such provision in the original act.
The object is to put the destructions by the exculpated cruisers upon the same ground as the destruction by the inculpated cruisers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to insert in lieu of what is stricken out so as to read as part of that section these words:

But no claim shall be presented to said court that was within the jurisdiction of the same as originally constituted by said act.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator explain the effect of that?
Mr. EDMUNDS. I will if you give me a chance to do it.
The object of the amendment is to exclude from a new trial every man that was beaten and whose claim was disallowed under the original act. I do not propose, for one, on any account to open up new trials of matters that the court had jurisdiction of before. That is the object and effect, and the sole object and effect, of the amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to ask the Senator from Vermont if it will not exclude three or four small claims that were never presented on account of the parties being abroad, I think amounting to but a few hundred dollars? I think some of them were sums due to sailors who were out of the country in other vessels. I have no objection to the amendment if in its scope it extends not beyond what the Senator has stated; but if it excludes those parties who never had a hearing, (and there are some little cases like the ones I name of sailors who were abroad,) I would certainly think it very wrong.

Mr. BLAINE. The language of the amendment goes a great deal further than the statement of the Senator from Vermont. I think it very proper that the court should not be harried and worried with an | will be reported.

infinite number of applications for new trials of what may have been rejected after fair hearing. But the Senator's amendment reads:

But no claim shall be presented to said court that was within the jurisdiction of the same as originally constituted.

A man might have been off in the farthest quarter of the globe, not had an opportunity to present his case, or by some even fault of his own he may never have had a hearing. Why should you exclude him from it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should exclude him from it for the same rea-Mr. EDMUNDS. I should exclude him from it for the same reasons of public propriety and making an end of things that we exclude everybody by statutes of limitation and other similar provisions. The particular point to which my friend from Maine on my left [Mr. Hamlin] has referred is not new with the Committee on the Judiciary. Soon after the passage of the original act and after the time for the presentation of claims, which I think was six months or some short time, had elapsed, we were pressed in the Judiciary Committee by people who professed and perhaps truly in some instances to represent small claims of persons who were said to be far away, and so resent small claims of persons who were said to be far away, and so forth, for allowance and who wished to have the Committee on the Judiciary in some extension act that we did pass extending the powers of the court longer than they had been originally continued, to put in a provision for claims that had not been presented within the time. We heard the arguments and statements in support of these applications and took time to consider; and while we took time to applications and took time to consider; and while we took time to consider as we were wishing to do justice and right, we became satisfied, I think all of us, that to open that door—and if you open it at all you must open it entirely for claims that had not been presented before; you cannot specify—will result in ninety in one hundred of every one of these claims thus presented being fictitious. Some people on a certain coast of the United States that it would be invidious to mention, attorneys and claim agents and so forth, professed to represent hundreds of sailors and people who on looking over shipping lists, &c., they had found to have departed in these ships and never come back, and so they said "this sailor must have had so much clothing and so on." We got a little suspicious, a good deal suspicious, that in the majority of such cases the claims so far as they would appear before the tribunal would be merely trumped up, presented by persons who did not truly represent anybody, or in the names of sailors who were dead and gone and who never thought of making any claim, and the claim itself would be perfectly trivial, to get a lot of money in the way such things are always fixed. The committee, therefore, declined, and I think wisely, to take any step in that direction, and said at that time to people who professed to represent these tion, and said at that time to people who professed to represent these parties, "If you bring to us a particular case of A B and show us that you are authorized to represent him, and that he did suffer, we will consider whether we will not present a special bill to pay him out of the Treasury; we will not bother this court with it." So we did not do what was asked, and we passed a bill making the extension without any provision of this character.

Now, I think it is essential to the safety and good order of the Government that we should put into this bill a specific provision that nothing shall come before this revived court that it had jurisdiction of before that has come to an end. The object of this bill is to provide for the sufferers by the exculpated cruisers, and also if the Senate shall so think for the war-premium people.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think the amendment is too narrow in its scope as explained by the Senator from Vermont. It is within my knowledge that there are possibly a half dozen cases of seamen who were as explained by the Senator from Vermont. It is within my knowledge that there are possibly a half dozen cases of seamen who were on board the various vessels that were destroyed, who were out of the country when the court of 1874 was organized, and were not able to present their claims. It is true, as the Senator from Vermont has said, that the amount of these claims is small in the aggregate, but they are important to the parties; and I think that while it might not have been wise to have extended the original commission for the sole purpose of considering so small an amount of small claims, when you reconstitute the commission it is wise that you should give the parties who never had a hearing a chance to be heard in the court as reconstituted. I will therefore move to amend this amendment, which reads "but no claim shall be presented to the said court that was within the jurisdiction of the same as originally constituted by said act," by inserting the words, "heretofore presented" after "claim."

That I think will meet it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine proposes to amend the amendment of the Senator from Vermont. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think if the attention of the Senate is drawn to it, it is so palpably just, that they will adopt my amendment. Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is palpably unjust.

The question being put, there were on a division-ayes 13, noes 8; no quorum voting.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is suggested that we can get on further without the yeas and nays by taking another division, and by unanimous consent I will withdraw the call, if I can; and then I will ask the Chair to have reported again the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the withdrawal of the call for the yeas and pays. The amendment of the drawal of the call for the yeas and nays. The amendment of the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont

The Chief Clerk read the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The objection to that, as a substitute for my amendment to consider this court closed for all that it had a right to have before it heretofore, is just what I stated in part before. The committee years ago on one of the extension bills had this whole matter and this plea for the sailors before them, and we found I repeat, that there was good reason to believe that while we might do justice to half a dozen sailors, as my friend speaks of in that way, we should do injustice to the people of the United States in providing for an enormous and unlimited number of claims that were practically fictitious.

The end that my friend from Maine has in view to provide for special cases that he knows of, is I think to be attained, as the Justice of the special cases that he knows of the special cases that he special cases that he knows of the special cases that he spe diciary Committee, or some of its members stated to those who pro-fessed to represent somebody before us on the other occasion, that if there is any sailor who has come home to the United States, or has not come home, and thinks he has got a claim, let him send his petition to Congress, and without the expense and fuss of all this court business the Committee on Claims or on Naval Affairs or on the Judiciary or some other can determine whether he has lost $100 in clothing upon one of those ships which were destroyed or not, and pay it without any expense to him and without opening this wide door it without any expense to him and without opening this wide door that you must open if you legislate in this way, if you open it at all, to claim agents hunting up all the shipping lists, and taking the name of every man who has never appeared and pretending to represent him, and proving by some comrade or somebody else that he must have had something that he ought to have pay for and then draw it out as his attorney. That is a very dangerous thing to do.

Mr. HAMLIN. In my judgment the difficulty with the Senator from Vermont is in his imagination, and does not exist at all. That is my belief. There is no more fear of improper or fictitious claims being presented than there was originally, nor is there any difficulty in identifying the precise individual who was on the vessel captured and who may be entitled to a small sum for the losses which he actually incurred. It seems to me that the argument is against any tually incurred. It seems to me that the argument is against any commission for anything because it might be subject to abuses. My amendment is only to meet a very few cases; they are very small, it is true, but they are important to the men to whom they belong. I think the amendment to the amendment ought to be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 12, noes 16; no querum voting.

no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We shall have to have the yeas and nays to get

Mr. EDMUNDS. We shall have to have the yeas and hays to get a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WHYTE. Before a vote is taken on the proposition I should like to make a statement. I have an amendment here which I was going to offer to the bill at the proper time, which would be in conflict with the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Vermont. It is to authorize this court, now continued, to readjudicate upon the claim of James Hooper & Sons, which was one of the very first claims presented to the court, and which was on all fours with the case of the Greenland, subsequently presented to the court, but in which two the Greenland, subsequently presented to the court, but in which two cases exactly diverse opinions were rendered. In the first case the court, just beginning its work, seemed hardly to apprehend the principles that lay behind the decision, and it decided in part against the claim of the Messrs. Hooper. Afterward, when the case of the Greenland came up, on all fours with that case, the court decided in favor of the Greenland came up, on all fours with that case, the court decided in favor of the owners of the Greenland in full, and overruled, in fact, their previous decision in the case of James Hooper & Sons.

The reason why I trespass upon the time of the Senate and ask its indulgence for a few moments is that if the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is adopted it will cut out the amendment which I had intended to propose at a later period. Consequently I should like to modify if possible this amendment, and before doing so would be glad to state to my honorable friend from Vermont who has proposed it the particular and exceptional case which I was about to present to the Senate. Hooper & Sons chartered to the United States Government the vessel known as the General Berry in 1864. On its way South transporting supplies for the Army it was captured at some distance out from Cape May; I do not know how near the shore; it is immaterial, because it was recognized as a capture by the Florida. When the settlement for freight, &c., came to be adjusted between the Government and Mr. Hooper, he not having insured his vessel asked the Government of the United States through its proper officers to allow him some indemnity for the loss of his vessel. At that time it was not at all in contemplation that there would be any redress obtained from Great Britain for its negligence in allowing the cruisers to escape. Nothing was done because of course the naval officers of the Government had no power at that time to do anything. Congress, however, subsequently allowed him $16,000 as indemnity for the loss of his vessel, which was I believe not quite half its value. Afterward when the Government invited claimants to make their claims for losses he obtained the proof of the actual value of his vessel and made his claim for the full amount of the vessel, crediting the $16,000 to the Government, not crediting it on the account as made against Great Britain but recognizing rather that he had received

The full value of that vessel was included among the claims made against Great Britain at Geneva. After the treaty had been settled and the court created by the act of Congress was in operation, he went before the court to obtain his money, that is to say, the amount lost by him less the $16,000 paid by the United States. There were other claims for loss of clothing and various other things. He was allowed everything except for the value of the vessel. Although the United States apparently received some thirty odd thousand dollars for this vessel, having paid only $16,000, the court refused to allow him the difference between the real value of the vessel and the amount which he had received as indemnity from the United States. When the Greenland case came up the court did exactly the opposite thing. It allowed the claimants in that case the whole value of the vessel, deducting the indemnity which the United States had paid. deducting the indemnity which the United States had paid.

It seems to me to be a clear case where the court ought at least to have the privilege of examining the facts; and if they discover that their first decision in the Hooper case was erroneous, and that the Greenland case was in fact an overruling of the previous decision in the case of the General Berry, the court ought to have the power to allow to these claimants the difference which was refused them on allow to these claimants the difference which was refused them on their first claim.

That is the difficulty I find in voting for the amendment of the Senator from Vermont. If this exceptional case could be allowed by an amendment to get in, it seems to me it would be only doing exact justice to the party.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That question does not arise at all on the amendment of the Senator from Maine which is the reading question. The

Mr. EDMUNDS. That question does not arise at all on the amendment of the Senator from Maine, which is the pending question. The effect of the amendment of the Senator from Maine is to open this new revived court to every case that was not presented before, good or bad; and that I think is a very dangerous thing for the reasons I have stated. When we come to the proper time if the Senator from Maryland should move an amendment, which might be moved if the amendment of the Senator from Maine should be rejected or adopted, no matter which, as an addition, for this special case, then it would be our duty to consider it. Although my recollection is vague, I remember the general circumstance to which the Senator from Maryland has referred. As I remember it, the court of commissioners, who I think proved themselves to be able and intelligent and upright men, did not place their decision in the Greenland case as in opposition to and as overruling the case of the General Berry, but distinguished them. If we are going by a system of new trials into a matter of this kind, If we are going by a system of new trials into a matter of this kind, there are undoubtedly a good many other people whose claims were rejected who would say "the court erred; they either did something inconsistent with the rejection of the particular claim that is again pressed, or they did not properly distinguish between the two cases, and therefore that ought to be retried."

If the case of the General Berry is precisely as my friend from Maryland thinks it is, of course there is very strong force on the merits of the thing in what he says as to the propriety of paying the owners of the General Berry out of the Treasury this difference; but I submit to him that it is far wiser in a matter of this kind, instead of opening a general jurisdiction to retry everything, (and I do not see opening a general jurisdiction to retry everything, (and I do not see how you could do otherwise because it would be very strange to limit it to one case for somebody would at once come and say here is another,) for the party to apply to Congress, and if the Committee on Claims on a careful inspection of the evidence found that it was just such a case as my friend thinks it was and that the re was nothing that intervened to countervail those considerations, to pay him the money. I submit to Senators that it is a very dangerous step in legislation to reopen this court to everything that was not presented or to new trials in cases of alleged hardship of matters that were presented. However I do not want to waste the time of the Senate about it.

Mr. THURMAN. I want to make a single suggestion to the Senator from Maryland, and that is that in order to get the case of the General Berry before this new tribunal which is to be established it may be necessary not only to vote down the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, but to provide that this new tribunal to be constituted shall have the power to grant new trials upon cases that have already been heard. I very much doubt indeed whether it would have any such power without being expressly authorized. I do not have any such power without being expressly authorized. I do not know that the power to grant a new trial which is inherent in courts of justice would apply to a special court of this kind, especially when it is revived as this bill proposes to revive it.

However, the question now is upon the amendment of the Senator

However, the question now is upon the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, and as I quite agree that there are cases—whether this General Berry case is one or not I do not know—in which it may be right to have a rehearing, I shall vote against the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll upon the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MORGAN, (after having voted in the negative.) I desire to withdraw my vote. I paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS] and voted not knowing that he was absent at this time.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN.] I do not know how he would vote on this amendment and I will therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BECK. I am paired upon all these questions with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.]

The result was announced-yeas 19, nays 28; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In order to make the text of the bill conform to the amendments already made I move to strike out section 6, which provides for paying judgments in the first class.

Mr. CONKLING. Before we leave the section on which we have been at work, I should like to have it reported as it stands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be reported as it has been amended in Committee of the Whole.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That said court shall, subject to the provisions of said act, consider and allow all claims properly proved, directly resulting from damage done on the high seas by confederate cruisers during the late rebellion, to vessels and cargoes of citizens of the United States adhering thereto during the late rebellion, attacked and taken by such cruisers or their tenders; but no claim shall be presented to said court that was within the jurisdiction of the same as originally constituted by said act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Attacked or taken" it should read. The Clerk read "attacked and taken." I now move to strike out the sixth sec-

Mr. HAMLIN. The fourth section provides for damages done to vessels captured on the high seas. I want to ask the Senator from Vermont, in the construction which the court may give to that clause as it now reads, will "the high seas" be regarded as including what is within maritime jurisdiction? Will they not so construe the law as to exclude any vessels that were attacked outside the maritime jurisdiction but were actually captured within it?

Mr. BLAINE. Or the reverse?

Mr. HAMLIN. Or the reverse? I think the clause as it originally

Mr. HAMLIN. Or the reverse? I think the chause as it originally stood was much better. That is my judgment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The clause as it originally stood is so loose—
Mr. HAMLIN. I mean when they were attacked upon the high seas and captured within three miles of the land, the loss or damage having occurred within three miles of the shore. I wish to know what construction is to be placed upon the term "high seas?"

Mr. FIMMINDS. The reint I wanted to get at in the amendment I

Mr. EDMUNDS. The point I wanted to get at in the amendment I have moved was to put the court in the possession of the same jurisdiction and no other as to the sufferers from the exculpated cruisers that we had given them as to the inculpated cruisers. That was my point. Now I will look at the law and see just how the other provision was. That was found just and satisfactory in respect of the vision was. That was found just and satisfactory in respect of the inculpated cruisers.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then, do I understand the Senator, if the case shall exist that a vessel was attacked outside the maritime jurisdiction, but captured within it, such a vessel would not be included?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, I have not said anything upon that point. I was saying that my point, without having my attention called to that particular instance at the moment, was to put this on the footing of the original act. We can look at it and see if it is not and we can then consider it: but my motion to strike out section 6 does not touch then consider it; but my motion to strike out section 6 does not touch this point at all.

Mr. FARLEY. Will the Shim a question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to ask

Mr. FARLEY. I want to inquire if the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, and which has been agreed to, will have the effect to exclude persons who were unable to present their claims before the court of Alabama claims originally and who are entitled to

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly; that is what I struggled to prevent and you voted for it. Mr. FARLEY.

I did not understand it in that way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I intended it to be, and think it is, undoubtedly effective to do what the Senator from California says. I repeat that I moved it for the reason that when the thing was fresh before us, on a proposition to extend the time of the original act, this same question was brought before the Judiciary Committee and it was evident to us that the amount of fictitious claims which certain people, lawyers who are sometimes called shysters, &c., were getting up by hunting over the shipping lists and professing to represent men who never appeared at all, made the thing altogether too dangerous, and that if in a particular case where the sailor does appear or somebody, because all the ship-owners did appear, where a particular case turns up that a sailor who was on one of these ships that had not been provided for had a claim, Congress could provide specially for him without the necessity of a trial and proofs that would cost him a great deal. That is the answer to it if it be an answer.

The question now is on striking out the sixth section, and when that is stricken out I will reply to my friend from Maine about the term

"high seas."

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator object to an amendment to that section now, or does he prefer to go through with his amendments?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us get section 6 out, the insurance section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to strike out section 6 of the bill.

Mr. THURMAN. Let it be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. Judgments rendered in the first class shall be first paid. If the sum of money remaining after provision for expenses and the judgments in cases of the first class so unappropriated shall be insufficient to pay the claims of the second class in full, they shall be paid pro rata.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is merely to carry out the exclusion of the insurance companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now wish to call the attention of the Senate to a correction I made, thinking it had been adopted, in the reading of the Clerk by striking out the word "and" in line 21 of section 4, and inserting "or." I asked him to read it that way supposing it had been agreed to; but he informs me it had not been, and I think it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That modification will be made if there he no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That modification will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On looking at the act of 1874 in the eleventh section, which defines the claims which may be presented, I find that the term "high seas" does not occur. Therefore I think it right, in view of what I have already stated, to strike out in line 20, of page 3, section 4, the words "on the high seas," so as to make it read just like the original act, "directly resulting from damage done by confederate cruisers," leaving it to stand precisely where the original act did without reference to whether the capture was within three miles of shore or not. miles of shore or not.

Mr. HARRIS. You want to strike out the words "on the" as well as "high seas."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, strike out the words "on the high seas," so as to to read, "damage done by confederate cruisers."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. DAWES. I desire to offer an amendment. I move to add at the end of section 4:

And under the head of such damages shall be included any compensation justly due for and rendered to any vessel so attacked and taken on the high seas, or to the crews thereof; and when such compensation has not been included in the damages claimed by the owners or crews of such vessels the parties rendering such aid are hereby authorized to make claim for such compensation in their own names.

I think the amendment had better be modified, at the suggestion of a Senator, by striking out the words "on the high seas," to conform to the rest of the bill.

to the rest of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to it as modified.

Mr. DAWES. The object of the amendment is to meet a case of this kind: During the cruising of the Shenandoah she went up into the Arctic seas and there captured five whaling-vessels with all on board, destroyed four of them, and put the officers and crews of those four upon the fifth and let them go, sent them home. They fell into a very distressed condition, and were in an alarming state of insubordination and trouble when they encountered another whaling-vessel. ordination and trouble when they encountered another whaling-vessel just entering those seas, which had made no catch and had done no business upon the waters. They applied to that vessel for assistance. That vessel was compelled to do one of two things, abandon its whole

That vessel was compelled to do one of two things, abandon its whole voyage and its whole purpose, after having spent six months and a whole outfit, or leave these parties in distress. The vessel took the former course and took on board these officers and crews, relieving that disabled vessel and abandoning the whole voyage and all that could be made of it, and returned to the United States with them.

When the owners of the vessels destroyed and the vessel taken which was not destroyed made their application under the old law, they might have included what would have been a fair compensation to these parties for their relief, but they did not. I understand under the advice of counsel there was an application made to that court separately by the vessel which rendered this aid at this cost. The court decided that they had no jurisdiction of any case where a vessel had not been captured; if a vessel had been captured all the loss and proper expenses incurred thereby might have been included. I have the opinion of the court here, in which they say that no so meritorious a case had come before the court as this, but, that inasmuch as the statute did not permit them to award damages to anybody whose ship was not actually taken, this ship which brought off the whose ship was not actually taken, this ship which brought off the crews, abandoned its voyage, and lost all its year or nearly a year that it had spent in reaching the seas, and all the results anticipated by reaching the seas, could have no claim.

It is to meet this claim, which would have been paid if it had been included in the claims of the vessels actually lost, that this amendment is offered. The seamen on board of the vessels that were taken off by this ship had, of course, some pay, perhaps a year's pay, allowed them for their time in getting home, but not for any expense that they would be obliged to pay to get home; because that expense if they had not been captured they would not have had to pay at all; they would have been taken by their own vessel to the seas and carried back without expense to them. So the allowing them in their application a compensation for their time does not allow them anyapplication a compensation for their time does not allow them anything for what they would have been obliged to pay if they had paid it to this vessel; but no one paid anything to this vessel. This vessel voluntarily gave up as a question of charity and humanity everything involved in expenditure and in earnings to relieve those five vessels.

It is simply to cover that case which met the commendation of the court, although the law was not broad enough to meet it, that this court, although the law was not broad enough to meet it, that this amendment is proposed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That particular topic was not unfamiliar to the Committee on the Judiciary in old time when the former bill was passed, but we found and thought, and Congress thought, on the passage of the former bill, that the only line that could be drawn was the line of absolute destruction, excluding gross freights, unearned profits, and all such things, but providing for wages of officers and seamen for a whole year. That we allowed the court to grant, and I believe as a fact they did grant it.

This particular case is one where inconsequence of the war certain and I believe as a fact they did grant it.

This particular case is one where inconsequence of the war certain people whose ships were destroyed had to get home. They were on a vessel where as the Senator from Massachusetts undoubtedly correctly says there was great discomfort and loss and trouble, there were so many of them, and another ship came along and took them off from the ship they were on and brought them to a port. It is said that that ship might, if she had gone on with her voyage, have caught a great many whales and have realized a good profit. It may be that she would not. So the committee and the two Houses on the former occasion, speaking of the people who fell within the authority that we gave to make payment, particularly provided that nothing should be allowed in respect of unearned profits, gross freights, and prospective profits, which is exactly this case.

This ship expected to make a profit, but was prevented by at-

This ship expected to make a profit, but was prevented by attempting this act of humanity from trying to make the profits she expected to make by going on and making the voyage. It is the ordinary case of a vessel at sea finding a large number of people in a destitute condition and humanely taking them ashore. But we prodestitute condition and humanely taking them ashore. But we provided for the officers and crews that were taken ashore a year's wages to pay for exactly that sort of thing. This ship which took them ashore might have been paid, and should have been paid probably, a proper compensation for doing it. How much the ship might have made on that voyage in catching whales is entirely an uncertain amount. She might have made nothing, and she might have made a great deal.

To adopt the amendment is to depart from the original principle that has actuated Congress so far in giving relief at all.

Mr. DAWES. There are two parts to this claim. The last one, in reference to the profit upon the prospective catch, is precisely upon the ground of the old law, which provided for such a case, and provided for estimating it. That is one feature, and that is a matter about which I do not speak very much. But whatever was allowed under the old law, and not more than was allowed under the old law, it is precised by this amendment to give the research. it is proposed by this amendment to give this vessel. If the old law did not provide for a prospective catch, as the Senator seems to inti-mate to me, and he is more familiar with it than myself, this amendment will not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will read the original act, if my friend will allow

Mr. DAWES. I do not dispute it. The amendment proposes to Mr. DAWES. I do not dispute it. The amendment proposes to put this vessel upon the same ground as other vessels that have been actually taken, that is all. It provides that, so far as this vessel suffered a loss according to the terms of the law, it shall stand in the court just as if it had suffered that loss by having been captured. That is the design of the amendment, and that, it seems to me, the Senator from Vermont should not object to. It suffered a loss under the construction of existing law, and a loss which the court would have allowed had it been within the technical phrase of a captured vessel. It was not within that phrase, and therefore could not come under the jurisdiction of the court. Whatever loss it suffered that could have been accorded to other vessels should be accorded to this vessel, which was not captured, but suffered in the cause, suffered in vessel, which was not captured, but suffered in the cause, suffered in relieving those that had been captured. I do not quite see why we should technically exclude that loss from compensation. It rests should technically exclude that loss from compensation. It rests simply upon that technicality.

If a vessel had encountered one of these cruisers in an engagement and had suffered materially, essentially, in the engagement, and yet was not captured, it could not under the old law have received any compensation at all; but upon what ground, I should like to know, of justice and equity could such a distinction be made? I do not so understand my amendment; if I did so understand it I would instantly have it conform to the objection of the Senator from Vermont so far as prospective catch or profit is concerned, for whatever were the as prospective catch or profit is concerned, for whatever were the terms of the old law respecting that point should not be enlarged as to this at all, but simply relieved from that technical phrase in the old law, "captured vessel;" this vessel in all other respects must conform precisely to the condition of a captured vessel before the tribunal. That is all I mean by my amendment. If the Senator finds in this amendment, which I did not prepare myself, phraseology that carries it beyond the jurisdiction of the old law, in that respect it shall certainly conform to it.

tainly conform to it.

Mr. THURMAN. Let the amendment be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment as modified.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senate will indulge me a moment, there were ases in which such a claim as this was included in the application for compensation by the owners of vessels actually destroyed; but this case under some mistake was not so included, but was presented as a separate claim by a vessel that incurred the loss in the way I have suggested.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The language of the amendment goes a great deal, I think, beyond what the Senator from Massachusetts seems to think about it. He talks about the crews of the vessel, &c., when the statnte provides for paying the crews, as I said before, a whole year's wages. It comes right back to a case that happened on sea and land everywhere, and always will in time of war. When a person has his house burned down by an army, the neighbors help him, and when a man has his ship destroyed the neighboring ships help him. If you are going to open to an adjudication and payment all these remote consequences, remote in a greater or less degree, instead of confining yourself to the actual value of the property damaged or destroyed, then you are entirely at sea. I have never before, I confess, heard anybody claim in the Senate that we ought to go to that extent. The extent to which we ought to go was provided in the eleventh section and in the twelfth section of the original act. This goes entirely beyond that, and where it leads us no man can tell.

Mr. DAWES. I will not detain the Senate; but if it was the policy of this Government to compensate a man who had suffered in the war by the destruction of his house, certainly it would not be going too far if somebody else should come and partly restore that house for him to be compensated for that part of the destruction which he had restored. But it is not the policy of the Government to make restitu-tion or recompense to a man who has suffered on the land in open Here is a fund which we propose to distribute in this way, and even the old law covered this kind of loss. The old law covered this loss exactly, only those in whose name it might have been prosecuted under the old law did not prosecute it.

Mr. EATON. I see that my friend from Massachusetts has fallen into the same error under which I suffered for several days, and that is that this was a fund. I see the draughtsman of this bill fell into the same error in speaking of the Geneva award fund. There is no such fund. I offered an amendment the other day in the nature of a substitute for the bill, supposing in my innocence and ignorance that here was a fund that was accumulating interest. There is no fund. More than two years ago, nearly three, this fund was placed precisely where my amendment designs that it shall be placed, in the Treasury of the United States, was covered into it. The bond is destroyed. No interest has accrued since June, 1877. Anything that we do now is an appropriation of money, not from any fund, but from money in the Treasury of the United States, as we would appropriate it for any purpose whatever. There is no fund set apart for the purpose spoken of by the Senator from Massachusetts.

of by the Senator from Massachusetts.

There was great merit, though I failed to see it to its full extent, in the claim of the insurance companies. That claim has been buried; the funeral ceremonies are over. I fail to see myself any merit in the claim which will be presently, if it has not been already, pressed upon us for the payment of war premiums out of the money in the Treasury and not out of any fund.

Mr. President, in order to test the sense of the Senate, I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. MAXEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I did not happen to be in my seat when the motion was made to indefinitely postpone the bill, but I voted "yea," and I now move to reconsider the vote. I wish to simply state that the effect of the motion of course is to do what the honorstate that the effect of the motion of course is to do what the honorable Senator from Connecticut proposed to do with this money, to place it and leave it in the Treasury of the United States, and I observe that his motion was supported by all the Senators who maintain that the duty of the United States, strictly and closely prescribed in the award, was to give it to those for whom the award devoted it.

I have moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. THURMAN. How did the Senator vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine voted in the affirmative, and has a right to make the motion.

Mr. EATON. He changed his vote after voting "nay."

Mr. BLAINE. I was about to remark that of all the objects that were universally agreed on both sides of the ocean and by all peoples to have been the one that the United States could not risk was to take that money on her own account. Mr. Sumner, if he was ever capable of bringing ridicule upon his own great name, did it when he put in his bill of $500,000,000 because of the damage done to the United States by the prolongation of the war, but there was something majestic in the sum. There was something defiant and brave in the idea of demanding from England $500,000,000 by a nation that might in a conflict be capable of enforcing it. But after denouncing and decrying that as unjust to every other claimant and dishonorable to the effect of the vote interest of the vote interest. and detrying that as thijust to every other chalmant and dishonorable to the nation, the effect of the vote just taken is to put into the Treasury the pitiful sum of $10,000,000, as a contribution to pay the debt of the United States, from a nation that would treat us with sneers and point at us with scorn as having obtained it on false pretenses. There will not an American in this generation nor in the future one land on the English shore who will not feel his face mantle with bluebes at the dishonorable was of a fined given for a specific with blushes at the dishonorable use of a fund given for a specific

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to say that after consideration I had come to the conclusion that it was right and just to pay for the destruction of the vessels of citizens of the United States by what are called the exculpated cruisers, and, therefore, I have been endeavoring to frame the bill to make provision for that class of sufferers and as everybody knows for nobody else. But a majority of the Senate having apparently by this vote on the motion indefinitely to postpone expressed its opinion against that class of claims, I do not see any object in trying to press them any further, and, therefore, I shall vote on the yeas and nays now to lay the motion to reconsider on the table and let it go.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was about to reply to the very kind remarks of the Senator from Maine, but I think I will not on the whole.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I desire to say a single word as the yeas and nays are to be taken on this question.

With my very great and unfeigned respect for the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] I had not supposed that his proposition was a serious one. I had not supposed that it was possible for this Governnecticut [Mr. EATON] I had not supposed that his proposition was a serious one. I had not supposed that it was possible for this Government to present claims, with an ultimate possibility of war, in behalf of actual losers and sufferers and obtain payment, and then cover that money into the Treasury of the United States. I did not suppose that was a possibility. Sir, if it had been said at the time of the negotiation which resulted in the high joint commission and the final arbitration at Geneva, that it would end in our obtaining a given sum of money in the name of actual sufferers and that then we would cover it into the Treasury of the United States, not one single step would have been taken to accomplish that result.

I have said nothing in the course of this debate, and did not desire

Will my friend allow me a word?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes.

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes.

Mr. EATON. The money has been for two years and a half covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. VOORHEES. Then I would simply not use the word "covered" as that has been done, but "kept" in the Treasury of the United States. It was not paid for the purpose of being kept in the Treasury of the United States. Our claim was that certain of our citizens had suffered losses by the omission of the duty of England as a neutral power, and these citizens of ours having no power to approach England to enforce their demands have through their government. England to enforce their demands, have through their government obtained this fund to be distributed to them; and here we stand in the attitude of proclaiming to the world that after obtaining this money we are unable to find out who it belongs to; and whenever we reach that point, I say to Senators I will vote to return it to England. I will not vote to keep it in the Treasury of the United States, where nobody contemplated it should remain. I think, sir, (and I where notody contemplated it should remain. I think, sir, (and I speak it with my heart full, not merely of ordinary respect, but personal affection for the Senator from Connecticut,) that we should stand dishonored before the nations of the earth if we did that thing. It is the last thing we can afford to do. We can afford to spend—and not very well afford to do that—but we can better far afford to spend months and years in discussion here as to where it shall go; but one thing that we cannot afford is before the world to keep this money in the Treasury of the United States and to apply it to our ordinary expenses.

It was an event in the history of the world when this took place, one unknown before and one not likely to happen again, and we would so belittle it that I should be ashamed to land on the shores of Great Britain, I should be ashamed to be seen by Englishmen, if we had obtained this money in the name of sufferers and had kept it in the Treasury of the United States.

I have not voted to give it to the insurance companies; I do not know that I would vote to give it to the war-premium people. I want to find actual sufferers; I want to find people who have lost money by the war, and not people who have made money; and, if I cannot find such, I will vote to return this money with the utmost cannot find such, I will vote to return this money with the utmost pleasure to Great Britain, and no pronder act in our history could take place than to return to England that portion of this money which we can find no actual losers to pay it to.

Spare me, Mr. President, from ever being brought to vote that having obtained this money in one way and for one purpose we keep it for another. I am utterly amazed at the vote that this subject shall pass from our consideration indefinitely. There are actual losers outside of the insurance companies, outside of the war-premium claimants. In fact, I have never thought the insurance companies suffered In fact I have never thought the insurance companies suffered at all. I have thought their complaint was that the war came to a conclusion too soon. I have thought that they ought to be authorized to sue the Government of the United States for damages because of the premature conclusion of hostilities. I have thought of an inciof the premature conclusion of nostilities. I have thought of an incident during the Thirty-eighth Congress, when a gentleman, perhaps engaged in insurance—I do not know—then a member of the House, when the venerable Frank Blair, the old man, went down to Richmond on a noted occasion, and asking a gentleman why this mission was undertaken, and getting no satisfactory answer, he broke out, saying, "I hope there is no serious danger of peace." The war was their harvest; its conclusion was what destroyed their business.

I am not as clear upon the question of the war-premium claimants, but I am clear that there were men who had their all afloat upon the seas, who had their money invested in merchandise which was destroyed by what are called the exculpated cruisers. What difference did it make to the losers whether the cruisers that searched their ships and burned them are called exculpated or inculpated cruisers? They

I am not about to discuss any legal question arising as to the direction given to this fund by the tribunal at Geneva. I am perfectly aware that has been done by men who have given the subject more study than I have been able to do; but if it was a broad question of common justice, of common equity, I know the American people, who when they made this demand upon Great Britain made it in such a way that if it had been resisted, in order to protect our dignity and our honor we should have had to go to war, did not expect to pay the money to those who had been enriched by the war; nor did they expect us to keep it in the Treasury of the United States and pay it out on our own account or on account of the war debt or anything of that kind.

Let us not shrink from this occasion; let us not shrink from the issue that is before us; let us not shrink from the plain duty to do something that is becoming upon this question. It will not do to say we will indefinitely postpone this question and thereby hide our-selves from it. We shall not be protected from the censure of the selves from it. We shall not be protected from the censure of the world by such a proceeding as this.

These views, Mr. President, will govern my vote.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I beg leave to say with entire respect to my friend from Indiana [Mr. Voornees] that his argument proceeds on an utterly false assumption. The indefinite postponement of this bill does not mean that the United States will keep this money in the Treasury or use it for its own purposes and make no provision for any sufferer by the confederate cruisers. It means nothing of the sort. It means simply that this measure is not in its present form a correct measure and it means that time is necessary to many the state of the sort. form a correct measure, and it means that time is necessary to mature a bill which shall meet the approbation of Congress. That is all that it means. No such bill can be matured in open Senate. It is an utter impossibility.

There are various theories. Here are Senators on this floor who have entreated me to move a substitute for this bill referring all these claims to the Court of Claims, with an appeal to the Supreme Court, and let every man bring in his case who sees fit to make a claim and have it decided by a judicial determination. That is an idea that is worthy of consideration.

There are other modes than those provided by this bill as it now stands in which this fund can be distributed. I should feel as strongly as the Senator from Indiana that we were doing a flagrant wrong to take this money and keep it in the Treasury of the United States without indemnifying those whose claims produced the money. Senator from Indiana did not quite entertain that opinion, for he voted to exclude the men whose claims produced the money.

Now, Mr. President, the bill is in a form which it would seem from the last vote taken is not satisfactory to the Senate. It is of no use, in my judgment, to attempt to perfect this bill in open Senate. It may as well be abandoned and some other measure brought in, and there is time enough to bring it in. I therefore renew my motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the honorable Senator pardon me a moment?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. Or will be withhold his motion until I speak two

Mr. THURMAN. I withdraw my motion.
Mr. BLAINE. Then I suggest to the honorable Senator that he was unfortunate in the statement that this vote did not mean what was attributed to it by the honorable Senator from Indiana. He was fortunate in that the motion was made by the Senator from Connecticut, who has an amendment pending with an express design. He was unfortunate also in suggesting that this motion merely meant time to mature another bill, when the merest tyro in parliamentary expe-rience knows that recommittal was the mode of reaching that. No, sir, this meant death forever, and it meant it with the precise meaning of the pending amendment of the honorable Senator from Connecticut, who is a frank and square man, and does not deny that that is what is meant and intended and what he thinks he has accomplished. But I am glad that the honorable Senator from Ohio, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, in a moment only of reflection, has come to see by a little reaction that the essence of that vote, the intendment and interpretation given to it, will send across this continent and to distant continents a blot of dishonor upon the national name of this country.

Mr. WITHERS. As I was one of those who voted for this proposition to indefinitely postpone, and I have not said anything in the discussion, I wish to state briefly my reasons.

I have either read or heard most of the arguments that have been made upon this bill, and to my comprehension it has been established in the debate, certainly to the satisfaction of those who have participated in it, that none of the classes of men who are claiming this award are entitled to it. It was shown that neither the insurance men were entitled to it, nor the war-premium men, nor the sufferers by the exculpated cruisers. In such a condition of things as that what are we to do? I say indefinitely postpone the bill until a bill shall be brought here which shall ascertain more clearly the rights of parties entitled, and we shall support it. Until that is done we prefer that it shall lie on the table.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I do not intend to rest under the imputation that I voted for the indefinite postponement of this bill with a view to keeping this money in the Treasury. I voted for it in the hope that at some future day reason would resume its sway, and that fidelity to the claimants whose claims were presented at Geneva would be kept to them by the Government of the United States. After the Senate had stricken from this bill the clause which enabled the insurers to go before the court, I felt that a gross injustice—I speak it respectfully—had been done to these people. I felt that the Government of the United States had asked, had solicited insurers and other claimants throughout the United States to furnish to the Government the material upon which it could demand of Great Britain indemnity for the acts committed by cruisers through her neglect. I certainly did not forget that the Government had publicly invited the insurance companies to file their claims with the State Department. I did not forget that it had furnished them with the memorial, the form which they were directed to follow in presenting their claim at Washington. I did not forget all that had senting their claim at washington. I did not lorget all that had taken place at the time of the making of the Johnson-Clarendon treaty when these claims were recognized as of the first importance to the Government in obtaining that treaty. I did not forget that afterward the Government again, in 1871, invited these people to file their claims, sent them answers in the nature of receipts, and subsequently, without request, voluntarily furnished to the insurance companies revised lists of the claims upon which the United States was to stand before the tribunal at Geneva.

That is not all. As a preface to that revised list it promised these claimants that it would not only demand redress for the injuries done to them by the acts of the confederate cruisers, but that it would demand interest from the Government of Great Britain on each claim from the time of the damage committed to the party claimant

I did not therefore forget that the Government of the United States held these claims, held them to use them not as witnesses to enable the Government to recover from Great Britain in some action of trespass, but as claims in the hands of the United States to be collected from Great Britain for the benefit of the citizens of the United States who had furnished these claims against that government.

More than that, Mr. President, I did not forget that from the beginning of this transaction down to this hour, although Mr. Fish instructed our agent at Geneva not to allow the Government to be bound or committed as to its mode of distribution, nowhere and under no circumstances has the Government of the United States informed these people that it meant to collect their money and either put it in the Government's own pocket or distribute it to persons upon whose claims not one dollar was recovered at Geneva. Whatever the Govclaims not one dollar was recovered at Geneva. Whatever the Government did abroad in refusing to be committed as to its distribution of the fund, it nowhere at home has told the insurance companies that the money collected on these claims should be diverted from the honest purpose of reimbursing them for their losses. Therefore, Mr. Presi-

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator pardon me one moment?

Mr. WHYTE. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to remind him that he does unintentionally injustice to the history and to those who made it, by the remark which has just fallen from him. The letter of Mr. Fish, from which an extract appears in a document we have seen as if it was the whole letter, was written, I remind the Senator, before the question even arose whether indirect damages, as they were called, were admissible or not. Now if the honorable Senator will bear this in mind, and read the language of Mr. Fish by the light which will fall upon it, he will see that it would be monstrous to distort the import of that letter so as to apply it to the state of case which came to be, so as to make Mr. Fish write that the Government would not be committed upon the question whether the owners of the vessels or their assignees who paid for those vessels were to receive the money or not. I beg the honorable Senator to bear in mind this distinction, concurring with him as I do most fully in all that he is saying, expressing as he does very much of the feeling which I have myself. The letter at the date it bears was a wholly different thing from the same letter as it would have been had it been written after the tribunal had eliminated from its consideration everything except the list of destroyed vessels and the claim for two revenue-cutters.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I am obliged to my friend the Senator from New York for calling my attention to what I probably did not express as clearly as I desired. I agree with him entirely. I meant to say that, taking it in its broadest sense, accepting it as the Senators on the other side have argued it to mean, whatever was done by this Government in regard to the action at Geneva, it never has told its people at home that it gathered this bundle of claims to make up a case against Great Britain to get the money and then to divide it as a charity fund. That is all I meant to say.

Mr. DAWES. I wish the Senator would argue it also in the light of the fact that the same gentleman who wrote that letter also stated that he never from the beginning intended to prosecute the indirect claims, and that nobody ever expected he would; so that when he wrote the letter he had just the same thing in his mind that he did have after the action of the tribunal upon the indirect claims.

Mr. WHYTE. Very well. Mr. President, that does not make it a bit better.

Mr. CONKLING. But it is an error in fact. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts does not mean to say that the Secretary of State at this time or in this letter said, even of indirect claims at large, what he has now ascribed to him?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly; but I did not state any such thing if the Senator from New York will recollect. I stated that the same gentleman who wrote that letter to which the Senator from New York has called the attention of the Senator from Maryland, also said that always, from the beginning, he did not intend to press the indirect claims, nor did he suppose that the people of the United States did. So the Senator from Maryland must argue the force of that letter precisely in the same light as if it had been written after the action of the tribunal, for the action of the tribunal did not put the author of that letter in any different condition from what he always had been.

I will not interrupt the Senator from Maryland further.

Mr. WHYTE. I am not going to discuss the question as to what the Secretary of State's intentions were, or what his views were. I do not attach the same importance to that declaration of Mr. Secretary Fish as other gentlemen do. It was not an uncommon thing to do in the making of treaties. There are ten or twelve treaties made by the United States in which the same reservation is made, not allowing a foreign government to dictate the mode and manner in which the money recovered by this Government shall be distributed among its citizens. There are plenty of cases of that sort.

But, Mr. President, I did not rise to make a speech. I have too much respect for the Senate to inflict upon them a speech now, after the elaborate, exhaustive, able arguments that have been made—I say it respectfully—by both sides and upon each side of this case. I am not going to take up the time of the Senate, but I am not going to remain under the imputation that my vote to postpone this bill was cast for the purpose of holding this money in the Treasury. It was cast because when I saw a majority of the Senate strike down the claims of the increase. I felt that it was unjust. I felt that at some future of the insurers, I felt that it was unjust. I felt that at some future period upon fuller argument, upon more mature reflection, upon a clearer insight into the question, the Senate would reverse that judgment and a majority would see the justice of this claim.

Why, Mr. President, who can doubt the right of the insurance companies, not on any questions of law but on the facts of this case, if he will look carefully at it? I am not going to quote the opinions of lawyers because they have been cited here before. Mr. Cushing's opinion has been cited on both sides of this question. That is not remarkable. Mr. Cushing has been more than once cited upon both remarkable. Mr. Cushing has been more than once cited upon obth sides of the same question, more than once cited with approval by people standing upon opposite sides of a question. He was reported to have given an opinion that Mason and Slidell ought to be held by this Government when they were taken off the Trent, and on the records of the court of his own county it is entered in a memorial of the bar association that he actually gave the opinion that they should be held and contributed largely to the dispatch sent by Mr. Seward to the British government. On the other hand, in an address delivered the British government. On the other hand, in an address delivered commemorative of his virtues and his intelligence and his legal acumen by General B. F. Butler, it is stated as a fact that at the request of the Secretary of State General Cushing gave the opinion that Mason and Slidell should be delivered back to the British government, and that he wrote the opinion and filed it in the State Department at Washington. I have it in an address sent to me by the gentleman to whom I have just referred. Therefore I am not going to cite opinions of lawyers; but Mr. Pierce, of Massachusetts, in the House of Representatives, stated distinctly that in a conversation he had with one of the arbitrators, Mr. Adams, Mr. Adams spoke with indignation of the idea of refusing to pay insurers the money which they lost when those losses formed part of the very basis for the award which had been made at Geneva; and such have been his feelings at the action of the Government of the United States that in a letter written by him within the last three years he uses the language which I will read. There having been some misapprehension as to what he said in another letter, he uses this language in the letter before

What I did mean was a regret that upon the first experiment of practical arbitration between two nations, when with great care and deliberation the four arbiters laid down in clear terms the reasons why they joined in one conclusion, they should have been compelled to see their judgment reversed and money withheld from the parties intended, which, if so withheld for good reason, should at once have been restored to the party from which it had been taken. As the matter now stands, the arbiters appear responsible for cheating the British government out of a large sum which the American Government declares was not properly claimed, and yet which it declines to return to the rightful owner.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator understand him to allude there to the conversation he had with Mr. Pierce?

Mr. WHYTE. No, sir; to a letter he had written stating his views before, and this was explanatory of that previous letter.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator find anything in that letter that he has read to the Senate that indicates that Mr. Adams thought this fund ought to be paid to those who had already made money out of Mr. WHYTE. No, sir; because Mr. Adams never allowed such a false consideration to enter his brain. Mr. Adams knew, for he was a component part of the tribunal at Geneva, what claims had been recognized as lawfully payable and chargeable against Great Britain under the rules which made the three inculpated steamers and the tenders of two of them responsible because of the negligence of Great Britain in allowing them to escape from its ports or to be supplied from its ports. Mr. Adams knew perfectly well that war premiums had been excluded; he knew well that not a dollar was allowed in that award for captures by the exculpated cruisers. Mr. Adams knew perfectly well that owners of vessels and insurers who stood in the shoes of the owners were the parties lawfully entitled to receive this money from the Government of the United States. He knew, what the papers showed him, that apart from the doctrine of subrogation, about which we have heard so much, there was, outside of any legal quibble, outside of any doctrine of law, the fact that in most of the cases there were regular transfers by assignment of the rights and interests of the owners in favor of the insurance companies.

He knew all this, and therefore Mr. Adams knew in behalf of whom this money had been recovered, and he knew to whom it rightfully and equitably belonged; and he knew, whether it was covered by a constructive trust or not, that the United States was honest, that its people were correct, that money recovered in the name of certain men people were correct, that money recovered in the name or certain men and belonging to certain men would not by right-thinking legislators or courts be diverted from the proper persons to whom it rightfully belonged. He knew all this, and he expressed in language stronger than I would use (out of respect to the Senators who have voted in accordance with their judgment but in contravention of mine) the sentiment which I entertain, that it would be unwise, unjust, I will be a sentiment which I entertain, that it would be unwise, unjust, I will be a sentiment which I entertain. not say dishonest, for us to pass a bill such as this bill in its mutilated state now is or was a moment ago. It would be better far to postpone by an indefinite postponement all action upon it, and leave it to the great hereafter to decide whether or not justice shall be done to these people, or whether their money in the Treasury of the United States shall be paid over to others who have no claim to it of the slightest, the flimsiest character, or whether we shall pass a bill to-day, or tomorrow, or next year, it matters not when it may pass, I am confident that when at last it does pass that character for honesty, that character for right-dealing which the United States has ever held before the nations of the world, will not be tarnished, its luster will not be dimmed, but our people will honor us for doing right under all the circumstances; and therefore, Mr. President, I want this question postponed for another and I trust a better day.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, I have no intention of going into this discussion at this late day. It has been a discussion of a character which I confess has on several occasions tempted me very much to participate in it; but in consequence of some remarks by the Senator from Indiana and the announcement made-

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator from Georgia indulge me a moment? I had the floor and yielded it as a matter of courtesy to the Senator from Maine to make a motion. Now, I desire it understood that I have not lost the floor by this intervening discussion. It belongs to me, and I simply gave it to the Senator from Maine to make his motion to reconsider.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I submit, with all deference to my friend from Texas, that he has lost the floor, and I hope he will not regain it for a little while.

Mr. MAXEY. I did not wish to interrupt the Senator, but simply to remind the Chair that I had the floor fairly and it was taken from

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I was going on to say that in view of the remarks made by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES,] and some remarks made to me a moment ago by a gentleman privately, I think I ought to utter a few words simply explanatory of the view I take of this matter, and really the view I take is a very simple one. A great many questions that I think are simple in their character are magnified to great importance very unnecessarily, and I think there is nothing to justify excitement whatever in this case, and nothing on earth to justify any charge of dishonor on the United States or anybody else, and it seems to me that all this excitement grows out of a very strange misapprehension of the real character of the case.

Now I say frankly that at the bottom the difficulty with me lies in one sentence. Whenever that difficulty can be removed, my way is clear; and the difficulty, I think, with the argument of my distinguished friend from Wisconsin and the other gentlemen on this subject is, that they have assumed that to be true which I think is exactly not true. If I am wrong in that, the other gentlemen are right.

What is that ?

In my view of this case, neither the owners of these lost vessels nor the insurers nor anybody else being citizens of the United States, have any legal claim or legal right of action in the matter whatever. The Geneva tribunal did exactly right. I say that the individual citizens of the United States have no legal right in this matter whatever. Now, if you assume that they have legal rights, I do not wonder at the excitement of my friend from Maryland, or at the excitement of other gentlemen; but if the citizens of the United States who are alleged to be entitled to this money had no legal right against anybody in connection with the destruction of these vessels, pray tell me where is the foundation for all this charge of injustice by the United States for not paying them?

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator state what he means by "legal rights?"

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will tell the Senator if he will wait a moment. I say, then, that whether you base the claim for damages in this case upon the destruction of vessels destroyed by the inculpated cruisers or upon the breach of neutrality by Great Britain, in neither case have you a right of action in the citizen as against Great Britain or against the inculpated cruisers. This money comes from Great Britain.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me to go on I will answer the points presented; but I will hear the Senator with great

Mr. THURMAN. Does the Senator deny that it was on the founda-tion of these claims that the award was made, that they were the tion of these claims that the award was made, that they were the elements upon which the tribunal acted?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If Senators will give me their attention for a moment I will get through very briefly, and I think will answer that question. If I do not I will submit to being interrogated with a great deal of pleasure.

As I say, a citizen of the United States could not have sued Great Britain for the destruction of his vessel, because Great Britain did not destroy the vessel. Now take the case as a lawyer would take it; take the owner in the strongest sense; take the uninsured owner of one of these destroyed vessels. He hings an action against the of one of these destroyed vessels. He brings an action against the inculpated cruisers, if you please. He could not recover against the inculpated cruiser, because it was lawful war, and the act of a belligerent, and therefore the citizen was entitled to no damages against a belligerent, for a loss in actual war. He therefore could not main-a belligerent, for a loss in actual war. He therefore could not maintain an action against the inculpated cruiser.

Well suppose he brings his action against Great Britain for the destruction of his vessel. Great Britain would reply: "We did not destroy your vessel," and the proof would show that the vessel was destroyed by an inculpated cruiser and not by Great Britain, and the variance between what the lawyers call the allegata and the probata would work a necessary nonsuit.

Then, suppose he alleges the breach on which he claimed his damages to be a breach of neutrality by Great Britain? The reply is patent. Great Britain would say, "I committed no breach against you; my breach of neutrality was against your Government, was against the nation, if there was any at all." If there was a breach of neutrality it was against the Government of the United States; it was not against the owner of the vessel or any individual citizen of the United States. Therefore the action would fail.

I say, then, to my friend from New York that, going upon the prin-

I say, then, to my friend from New York that, going upon the principles of municipal law, as I think the Judiciary Committee have unfortunately placed this case, the uninsured owner of a destroyed vessel could maintain an action against nobody; therefore he has no legal right of action, even assuming Great Britain to be suable, waiving the point of sovereignty, and taking Great Britain to be in the place of an individual and suable; Great Britain did not destroy the vessel; Great Britain did not destroy the vessel; Great Britain committed no breach against the citizen, and the only breach she did commit was a breach of neutrality, which was against the Government. Therefore the citizen could maintain no action against Great Britain, nor, as I said, could he maintain it against an inculpated cruiser.

So then if he cannot maintain an action upon the principles of law, he has no right of action. He cannot maintain his action because he has no right of action. Now then, if he has no right of action against Great Britain, pray what legal claim has he upon the money paid by Great Britain? None whatever. There is my difficulty.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. The statutes of New York and I presume those of Georgia denounce a bet or wager as an unlawful transaction. Let me ask the Senator a question. Suppose I were to make a bet or wager and win it. Clearly I should have no legal right, no action in any of the forms or sentences he has dealt with; but I say to him merely as an acquaintance—and I suppose a great government ought to be as honest and as decent as an individual man—"will you not to be as honest and as decent as an individual man—"will you not call upon the person who has lost this bet or wager to me, and get it, and if necessary negotiate with him and induce him to pay it? I cannot recover at law because the statute of New York says I shall not; but you go and manage the affair, and get this money;" and the Senator does it and receives the money.

The case up to this point I think is on all fours with the case as he states it. Could he look himself in the face and turn around and say to me "Why you had no remedy at law; you could not bring an action of assumpsit or trespass or case or anything else by municipal law or any law, and therefore how can you have any claim to call upon me?" My answer would be "This is money had and received by you for my use and at my instance and request." Would not such a course of conduct stain with turpitude the act of the man who would avail himself of such a plea, no matter if in case I had not employed him as my agent or acquaintance I could or could not by a suit at law or in some other way have possessed myself of this money?

If I am right in this little illustration which I respectfully present to the honorable Senator, I ask him to state what becomes of his argument. If he could establish that we ought not to have maintained at Geneva claims based upon individual losses, even if he could establish it by the doubt which he has expressed, what becomes of the argument when, despite all this, borrowing the phrase of the Senator from Ohio, these individual claims became the elements out of which was constructed that lump sum which we recovered-what becomes of the argument that recurring back to the question which he states an excuse arises for the Government of the United States should it refuse to render an account to those whose claims produced the recovery ?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, the difficulty with the argument of the distinguished Senator from New York, I say to him with all due deference, is that it does not touch the point I have made in the slightest degree. I cannot argue more than one point it at time. The case my friend has supposed is one where there are moral obligations, no doubt about that. That is the case of a bet. There the absence of a right of action is based solely upon the illegality of the act of betting.

Mr. CONKLING. It is void as against public policy, and penal.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Of course men who bet must be honest, I concede all that.

Mr. CONKLING. Why should they?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Let me go on. I was simply arguing, first—and I can only consider one point at a time—that there was no legal right or legal claim in the citizen upon Great Britain or upon the inculpated cruisers for damages. The Senator concedes that by the wery supposition he makes.

Mr. CONKLING. For the sake of the argument.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. That is my first point, that there is no legal claim in the citizen; he has no right of action against Great Britain, no right of action against the inculpated cruiser, no right of action against anybody, and he cannot claim damages against anybody; and if he cannot bring an action against Great Britain—

Mr. THURMAN. Does the Senator mean to say that a person could not have a valid claim, or have a right of action upon that claim, against Great Britain? Cannot a man have a valid claim against the United States although he cannot sue the United States

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I have said before that I was making this argument assuming that Great Britain was suable.

Mr. THURMAN. Nobody ever said Great Britain was suable.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I know that: but suppose she was, the act which Great Britain did is an act which if done by an individual is not a suable act. That is what I say, and I put the plain proposition. I say Great Britain would not be responsible if she was an individual and her courts were open; she is not responsible to a citizen of the United States for the destruction of his vessel because Great Britain did not States for the destruction of his vessel because Great Britain did not destroy the vessel. It was destroyed by an inculpated cruiser floating the confederate flag. He cannot recover then for the destruction of the vessel. That was all his loss. There is no other breach against the citizen. The other breach is a breach of neutrality, which is not against the citizen but against the government of the citizen, and the citizen cannot maintain an action for that. Pray tell me where do you get the idea of a right to a particular in this case in the actions.

do you get the idea of a right to an action in this case in the citizen?

Mr. WHYTE. May I ask the Senator from Georgia whether he means to say that a citizen of one government has no right to pro-means to say that a citizen of one government has no right to protection from his own government as against another government?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. WHYTE. Not by international law?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I said no such thing. I did not mean to say any such thing. I understand that matter perfectly. It is not only the right of a citizen to claim protection of his government, but it is the duty of the government to grant it.

I have stated the difficulty with this case. I am following the argument of the Judiciary Committee. They commence to apply their doctrine of subrogation. They assume that the owner of a vessel had a right of action which is by subrogation, and therefore by operation of law, assigned to the insurer. If he had, I recognize the doctrine of subrogation perfectly. It is a good doctrine. It has come down to us from the old civil law; it has been the doctrine in all the books; but you cannot assign by subrogation a right that does not exist. There is the trouble about this whole case.

Then the United States called Great Britain to account for a breach

Then the United States called Great Britain to account for a breach of neutrality. That was the gravamen, if I may be allowed to use a lawyer's term, of the suit. It was by the United States against Great Britain. It could not have been by a citizen. It was by the United States against Great Britain for a breach of neutrality. Very rell; States against Great Britain for a breach of neutrality. Very 'rell; the Geneva tribunal decided that in the case of three inculpated cruisers and the tenders of two, Great Britain was guilty of a breach of neutrality to the Government of the United States. Then the only remaining question was, what is the damage? Here I wish to say that I think gentlemen have made a great mistake again. They have argued all along as though the Geneva tribunal was recognizing the claims of certain individuals and basing its award upon the claims of individuals. Mr. President, the Geneva tribunal had nothing in the world to do with ascertaining the losers by the destruction of

They never inquired into that. They ascertained the losses. Now, if you think a moment there is a vast difference between the losses and the losers. The Geneva tribunal ascertained the losses, leaving to the United States Government the duty of ascertaining the losers.

Mr. THURMAN. The losers of what?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The losers by the destruction of these ves-

Mr. THURMAN. Very well.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Certainly there is no difficulty about that.
Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me a word? I am a little befogged about international law; but do I understand the Senator from Georgia to say that citizens of the United States could not sue Great Britain; it was the duty of the Government of the United States to require its citizens to prepare each his own claim, prove his loss, pay the expenses of the proof, send it to the Government, and have the Government collect the money for him, and then international law requires the United States to keep the money they have collected

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. No, I do not say that. Mr. BECK. I so understand the Senator.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. With all deference to my friend, he is very

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. With all deference to my friend, he is very sharp but not at all wise.

Mr. BECK. I thought the position was a very foolish one.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Then I was very dull in stating my position, because I know the Senator from Kentucky is never dull. The stupidity must have been in me altogether. The difficulty is this, with all due respect: gentlemen confound private claims which are settled by ordinary claims treaties with great international questions. Where a government has done a wrong to a citizen, that is an illegal act. Where the act is illegal, where the wrong is individual, there a right of action accrues, and as the British government is not suable it is the duty of the Government of the citizen to present his claim, and when she recovers it it is the duty of the Government to pay it to the citizen. But where there is no right of action in the citizen and the Government recovers the money, not because of the wrong done to the citizen, but because of the breach of neutrality or the violation of international right, then as a consequence of that violation there may be losses which the Government may or may not pay over to the citizen. It is not a question of legal right. Therefore the doctrine of subrogation has nothing to do with it. It is a doctrine of political right and must be left to the Government to judge of according to its discretion.

What I want to do is to eliminate from this case the question of legal right, of municipal law, and the principles of municipal law. The principles of municipal law have no application in this case whatever. There is nothing in the world but political law in this case. When the Government of the United States called Great Britain to account for the breach of neutrality—that was the ground of the suit—the question arose, after finding that she was guilty of a breach, what is the measure of damages? Of course the measure of damages is the wrong done by the vessels which are inculpated. That is necessarily the measure of damages.

Mr. CONKLING rose.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Gentlemen are impatient. I cannot argue a dozen points at once, and I should have been through long ago but for these questions which gentlemen think they see a mile ahead of the man who is arguing.

I say, then, the loss of these vessels being the measure of damages, it is proper that the Government should ascertain their loss and ascertain the value of the vessels lost and the value of the cargoes. That fixes the amount of loss; that is the amount of loss. That is what the Geneva award ascertained.

Now, remember, the right of the citizen in this case is political, and not legal. The citizen has rights; I do not deny it. The Govand not legal. The citizen has rights; I do not deny it. The Government collects the losses. Losses by what? Losses by the breach of neutrality; losses by this international act of bad faith, if you please to call it so, of Great Britain. The losses were upon the citizen in consequence of the international breach; and therefore the citizen has a political right, and it is proper that the Government should do him political justice.

Then you ascertain the losers. What losers? Necessarily the consequence is you must ascertain the actual losers. Gentlemen say you What losers? Necessarily the conmust pay the insurance companies. Were they actual losers? In the state of war they all took the chances of war. You must now come to deal with the whole. Here was a state of war. Here were ship-pers and freighters and importing merchants and insurance companies. Men wanted to send their vessels across the seas; and the insurer comes forward with the knowledge of the fact that there is a state of war and proposes to insure them upon war risks, and receives war premiums. Upon what principle does he take them? Underwriters make their calculations, as the Senator from Maine very justly said yesterday, upon the law of chances; and they say according to the law of chances so many vessels may pass safely over and so many may be captured and destroyed. Then they put on just such a rate of war premium as will enable them to be not losers in any event, with probably favorable chances of being gainers. Then they are not losers; clearly not losers; and there being no legal right, they can-not come in upon any ground of political right. They cannot come and say to the Government here, "We were all engaged in a common war; and I would have made so much more than I did make out of war; and I would have made so much more than I did make out of that war if this vessel had not been destroyed." That proposition is no political justice; for the man did make by the war more than he lost by the loss of the vessel. Then he has no right to complain that that war in which the breach of neutrality occurred made him an actual loser on the whole. On the contrary, he was an actual gainer; and therefore there is no political justice in paying him.

Mr. WHYTE. May I ask the Senator a question in regard to the mutual insurance companies, where a number of merchants contributed so much for the nursoes of insuring their own vessels?

mutual insurance companies, where a number of merchants contributed so much for the purpose of insuring their own vessels?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. My friend from Maryland must excuse me from going into the question of the difference between insurance companies. I lay down the broad proposition that wherever there was an actual loser—I am not going to stop to ascertain who is an actual loser; that is none of my business—there is political justice in activate that its respective property is closer than its less in the contribution. paying that loss; wherever there is a loser there is a loss, especially by this kind of transaction in the war.

Now, take the class of cases represented by the Senator from Maine, the gentlemen who paid war premiums. If he will show that the gentlemen who paid war premiums were by the general result actual losers, they ought to be paid; I do not care if their claims were thrown losers, they ought to be paid; I do not care if their claims were thrown out at Geneva. The question is one of actual loss, not of legal right; the question is one of actual loss and therefore of political justice and, I repeat, not of legal right. There is no legal right in the citizen in the case, and the Senator from Maine, in my judgment, was right, therefore, when he denied the application of the doctrine of subrogation to the case; but he was not right when he claimed that another class of claimants are entitled to pay without showing that they are actual losers. I presume—I do not know that it is so, but I presume—that gentlemen who paid the war premiums taxed the amount they naid for war premiums in the price of their goods, and, if so, they colpaid for war premiums in the price of their goods, and, if so, they col-

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to suggest that that is right where the difficulty is in the case. The payer of a war premium did business, not in competition with American citizens in genbusiness, not in competition with American citzens in general, all being under the jurisdiction of a state of war, but he did business in competition with the foreigner; he paid the war premiums; he sold his goods in the same market to which the foreigner carried his, and, consequently, he paid the war premium and could not re-collect it of the consumer; and there is the justice in these claims.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I realize the force of that argument. Mr. BLAIR. The man who carried the goods paid the war pre-

Mr. BLAINE. But even the merchant to whom the goods were consigned, and by whom they were bought, did not pay the war premium on the cargo. The whole of it was paid by the ship-owner, and he is entirely distinct from the merchant. That is where the Senator from Vermont got himself into trouble yesterday.

Mr. WHYTE. Did he not charge it in the freight, I ask the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BLAINE. What has that to do with the goods of the merchant?

chant'

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, I am not settling these par-ticular cases now. I am only stating the general principles by which I have been guided.

I have been guided.

Now, I say that the fact stated by the Senator from New Hampshire, and stated so forcibly before by the Senator from Maine that these shippers came in competition with foreign shippers is a material fact to be taken into consideration in ascertaining whether they were or were not actual losers. I do not know how that is.

This is a case of political justice, if you may call it so—I think it ought more properly to be called political liberality by the Government, political generosity. The Government says: "Here, Great Britain violated her neutrality with us during the war by which your vessel was destroyed; we called her to account for that and we collected the loss occurring to your vessel as the measure of damages; now show that you are an actual loser and we will pay you, ages; now show that you are an actual loser and we will pay you, not because we are bound to do it, for you had no right of action; you had no legal claim; it was nothing in the world but a political claim that was preferred by your Government, and your Government in distributing that political claim must act according to its own sense of justice to all its citizens and not a portion of its citizens," for whenever you come to a question of political justice you must consider all the people composing that political community. Hence as to the uninsured vessels that were destroyed, while they had no legal claim, no legal right, that is no right under the principles of municipal law, still as their owners were actual losers and were not indemnified by any other feature of the war, were clear actual losers by the destruction of their vessels for which the Government recovered the money, there is a political ages; now show that you are an actual loser and we will pay you, by the destruction of their vessels for which the Government recovered the money, there is a political propriety, there is a political justice in the Government paying those actual losers.

Mr. CONKLING. By the permission of the Senator I seek light on this point if he will allow me. According to the political justice, whatever that may be, which he thinks prevails, would it be important in his apprehension to ascertain whether the rates of marine insurance were enhanced by what the particular three inculpated cruisers did?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I should not think it was very material.

Mr. CONKLING. So that, if I may be allowed to advance a ster further, according to this somewhat nebulous rule of right to which the Senator refers in the form of political justice, if the outbreak of the war, if the announcement in the public journals that letters of marque and reprisal were to be issued by the confederate authorities, if the putting out in the estuaries of the sea all along of vessels not even included in the one hundred and thirty-five vessels which were counted up as those upon which depredations had been committed by the eighteen so-called confederate cruisers—if in consequence of all that the rates of marine insurance went up, went up very largely before the Alabama sailed, before the Florida sailed, before the Shenandoah sailed;—if it should turn out upon inquiry that war risks appreciated greatly before these things occurred at all, the honorable Senator from Georgia, if I understand him, would not consider that an element at all of the equity of the case, and he would not consider it important to ascertain whether all the exculpated cruisers, I think fifteen in number, for which it was held Great Britain was not liable at all, by their scourging the sea, also raised the rate of marine insurance. He would not deem it necessary to find, of course it would be impossible in fact to find, what part of these enhanced rates was due to the three inculpated cruisers; but taking the whole thing at large, the effect produced by the war, by rebellion, by the whole upheaval and earthquake which existed in this land, he would think under this rule of political justice that all that should be attributed to this fund in order to be paid to a class of men who were expressly denied and excluded by the tribunal.

If the honorable Senator from Georgia does really mean all that, I beg of him, and I do it sincerely, to state to me some principle however nebulous, gelatinous, or flocculent it may be, whether of political or international law, on which such an idea can rest.

Mr. HULL, of Georgia, As I have stated no such principle as that

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. As I have stated no such principle as that which the Senator states in such grandiloquent and such gelatinous style also I will add, I will not undertake to answer his question. It is exceedingly nebulous as applied to anything I have said, altogether so. I have asserted no such thing. I have meant simply to lay down the principle upon which I would act in this case. I would not call these war-premium men into account for their losses and profits on every feature of the war but only in the particular business in which they were engaged connected with the losses in question and the acts they were engaged connected with the losses in question and the acts in question. So of insurance companies; I would not confine them to the inculpated cruisers. They were paying war risks I suppose before the inculpated cruisers escaped. They went into it as a business. They went into the business of taking war risks. Now this breach of neutrality by Great Britain was only one act of the war and one feature of the war. Therefore in ascertaining whether they were losers or not, I would not confine the investigation to their loss upon vessels insured that were destroyed by the inculpated cruisers. I would ascertain their gains and losses on the business of taking I would ascertain their gains and losses on the business of taking

Mr. CONKLING. Surely the Senator does not understand me. Perhaps he is not willing to.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. No, I am not answering the Senator's question. Really I said, with all due deference to the Senator, that I did not affirm any such principle as he seemed to think I did or to ask me if I did; and therefore I was not answering his question at all.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not wish to engage with the Senator and certainly not to be uncivil to him, but if he permits me to put a plain matter of fact to him, I think I can do it so that he will not say he does not understand me.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Very well.
Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Georgia did answer me that he would not stop to inquire whether the rates of insurance were enhanced by the three inculpated cruisers. That he said. Then I proceeded another step and asked him whether he meant that he would charge this fund with such enhanced rates as were produced by all the exculpated cruisers as well. That he did not answer, but it was inferable from what he said before. Then I asked him whether he would attempt to define the amount of increased rates which the warpremium men paid growing out of the mere fact that these cruisers sailed, as separable from the general enhancement of war rates produced by the war at large. Now the honorable Senator from Georgia is too astute not to understand that. He knows that his theory, logically pursued, would seek to find out how much of these war premiums were due to the three inculpated cruisers, and that his argument cannot by possibility apply to rates which were enhanced by other causes. And when the Senator brushes off the question because of some jocose remark that I made about this political justice being rather an undefined and immeasurable sort of thing, I submit to him that it is not quite the way to deal with this proposition. What he is seeking at this point to maintain is that the men who paid war premiums have some sort of equity upon this fund; and when I ask him whether that equity is to be measured by the effect produced by the three inculpated cruisers alone he says no; and then when I ask him how he is going to distinguish as to the enhanced rates between the effect produced upon the one hundred and thirtyfive vessels by the whole eighteen cruisers or by the war itself, or the general apprehension, the Senator says "Well, on the whole that is nebulous," and he thinks the question is nebulous and he does not want to answer it.

Before I sit down I beg to return my thanks to the honorable Senator for the very definite answer that he gave to the other question which he permitted me to put and for the equally luminous remark which he makes upon this.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The Senator from New York, I will say, Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The Senator from New York, I will say, always puts his questions so pointedly, taking about fifteen minutes to state each separate question, that really I forget the beginning before he gets to the end. That is the trouble. I have no disposition to treat the Senator with discourtesy at all; on the contrary I have every desire to do otherwise; but I announced when I got up that I did not intend to go into the details of this question. If I said that I conceded that the war-premium men had any equities in this case, I did not mean to say it. I was simply arguing upon the assumption that they had, and showing wherein the equity must come if it comes that they had, and showing wherein the equity must come if it comes at all. Really, speaking legally, there are no equities in the case. There is no judicial equity, no legal equity, no judicial right of any sort, equitable or otherwise. Therefore it is a misapplication of terms. But Senators on different sides of me have continued to put questions to me with a view of drawing me into a discussion of details, which I have sought to avoid.

I say, then, upon the assumption that the men who paid war premiums are entitled to anything at all, upon the theory that I am advancing it can only be that as the result of their business in taking war risks during the war they were losers and not gainers. That is all I mean to say. I do not say whether they ought to have it; but the Senate will understand me as saying that I do not confine the calculation to the inculpated cruisers or to the enhancement of war rates because of the scilior of the invalence arrisers when I say if was because of the sailing of the inculpated cruisers or to the ennancement of war rates because of the sailing of the inculpated cruisers when I say if warpremium men are entitled to anything at all it is when they are losers upon a general accounting of their whole business of taking war risks, because the breach of neutrality upon which this money has been calculated is only one feature of a general war. I shall not undertake to say whether they are entitled or not. I have not intended to decide that exections but more than the theory that I are retained as I under cide that question; but upon the theory that I am stating, as I understand, the act of 1874 was passed for the purpose of paying those who were admitted on all hands to be actual losers. They have been paid. They were not paid because they had a legal right to the payment; they had no more legal right to this fund than they had a legal right of action against Great Britain, or any other power, assuming that Great Britain was suable, or any more than they had a legal right of action against the confederate cruisers.

A man cannot have a legal right to a fund as the result of a suit when he has no right to bring the suit itself; I do not mean no remedy for the suit, but no right. That is what I say. I do not say because he could not sue Great Britain as a matter of fact, because he had no remedy against Great Britain, she being a government, but I say upon the assumption that Great Britain is suable, if upon the principles of municipal law he had no right to bring and maintain an action against her, then he can have no right to the fund which that government may voluntarily pay, unless that fund is paid upon a breach against the citizen himself, and not upon a breach against the Government. That is the distinction I draw.

As I said before, this fund being in the hands of the Government thus derived by virtue of a breach of international law, not of individual right, the Government has a right to take the fund which she collects and distribute it among the losers, among those who lost by virtue of that breach of neutrality, actual losers only; and she ought to do it, not from a sense of legal justice but purely from a sense of political justice by the Government to her citizens. That is all I say.

political justice by the Government to her citizens. That is all I say.

Then, if you cannot find that the insurance companies are actual losers any further, I think you ought not to pay them. If you cannot find that anybody else as a class is an actual loser, you ought not to pay him. But if this loss finally falls upon the citizens of the country at large, upon the consumers, you cannot pay it because you cannot identify the losers; you cannot collect them; and the best way is to put it into the Treasury to pay the common debt.

I think if gentlemen had not disturbed me with questions seeking to draw me where I did not intend to go into a discussion of details to draw me where I did not intend to go, into a discussion of details of these various propositions, I should not have taken five minutes, I am sure not over ten; but I want to say now to the gentlemen of the Judiciary Committee that—and I confess there is where my whole trouble lies—I do not see that these citizens have any legal claim to this money because they had no right of action against anybody for the destruction of the vessels, and failing to have their right of action because the destruction of the vessels was a legal act and not an illegal act, there is no right of action growing out of a legal act. That is the point. If the destruction of a vessel was a legal act, where is their right of action for damages? If it was a legal act, pray tell me how does the doctrine of subrogation come in? That is the point with me. If you collected this money from the parties who destroyed the vessels you might modify or change the question, but you did not do that. This money was not collected from them, it was collected from Great Britain from Great Britain.

I think, therefore, the disposition of this case is right. But I would vote for the indefinite postponement for another reason. As stated by the Senator from Maryland, the bill has got into that shape now where I do not think the Senate is in a condition to dispose of it. If hereafter it should turn out that there are actual losers who ought to have this fund under any legal right or any political right, if you choose to call it so, abstract justice, put it in that form if you wish, as a matter of abstract justice, we can give it to them hereafter, but

I think in the condition the bill is now we ought to postpone it indefinitely

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I shall not argue a question which I have argued sufficiently before and upon which I was defeated by a vote of two to one, and that is the question whether the insurance companies ought to be paid. I only rise to say once more that I voted and shall vote for the indefinite postponement of the bill, not upon the vague, shadowy idea of putting this money into the Treasury of the United States for the indemnity of all the people of the United States, because all the people were losers by the act of Great Britain, every one of them; there was not a man in the whole country who was not a loser by the act of Great Britain. I shall not put it upon that, but I put my vote distinctly upon the ground I stated before. You cannot mature a bill upon such a subject as this, where there is such diversity of opinion, in the open Senate. Therefore the bill had better be postponed, and leave to time and further reflection and further consultation among Senators and Representatives to produce some bill which can pass both Houses, and which will do the best justice that we are able to arrive at.

I renew my motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. BLAINE. That motion being agreed to, is it to be understood by the Senate and the country, and by the honorable chairman of the Judiciary Committee, that his committee will take no action at all?

Mr. THURMAN. I do not answer for the committee at all. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Garland in the chair.) The Senator from Ohio renews his motion to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Maine to reconsider the vote by which the bill was postponed indefinitely

Mr. BURNSIDE. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to say a word?

Mr. THURMAN. I must decline.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I will not exceed two minutes. I have not said one word on this bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I know my friend has not, but—

Mr. BURNSIDE. I have listened to everybody, and now I desire to say just one word.

Mr. THURMAN. But if I give way to the Senator I shall have to give way to a dozen others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio declines to yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I appeal to the Senator from Ohio to allow me to say a single word, not to exceed two minutes. My constituents are interested in this measure, and I have not said one word upon it. I have listened to every Senator who has spoken upon the measure, and now I wish to say a single word. I promise not to speak over two

Mr. THURMAN. I dislike very much to refuse any request made by the Senator from Rhode Island. Mr. BURNSIDE. Then I shall take occasion at some other time to express the views that I have upon the measure and upon the action of the Senate to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from Ohio will allow the Senmr. THURMAN. I will give way to the Senator from Rhode Island if he will renew the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio withdraws

the motion for the present.

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator will renew the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, we have before us a bill-Mr. THURMAN. Do I understand the Senator to say that he will renew the motion?

Mr. BURNSIDE.
Mr. THURMAN.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I will yield to the Senator from Ohio to renew it.
Mr. THURMAN. But somebody else may take the floor.
Mr. BURNSIDE. I will hold the floor and yield directly to the Senator from Ohio to renew the motion, or if not I will renew the motion myself.

Mr. THURMAN. Very well.
Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, we have before us a bill reported Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, we have before us a bill reported by the Judiciary Committee for the relief of certain classes who suf-fered from the depredations of cruisers during the late war. That committee evidently felt that all these different classes were sufferers and should be remunerated for their losses or they would not have reported the bill. After the discussion of the bill which has been very elaborate and exhaustive, and to which we have all paid attention, a vote was taken by which one class of alleged sufferers was tion, a vote was taken by which one class of alleged sufferers was excluded from the bill by a vote of two to one, a very emphatic vote, and a vote which, in my opinion, corresponds with the principles of justice and the sentiment of the whole country. It is not likely that any Senate in this Chamber will ever reverse that vote. It is in accordance with the opinion of the whole country and was so distinctly and intelligently given that no man can mistake its meaning.

Now the members of the Judiciary Committee who brought the bill before us and who recommended that all these different classes should have relief simply because that one class has been excluded and have relief, simply because that one class has been excluded, and before any other class of sufferers to whom they might object had been put in this bill, (for no amendment has been acted upon touching war premiums,) are willing to abandon the other classes in the bill and say, "Because we cannot get money for these insurance companies we will not allow you to get money for anybody, and we will join the Senators who are indisposed to pass any bill at all in causing an indefinite postponement."

They are placing themselves very much in the condition that I would be in if I had brought a bill before the Senate to pension all the officers and soldiers of the Mexican war, and because the Senate by a vote of two to one struck out the word "officers" I abandoned all the privates, and joined the opponents of the bill to say that the privates should not have pensions because the officers could not have them. That is the position the Judiciary Committee puts itself in, in my opinion, and I say this with the greatest possible deference to that committee.

I have watched this legal discussion from beginning to end, and I say that in my belief the vote of the Senate of two to one against the insurance companies was in accordance with the sentiment of this country, and I do not believe any body of Senators will ever come into this Chamber who will reverse that vote.

In my opinion it puts the Judiciary Committee in rather a bad position. If it was their intention to have this bill fail unless this insurance clause could be maintained why did they not name the bill "A bill for the relief of a few insurance companies." If they had determined to abandon this measure the very moment the clause that touches the insurance companies was stricken out, and to leave all the ship-owners and other sufferers from the depredations of the exculpated cruisers in the lurch, I say it would have been more appropriate to have named the bill "A bill for the relief of a few marine insurance com-named the bill "A bill for the relief of a few marine insurance companies."

Mr. THURMAN. It is sufficient that those who reported this bill from the Judiciary Committee are not willing to support the bill now, when if it were to pass in its present shape it would put men who are in a second class in the bill in the first class and prefer them to everybody else. But I shall not debate that. I renew my motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Maine to reconsider the vote by which the Geneva award bill was indefinitely postnoned.

indefinitely postponed.

Mr. FERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNSIDE, (when Mr. Anthony's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. Anthony] is paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Logan.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay," and the Senator from Illinois, I suppose, would vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Yes, sir; he would vote "yea."

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this bill with the Senator from New York, [Mr. Kernan.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DAWES, (when Mr. Hoar's name was called.) I repeat the announcement I have made that my colleague [Mr. Hoar] is paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. Bayard.] My colleague would vote "nay," if here.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BECK. I desire to announce again that I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. Jones.] I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. VOORHEES. My colleague [Mr. McDonald] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. Carpenter.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 29; as follows:

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 1160) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of peace and the recognition of American Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and the products of the soil and mine, in the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the year 1883.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. MAXEY. I move to set aside all previous orders and take up the bill (S. No. 98) to provide for the settlement of accounts with certain railway companies. I will state that when the Geneva award bill was called up I had made a similar motion before, but learning during the discussion that the notice to call up the Geneva award bill was understood to be in order after the Hot Springs bill, in charge of the Senator now occupying the chair, was disposed of, I yielded to that as a matter of right, giving notice that I should call this bill up at the conclusion of the Geneva award bill. It is a very important bill, and was partially discussed on a former day by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] and myself. It has been in the hands of the Committee on Military Affairs for a great while, and I desire to have it disposed of. I think it will not take more than a day or two to discuss it, and it ought to be disposed of as soon as possible. I move to set aside all previous orders and take up Mr. WITHERS. I feel compelled to antagonize the motion of the Senator from Texas by proposing to take up for consideration House bill No. 5523, making appropriations for the support of the Army. Reports from the Committee on Appropriations of regular appropri-ation bills have usually been accorded in the Senate the preference in receiving consideration over other bills.

Mr. MAXEY. I have only to say in reply to the Senator from Virginia that I have no desire, as the word nowadays is, to antagonize—
I should prefer "oppose"—the Army appropriation bill, but I desire to have the bill I have moved before the Senate, and if it be brought before the Senate I am willing to lay it aside and take up the Army appropriation bill. Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. EDMUNDS. That cannot be done. I shall not agree to lay aside anything informally for the present, for I think it injurious to getting along with the business of the Senate, and particularly this bill, perhaps because I am so much opposed to it.

Mr. MAXEY. Then I insist on my motion. Let it be disposed of Mr. PLUMB. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Texas. Does his motion include the laying aside of the Calendar?

Mr. MAXEY. Oh, no! The Calendar would be taken up to-morrow as usual. The consideration of this bill will have nothing to do with

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to state that it is now late in April, and only one general appropriation bill has passed Congress. There is an appropriation bill now pending on the Calendar of the Senate which it is desirable to take up and act upon before some other general appropriation bills are passed upon, and it is the desire of the Appropriations Committee as soon as the Army bill shall have been disposed of to take up the bill reported from the same committee proposing to repeal indefinite permanent annual appropriations. I think, with all due deference, that the Senate should consider appropriation bills of this character which are absolutely important, and some of them indispensable to be passed, rather than take up other bills. That is all

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe it has been the universal practice in this body, as it ought to be, when the Committee on Appropriations is ready, after it has reported a bill and it has been on the table a day or two so that we may see it, to take up the appropriation bill, to take it up against everything else except in some very extreme emergency. Therefore, without regard to the merit of the bill of my friend from Texas, I certainly think we ought to refuse to take that up, but should take up the bill proposed by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr MAXEY I extract to give way to the Genera award bill with

Mr. MAXEY. I agreed to give way to the Geneva award bill with the distinct understanding, as Senators will remember, that I would have the bill I have now moved taken up at the conclusion of the Geneva award bill. That was assented to by Senators. As a matter of course I am satisfied that the Senator from Vermont is not only or course I am satisfied that the Senator from Vermont Is not only willing to lay aside this bill for the present but for all time to come, and hence will feel very well if the Senate does not consider it; but I believe that the proposition which I make is fair and just. The appropriation bill referred to by the Senator from Virginia is not suffering. The bill I move has been in the hands of the committee during several Congresses, has been continually reported one way, and it ought to be now taken up by the Senate and disposed of, and the committee relieved from further duty in the wester.

committee relieved from further duty in the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. WITHERS. I move to amend that by substituting House bill

No. 5523.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not in order.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that that is not in order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope the motion of the Senator from Texas to take up the railroad-grant bill, as it is known, will not prevail. As was well said by the Senator from Virginia, the Appropriation Committee has now ready for action what is known as the Army appropriation bill. I believe it has been universally the rule of the Senate to take up appropriation bills when they are ready for action. In addition to that, it is well known that a few days ago the bill to repeal permanent indefinite annual appropriations was before the Senate for consideration and we proceeded to a certain extent. the Senate for consideration and we proceeded to a certain extent with it, when the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Morrill] and several other Senators requested that it should go over for a day or two, or until the Geneva award bill was disposed of, as some of them wanted to examine it. It is well recollected by Senators that I assented to to examine it. It is well recollected by Senators that I assented to that arrangement, if it was one, or at least I gave way to the wishes of Senators. I now give way in that particular to a regular appropriation bill, which I think it is my duty to do, although the other bill is also from the Appropriation Committee and ought to be considered, so as to get it over to the House as early as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Texas?

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 17, noes 28.

ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3534) to authorize and equip an expedition to the Arctic Seas, to report it without amendment and submit a report thereon, which I ask to have printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be printed under the

Mr. McPHERSON. This is an important matter, one that should be considered very early if at all, and I shall ask for the consideration of the bill on Monday morning next in the morning hour.

SETTLEMENT OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to give notice that I shall ask the Senate, Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to give notice that I shall ask the Senate, on behalf of the Committee on Private Land Claims, as early as I possibly can, to take up the bill (S. No. 818) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories, which is a very important bill for settling private land claims generally, in New Mexico and those Territories where we have not had land commissions before. I should not have thought of giving the notice, only it seems that a notice is regarded as a kind of caveat that gives somebody a preference, though the rules do not provide for it.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 2481) to create an additional land district in the State of Kansas was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. No. 3717) relating to convicts in the territorial prison of Idaho Territory was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Committee on Territories.

The bill (H. R. No. 3751) to amend chapter 198, volume 16, of the Statutes at Large, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 5894) to authorize the sale of Fort Logan, Montana Territory, and to establish a new post on the frontier was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 2467) granting a pension to Daniel D. Long was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WITHERS. I now move to take up House bill No. 5523, making appropriations for the support of the Army.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 5523) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I presume the Senator from Virginia does not desire to press his bill to-night?

Mr. WITHERS. No, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Therefore, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Army appropriation bill being before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, the Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of execntive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 21, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN INDIANA.

Mr. NEW. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 2384, amendatory of and supplementary to "An act to provide for the holding of terms of the district and circuit courts of the United States at Fort Wayne, Indiana," approved June 18, 1878, (which bill has been reported unanimously from the Judiciary Committee,) and that it be taken up now for consideration.

Mr. CONGER. Yesterday, when I made a request for unanimous consent for the consideration of a very important measure, which would have taken but a moment, objection was made. It was not the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. New] who objected, but I think it best that we should follow the regular order as the quickest way possible for disposing of our business. It is very necessary that we should reach the bill which I asked the House yesterday to consider. Several MEMBERS. "Regular order!"

PRINTING OF SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to make a privileged report from the Comittee on Printing. That committee has directed me to report back, mittee on Printing. That committee has directed me to report back, with a recommendation that the House concur, a resolution of the Senate for printing copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institu-

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 10,500 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1879 be printed; 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 6,500 for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] would consent to an amendment. I would like to amend this resolution by striking out the word "ten," and inserting "fifteen," so as to provide for printing 15,500 copies of this report.

Mr. WILSON. The resolution proposes the number which has been printed every year for a long series of years, and which I believe has been found to be sufficient.

Mr. DUNNELL. This Smithsonian report is a very valuable document. Members of the House are in the habit of getting seven or perhaps nine copies each. There are more than that number of public libraries in every congressional district in the country. This is a report which we may well print in larger number than is here proposed. port which we may well print in larger number than is here proposed. I have already very many calls for it. After the document has been printed and stereotyped the expense of a few thousand additional copies is very trifling indeed. It costs more to print the reports which are sent around to members, only to fill up their rooms, than it would to print 5,000, yes, 10,000, additional copies of the Smithsonian report. I move to amend by striking out "10" and inserting "15," so as to provide for printing 15,500 copies; and then the distribution can be arranged so as to give to the House and the Senate this additional 5,000—3,500 to the House and 1,500 to the Senate.

Mr. WILSON. I do not feel authorized to accept the amendment for the reason

Mr. DUNNELL. Well, I understand that it is my right to move

The SPEAKER. It is, if the gentleman from West Virginia yields

The SPEAKER. It is, if the gentleman from West Virginia yields for that purpose before demanding the previous question.

Mr. WILSON. I have not yielded except to hear the suggestion.

Mr. NEW. I rise to a question of order. I wish to inquire whether this matter is or is not now before the House in contravention of the call for the regular order made by the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, the Committee on Printing has the right to report at any time touching matter—

Mr. NEW. I do not care to hear the rule read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia has the right.

Mr. NEW. I do not care to hear the rule read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia has the right to report from the Committee on Printing under the rules; and because of that right he has been recognized.

Mr. DUNNELL. I presume that my motion is in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia is on the floor, and states that he does not yield for the amendment.

Mr. DUNNELL. I did not ask him to yield. I addressed the Chair and made my motion to amend. The previous question has not been called.

The SPEAKER. Until an adverse vote by the House, the resolu-tion is under the control of the gentleman from West Virginia who reports it.
Mr. DUNNELL. Does the Chair undertake to say that a resolution reported here is not open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair states that the gentleman reporting a measure has the right to test the sense of the House as to cutting off amendments by calling the previous question.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentleman has not demanded the previous

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is still on the floor and declines to yield for an amendment.

Mr. DUNNELL. I was recognized to make a motion to amend; I have made such a motion, and I was heard upon that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia states that he yielded for a suggestion, not for an amendment. The Chair uniformly recognizes the right of a member reporting a measure to retain its control until an adverse vote by the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. I cannot understand why the gentleman from West Virginia should object to allowing an amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is another question—a question with which the Chair has nothing to do.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentleman is not under instructions of the committee not to allow an amendment to be offered.

Mr. WILSON. I cannot yield further. This subject has undergone investigation by the Committee on Printing in the Senate. The Senate passed it without objection. It has come to the House and grape to the Committee on Printing. gone to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. DUNNELL. Because it passed the Senate without objection is no reason why we should pass it without objection.

Mr. WILSON. I beg to say this amount has been recommended by the Department, and it is all that is asked. I demand the previous question

Mr. DUNNELL. We are not legislating for the Smithsonian Institution, but we are legislating for the country at large. The Smithsonian gets two-thirds of what we vote here. I hope the previous question will be voted down, so we may test this question in behalf

The demand for the previous question was not seconded.
Mr. DUNNELL. I move to strike out "10,500" and insert "15,500," and to provide that 5,000 copies be for the use of the Smithsonian Institution, 8,000 for the House, and 2,500 for the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The resolution, if amended, will read as follows:
The Clerk read as follows:

Resalved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring therein.) That 15.500 copies of thereport of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1879 be printed; 2,500 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What will be the additional cost?
Mr. DUNNELL. I am unable to say.
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Would it not be small?
Mr. DUNNELL. Very small; as the expense will only be for printing and paper, the plates being stereotyped.
Mr. REAGAN. What is the use of 5,000 for the Smithsonian Institution?

tution ?

Mr. DUNNELL. Five thousand is enough for the use of the Smithsonian Institution. I demand the previous question on the concurrent resolution and amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof Mr. DUNNELL's amendment was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was concurred in.

Mr. DUNNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. WILSON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back joint resolution (S. R. No. 100) to print extra copies of the report on fish and fisheries for the year 1879, with an amendment.

The amendment reported from the Committee on Printing was, after the word "printing," to strike out:

And 2,500 for sale by the Public Printer, under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereto thereon added.

So as to make the resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 10,000 extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1579, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, the illustrations to be made by the Public Printer, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Public Printing.

Mr. WILSON. I demand the previous question on the joint resolution and amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to. The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EULOGIES ON SENATOR HOUSTON.

Mr. WILSON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably joint resolution (S. R. No. 91) relating to the memorial addresses delivered on the occasion of the passage of resolutions in the Senate and House of Representatives commemorative of Hon. George S. Houston, late a Senator of the United States.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

That 12,000 copies of the proceedings connected with the funeral of and eulogies delivered in the Senate and in the House of Representatives upon the late George S. Honston be printed, 8,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 4,000 for the use of the Senate; and that the sum of $500 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay for the expense of procuring a portrait of the late Mr. Houston, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS, FORT WAYNE, INDIANA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] withdraws his objection to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. New,] to take from the House Calendar and put on its passage at this time a bill (H. R. No. 2384) amendatory of and supplementary to "An act to provide for the holding of terms of the district and circuit courts of the United States at Fort Wayne, Indiana," approved June 18, 1878, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. ATKINS. If that bill is going to excite discussion, I must ob-

Mr. NEW. My colleague [Mr. Browne] wishes to be heard briefly in opposition to the bill, and I will yield to him for five minutes.

Mr. BROWNE. I desire eight minutes.

Mr. NEW. Very well, then, I will yield to my colleague for eight

Mr. ATKINS. I dislike to object—
Mr. CAMP. Is discussion to go to the extent of eight minutes? I thought five minutes was the limit on the other side. [Laughter.] Mr. BRIGGS. I object.

PENSION COURT.

Mr. GEDDES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a matter to which I think there will be no objection and need no discussion at this time. I move that Saturday of this week be assigned for the consideration of the bill for the organization of a pension court. I think we appreciate and understand it will be a great saving of time and prevent frequent night sessions which we are now compelled to hold.

Mr. ATKINS. I object.

Mr. NEW. I understood the gentleman from Michigan to withdraw his objection to my request.

The SPEAKER. The contlement from New Hampshire records.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire renewed

The SPEAKER. That night has already been set apart for reports from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as the Chair is informed.

Mr. BLOUNT. Take the following week.

Mr. GEDDES. Then fix Thursday night of the next week.

Mr. ATKINS. These meetings here at night have turned out to be perfect farces, and I shall object to them.

Mr. GEDDES. That is the very evil I propose to correct. It is evident that but little good can be accomplished by night sessions on pension bills. The passage of the bill referred to will obviate that difficulty and accomplish the object that gentlemen have in view in these night sessions. There are gentlemen enough here who attend these evening sessions to understand the force of what I say, that we are misspending our time—worse than misspending our time I may say—for we are criminally spending the money of the Government here in attempting to conduct the public business under the difficulties that now exist. All of this can be obviated by the adoption of the bill which I now ask to be considered. If the House will consent to fixing Thursday night of next week at seven and a half o'clock, the House to take a recess from four and a half o'clock until that hour, we can obviate the necessity for these night sessions.

Mr. ATKINS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Is it in order now to move to go to business on the Speaker's table in order to take up the resolution introduced some time ago by myself fixing the daily hour of meeting at eleven o'clock? That will obviate the necessity for these night sessions.

Mr. GEDDES. Those the gentleman from Virginia will not object.

Mr. GEDDES. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will not object to this.

Mr. COFFROTH. This is a very important bill, and ought to be considered as soon as possible.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order.
Mr. WARNER. I hope there will be no objection to the proposition made by the gentleman from Ohio to fix Thursday night of next week for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to ask the attention of the House for

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri having demanded the regular order, the Chair must recognize that demand.

Mr. GEDDES. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will withdraw that demand for a moment. I know if he reflects for a moment he will not object to my proposition.

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio. He now asks that Thursday evening of next week at half past seven o'clock be set apart for the consideration of a bill reported from the Special Committee on Invalid Pensions, the title of which the Clerk will now report.

Mr. GEDDES. And the House to take a recess from half past four o'clock that day until the hour fixed for the evening session.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to establish a court of pensions.

Mr. CASWELL. I ask the gentleman to include the consideration of the substitute.

Mr. COFFROTH. That will be included.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the motion of the gentleman

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I now demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at twenty minutes to one o'clock.

Mr. McMAHON. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the purpose of considering the immediate deficiency bill.

Mr. PAGE. That will require two-thirds.
Mr. GUNTER. I ask to introduce two bills for reference at this time.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent. Mr. McMAHON. I insist upon my motion.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 115, noes 45.

Mr. CONGER demanded tellers. Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed Mr. CAMP and Mr. McMahon tellers.

So the motion of Mr. Conger was not agreed to.
The following additional pairs were announced:
Mr. Washburn with Mr. Poehler for to-day, on all political questions, but not to break a quorum.
Mr. McLane with Mr. Tyler until Saturday next.
Mr. Harmer with Mr. Ellis.
Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMahon] to limit debate to five minutes

Mr. McMAHON. The sense of the House, I think, has been sufficiently tested to warrant me in demanding, as I now do, the previous question on my motion in regard to limiting debate.

Mr. CONGER. I call the attention of the Chair—

Mr. McMAHON. I decline to yield the floor, but demand the previous question on my resolution.

Mr. CONGER. I addressed the Chair before the gentleman from Ohio did.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Ohio, he having charge of the bill to which his motion relates.

Mr. McMAHON. I insist upon my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it again.

Mr. McMAHON. I demand the previous question on my pending motion that all debate upon the immediate deficiency bill in Committee of the Whole be limited to five minutes. I refuse to yield for amendments to that motion, or for any other purpose, and insist upon the House coming now to a direct vote on the proposition.

The question was taken upon seconding the demand for the previous question; and upon a division there were—ayes 79, noes 4.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum has voted..

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CAMP and Mr. McMahon were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 93, noes

Mr. CONGER. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order having been made that no quorum has voted, the only motions now in order are a motion to adjourn and for a call of the House.

Mr. LOWE. If in order I move to refer this matter to a committee on common sense with instructions to report immediately. [Laugh-

Mr. REED. That would be a partisan committee-all from this side. [Laughter.] Mr. EINSTEIN.

Mr. EINSTEIN. I would ask the other side of the House not to follow the lead of their brethren at Syracuse yesterday; but to accept the olive branch which has been held out to them.

Mr. McMAHON. I offered the olive branch yesterday, but gentle-men on the other side would not accept it on account of it excluding their leader.

Mr. EINSTEIN. We will take care of our leader ourselves.
Mr. HUMPHREY. What is the proposition now?
Mr. McMAHON. I have no proposition.
Mr. CONGER. I sincerely hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMahon] having charge of this bill will not forget our friends on the ice in the Arctic region. [Laughter.] Yesterday they were suffering very much, and our sympathies were excited beyond all calcula-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Discussion is not now in order.

Mr. McMAHON. Gentlemen upon the other side have refused to vote or to allow business to proceed. If they are willing to take that responsibility they can do so.

Mr. HISCOCK. And our friends on the other side rather than allow an hour for debate have wasted two days of the time of the House.

Mr. EINSTEIN. Is there anything so wrong in this bill that we cannot be allowed to debate it for one hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a question for the Chair to determine.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I would like to inquire if the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Lowe] is debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Alabama is not in order.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I understood him to move that this matter

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I understood him to move that this matter be referred to a committee on common sense. Is that debatable? The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order. Mr. CONGER. As the previous question has not been seconded, I move that the time for debate be made one hour and thirty minutes. Mr. McMAHON. I raise a point of order on that motion. The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order pending the point of order that no quorum voted on seconding the demand for the prayions question.

the point of order that no quotain voted on seconding the for the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. Was that demand seconded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was not.

Mr. CONGER. Therefore, it not being seconded, it is in order for me to make my motion, and I now move that there be an hour and thirty minutes for debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] made the point of order that no quorum voted; and no motion is now in order except a motion to adjourn or a motion for a call of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I asked the Chair if the previous question was seconded, and the Chair said it was not. If not, then my motion is

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order that there was no quorum voting?

Mr. CONGER. Not at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then no motion is in order except for a call of the House or to adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. Do I understand the Chair to say that the previous question is seconded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly not.

Mr. CONGER. Then I move to make the time for debate an hour and thirty minutes.

Mr. HÜTCHINS. Is debate in order?

Mr. HUTCHINS. Is debate in order?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.
Mr. HUTCHINS. Then I call the gentleman from Michigan to order.
Mr. CONGER. I suppose that seats me without any action of the House. [Laughter.]
Mr. HUTCHINS. I call the gentleman from Michigan to order.
Mr. CONGER. That seats me without any action of the House.
Mr. HUTCHINS. Order. [Laughter.]
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] made the point of order himself that no quorum voted.
Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir; and the then occupant of the chair stated that the previous question was not seconded.
The SPEAKER. And the occupant of the chair stated correctly, that it was not seconded, because a quorum had not voted.
Mr. CONGER. There was no qualification in the statement of the then occupant of the chair, and I was proceeding strictly on parliamentary grounds.

mentary grounds.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on seconding the motion for the previous question. Does the gentleman from Michigan still insist upon the point of order that no quorum has voted?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir. Mr. REAGAN. I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered, fifteen members voting in favor

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on seconding the demand for the previous question.

The question being taken, there were ayes 71, noes none. Mr. CONGER. No quorum!

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. McMahon and Mr. Camp were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported 65 in the affirmative, in the negative.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that no quorum, has

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maine may now proceed to make his remarks on this subject.

Mr. McMAHON. We prefer to wait for a quorum, so that the gentleman may have a full House.

Mr. WILBER. If we cannot proceed with other business, we may as well hear him.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, by unanimous consent, reported that the Committee on Enrolled Bills had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the

No. 1160) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of peace and the recognition of American Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and the products of the soil and mine, in the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the year 1883.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS, by unanimous consent, reported back, from the Committee on Appropriations, the bill (H. R. No. 5626) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and moved that the same be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The motion of Mr. ATKINS was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures a joint resolution (H. R. No. 275) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit subsidiary coin through the mails—
Mr. CONGER. I call for the regular order.

IMMEDIATE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. McMAHON. As gentlemen on the other side are unwilling to proceed with the public business—Mr. CONGER. I call the gentleman to order. His language is insulting and untrue.

Mr. McMAHON. It may be insulting, but it is very true.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to state that this character of

The SPEARER. The Chair wants to state that this character of language must henceforth cease.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir; I thank the Chair for rebuking it.

Mr. McMAHON. I think the rebuke is over there. I desire to repeat what I said. As gentlemen on the other side are not disposed to vote and do not vote—[cries of "Order!"]—my language is in order and I do not propose to be corrected upon it—and are obstructing the while beginning the vote of the heaving given them. public business by declining to vote, after having given them two days—

Mr. WILBER. I call the gentleman to order.
Mr. McMAHON. Let my words be taken down if they are out of order. That is the way to test it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed. Mr. CONGER. I submit that debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Ohio was trying to reach an arrangement of some sort.

Mr. WILBER. But he has no right to state that we are obstructing public business when he brings forward bills which he dare not

Mr. McMAHON. Allow me to finish my sentence. I will begin it over again, as it pertains to the business of the House. As gentlemen on the other side have declined uniformly to vote when the public business would be accelerated and helped, I withdraw both the motions I have made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio withdraws his motion. Mr. McMAHON. If there is anything out of order in that, take it down and try it.

SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move the House go to the Speaker's table for the purpose of referring certain bills there.

Mr. BLOUNT. Cannot we take up an election case and try that awhile?

Mr. SPRINGER. We will after awhile. I now move to go to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am ready to vote with you now on an election

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that the motion is not in order until after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour to-day has been dispensed with.

Mr. CONGER. Then there is no morning hour to-day, and the motion is not in order to go to the business on the Speaker's table until after the morning hour. The Chair has ruled that so many times—

The SPEAKER. The Chair recollects no such ruling. The gentleman from Michigan will be kind enough to refer to it if he knows of any such ruling, or else not make the statement.

Mr. SPRINGER. If that point of order were well taken there could be no other business done, because all other business must come up after the morning hour, and when you dispense with the morning hour, according to the gentleman's idea, that dispenses with all other

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I give notice that if we go to the business on the Speaker's table I shall call up for action my resolution providing for the daily hour of meeting of the House at eleven o'clock a. m. instead of twelve m.

The SPEAKER. That resolution is upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. So I understand.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read clauses 3 and 4 of Rule XXIV, controlling the disposal of business upon the Speaker's table.

The Clerk read as follows:

3. The morning hour for the call of committees shall not be dispensed with except by a vote of two-thirds of those present and voting thereon.

4. After the hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees, it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may have been engaged at an adjournment, and at the same time each day thereafter, other than the first and third Mondays, until disposed of; and it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of all other unfinished business whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order.

Mr. Springer's motion was agreed to.

LIBRARY BUILDING, FORT MONROE, VIRGINIA.

The first business on the Speaker's table was a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting plans, &c., for library building at Fort Monroe, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF BILLS AND DOCUMENTS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the joint resolution (H. R. No. 179) authorizing the Public Printer to print additional copies of bills and other public documents, returned from the Senate with amendments; which, on motion of Mr. Springer, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

CHARLES OLIVIER DUCLOZEL.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 2004) to confirm the title of Charles Olivier Duclozel to certain lands in the State of Louisiana, returned from the Senate with amendments; which, on motion of Mr. Springer, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 4244) for the establishment of titles in Hot Springs, and for other purposes, returned from the Senate with a substitute.

Mr. CRAVENS. I move that the Senate substitute be concurred in.

Mr. CONGER. Let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAVENS. I move that the Senate substitute be concurred in. Mr. CONGER. Let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 1. That any person, his heirs or legal representatives, in whose favor the commissioners appointed under the acts of Congress of 1877 and 1878 relative to the Hot Springs of Arkansas have adjudicated, shall have the sole right to enter and pay for the amount of land the commissioners may have adjudged him entitled to purchase, within twelve months next after the expiration of the notice required by the tenth section of the act of Congress of March 3, 1877, to be given by paying to the receiver of public moneys at the land office in Little Rock, Arkansas, 50 percent, of the assessed value of said lands, as placed thereon by said commissioners; and that such assessments be reduced to that extent; and that in any cases where any church or church association has been adjudged entitled to purchase land it may do so by paying $5 per lot.

SEC. 2. That the certificates issued for condemned buildings by said commissioners be made receivable for the amounts named therein as so many dollars lawful money of the United States in the entry and purchase of the lands that may be sold in the Hot Springs reservation; and that such certificates be assignable, and when assigned in the presence of two subscribing witnesses, or the execution of the assignment thereof shall have been acknowledged before a court of record or clerk thereof, the land offices in like manner shall receive them from the assigned in the presence of two subscribing witnesses, or the execution of the assignment of land purchased for himself or others; and in case the amount of the certificate presented and received at such land office shall exceed that necessary to make the purchase and entry desired, there shall be executed by the register and receiver, and delivered to the person from whom the same is received, a certificate in the certificate that is such districts, not divided by streets on the map made by the commissioners as Nor be, and the same are hereby, ceded to the corporation of the town of Hot Springs for public use.

SEC. 7. That that portion of the Hot Springs reservation laid off into lots and blocks and forming part of the town site, but not awarded to any claimants, and not otherwise disposed of or reserved by this act, shall be sold at public auction to the highest bidder, at not less than its appraised value, to be made from time to time, at the discretion and under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and after public notice in the usual way in the sale of public lands; and the money arising from said sales, as well as any money paid in under section 1 of this act, shall be held as a special fund for the improvement and care of the permanent reservation at Hot Springs and of the Hot Springs Creek adjacent to and between the permanent reservations, and for the maintenance of free baths for the invalid poor of the United States, as provided by acts of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The sections upon which the point of order is raised by the gentleman from Michigan will be read.

The bill was again read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks if this is an amendment of the Senate to the House bill, separate and distinct in its character from anything that was adopted by the House, Rule XX would apply to it. The Chair will cause the rule to be read. it. The Chair will cause.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XX.

OF AMENDMENTS OF THE SENATE.

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now cause to be read the third clause of the twenty-third rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

3. All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

Mr. CRAVENS. If the Speaker will allow me, I wish to state, as I understand, the rules of the House which have just been read do not apply to this bill; in other words, that it is not subject to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Arkansas in the chair will be the second of the House of the Hou

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Arkansas if this bill proposes to part with any property of the United States? Mr. CRAVENS. Yes, sir; but the original bill also, which was considered in the Committee of the Whole here and passed by the House, provided the same thing, and the effect of the Senate bill will only be to bring more money into the Treasury than would have been received into it under the House bill. For that reason I do not think it is subject to the point of order. For instance, the original bill provided that the lots which were awarded to the residents of the town of Hot Springs might be entered and valid titles obtained therefor on payment of a fee amounting to $10 on each lot. These lots are valued at $1,500, and this Senate bill provides that they shall be entered at one-half of their value; that is $750 instead of $10, as was provided in the House bill. in the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to state that this bill was considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CRAVENS. Yes, sir.
The SPEAKER. And when it was so considered in the House a provision was inserted parting with certain property of the United States, and the Senate amendment added thereto is simply changing the general feature of the bill in that respect; but leaving that provision, namely, parting with the property of the United States, as it was in the House bill?

Mr. CRAVENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. But the House bill did not give away the property of the United States for church purposes of for school purposes. This

Mr. CONGER. But the House bill did not give away the property of the United States for church purposes or for school purposes. This bill, of course, originated in the House, and was considered in the Committee of the Whole; but these propositions were not contained in the House bill, as I understand.

Mr. CHALMERS. The amendment of the Senate adds to the amount to be paid into the public Treasury instead of taking away courtbing from it.

anything from it.

Mr. WARNER. It will add about $100,000 more to the Treasury than the House bill.

Mr. CHALMERS. It adds very largely to the amount to be derived from this property.

Mr. CONGER. The question is not as to the amount to be derived from the property but whether it disposes of any property of the

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendment seems to have stricken out everything in the House bill after the enacting clause, and the gentleman from Michigan states that the amended bill proposes to gentleman from Michigan states that the amended bill proposes to part with certain property of the United States for church or school purposes, which provision was not contained in the original bill.

Mr. CRAVENS. But it does not change the House bill.

Mr. CHALMERS. I understand that it is not the fact that this Senate bill parts with the property of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan has so stated.

Mr. CONGER. This Senate bill proposes to part with certain property for church and school purposes. Now, according to my understanding, there was no such provision in the House bill which was considered in the Committee of the Whole. I do not of course mean to be understood as making objection to giving the property for such purposes, but I make the point of order simply that this disposes with property of the United States—this substitute for the House bill—and therefore that it should have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

Committee of the Whole. The SPEAKER. If this was a new bill it would be subject of course to the point of order, that is to say if such bill had originated course to the point of order, that is to say if such bill had originated in the House. The Chair thinks under the combined provisions of the two rules which have been read, and if it is true that this is a substitute for the House bill containing propositions different in reference to the disposition of this property from those contained in the House bill, that it would be subject to the point of order.

Mr. CRAVENS. The provisions of the bill are nearly identical with the original bill in the House. I may say that they are identical in all the particulars excepting as to how these parties to whom the lots were awarded and the amount they should pay into the Treasury for them.

The House bill provided that they should pay, as I have already stated, $10 a lot, while this bill provides they shall pay half of the valuation of the property, and the only difference is that in the House bill the amount received into the Treasury from this source would not have exceeded $20,000, while under this provision of the Senate bill $120,000 will be received.

Mr. CONGER. But that is to be paid for in some kind of scrip issued by the commissioners, and will not be paid in the money of the United States.

United States.

Mr. CRAVENS. That is only partly true, because there will be money to a greater or less extent received for that property.

Mr. CONGER. But the Government will receive the scrip certificates instead of the money.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas explains that the general provisions of the bill are identical with the House bill. The difference is as to the amount of money to be paid for these lots in the town of Hot Springs.

Mr. CRAVENS. That is it.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CRAVENS] state there was a provision in the House bill for giving lots to different institutions?

Mr. CRAVENS. Yes, sir.
Mr. CONGER. To the churches and to the schools?
Mr. CRAVENS. I understand the gentleman's point now. There is only this difference in that respect. In this bill there is provision made that the Secretary of the Interior may designate the lot for a

Mr. CONGER. Was that in the House bill?

Mr. CRAVENS. No, sir; but with that exception it is identical.

Mr. CONGER. That is the point of my inquiry. That, of course, carries it to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CRAVENS. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will with-

Mr. CRAVENS. I nope the gentleman from Michigan will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to see this bill in print and to have an opportunity of examining it. There is a great deal of diversity of opinion as to what should be in the bill; and it seems to me this House in disposing of a large portion of the public property or remitting one-half or nine-tenths of the amount required by the present law to be paid for it should know what the bill is. I may have no objection to passing the Senate bill when I understand it, but I desire to see what it is

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to say one word on the point of order. If the House will examine the Senate amendment it will be found to be introduced as follows:

Resolved, That the bill of the House of Representatives (H. R. No. 4244) entitled "An act for the establishment of titles in Hot Springs, and for other purposes," do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert, &c.

The SPEAKER. Is the title changed?

Mr. CRAVENS. No, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, this under all parliamentary rules is a new bill. There may be many of the provisions incorporated in this bill that passed the House, but this bill cannot be considered as having ever been considered in the House, because it is now presented to the House in this shape for the first time; in the shape, namely, of striking out all of our bill and inserting this bill. What is in this bill I do not know. But I do know under the rules of the House, which ought to be observed, this bill is subject to the point of order, and we ought not to make the precedent here of going to examine the terms of these bills in the House to see whether some of them may be the same as those of another bill or not.

When the Senate send us an entirely new bill and ask us to concur with them in their amendment, we have the right and ought to apply the rule to it, if the point of order is made, that that bill shall take the course which the rule indicates, and go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; because in the parliamentary sense, and our rules speak in a parliamentary sense, this bill has never been passed or considered by the House in this shape.

I have no objection to the measure, so far as that is concerned; but I do insist this rule should not be violated at this early stage of its operation, because it was made for a wholesome purpose, and if de-operation, because it was made for a wholesome purpose, and if departed from now it will be simply a nullity hereafter.

Mr. CRAVENS. I do not profess to be a parliamentarian, but I do not think the position of the gentleman from Illinois is correct. I would like to see the authority on which he relies.

Mr. SPRINGER. In a parliamentary sense we have never considered one line of that bill. It is all new matter, and we are asked to proceed the process of the process o enact it in that shape.

Mr. CRAVENS. In so many words, it is represented to be an amendment. It is an amendment, and only an amendment, in the particulars I have mentioned, of the bill which passed the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will withdraw the point of order. But the point of order having been made, to rule otherwise would be to annul one of the new rules of the House which I think is a very good one.

Mr. CRAVENS. I wish to state in addition that the land office is now open for the entry of these lands. This bill has been carefully considered by the Senate, and every objection which was heard in this House when it was here for consideration is cured by this amend-

Mr. CONGER. We cannot discuss the merits of the bill now. But there were very strong objections to the House bill, and the friends of the House bill asserted it was as perfect as it could be made acor the House bill asserted it was as perfect as it could be made according to their views. Now it has gone to the Senate, and I can see a very different bill has been passed there. If this meets the views of the gentlemen who desired the passage of the other bill it is possible it may still be improved in one direction or another. I do not know how that may be; but I think the House ought to look into the bill carefully. There is a large amount of property and there are large individual rights involved in the decision of this question. Congress went to the expense of appointing a commission whose action it was expected would be final and satisfactory.

Mr. BUCKNER. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is in order on the point of order, not on the merits of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. A bill is brought here to change entirely the report of the commission and the law as it was. Let it go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and if on examination it is or the whole on the state of the Union, and if on examination it is found to be right, then let it pass.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that in a parliamentary sense this is not a new bill. It has the same title and the same number that it had when it passed the House.

Mr. CONGER. I did not make the point that it was a new bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPEINGER] made the point that it was a new bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I meant that the subject-matter of the bill was

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the Senate relates generally to the subject-matter of the bill as passed by the House. The point of order is made, however, that the amendment of the Senate in one of its provisions proposes to part with the property of the United States for an entirely different object from that proposed by the bill as it passed the House. It may be that that amendment is subject to that point of order.

Mr. DUNN. I do not know what different disposition the amendment of the Senate makes of the property from that made by the House bill, except as to the price charged.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to state, and the gentleman from Arkansas in charge of the bill [Mr. CRAVENS] admitted the statement to be correct, that by the Senate amendment property of the United States is rect, that by the Senate amendment property of the United States is given for a different purpose from any purpose in the House bill.

Mr. CRAVENS. I will state for the information of gentlemen that the Senate amendment does propose to give some land to a church.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand that property is not given away, but reserved from public sale.

Mr. DUNN. By the original bill land in the statement to be corrected to the control of the statement of of th

Mr. DUNN. By the original bill land is given for school purposes.
Mr. CONVERSE. In order to cut this matter short I would suggest that the bill remain upon the Speaker's table and be printed.

The SPEAKER. In that way it would lose none of its advantages.
Mr. SPRINGER. We cannot tell whether the amendment of the Senate comes within the new rule until we can compare it with the original bill.

Mr. CONGER. I would have no objection to its being referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Cravens] would prefer to have it remain on the Speaker's table to being referred to the Committee on the Public

Mr. CONGER. Very well; I have no objection to that. Mr. CRAVENS. I will ask that it be allowed to remain upon the Speaker's table and be printed

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

HEALTH ORDINANCES OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the joint resolution of the House No. 189, legalizing the health ordinances and regulations for the District of Columbia, returned from the Senate with an amendment

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that that resolution and amendment be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. NEAL. I will say that it is the desire of the Committee on the District of Columbia that the amendment of the Senate be concarred in.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well, I will withdraw my motion then.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the Senate will be read.

The amendment was to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the ordinances of the late board of health of the District of Columbia, as revised, amended, and adopted, November 19, 1875, entitled "An ordinance to revise, consolidate, and amend the ordinances of the board of health, to declare what shall be deemed nuisances injurious to health, and to provide for the removal thereof," as printed in the report of said late board of health made to the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, being Executive Document No. 1, part 8, be, and the same are hereby, legalized; and the respective penalties therein prescribed for violations thereof may be imposed and enforced for the respective offenses therein described, excepting the sections of said ordinance following, namely, sections 7, 9, and 14, which said sections are not hereby legalized.

SEC. 2. That the ordinances, rules, and regulations of said late board of health contained in the report mentioned in the preceding section, and printed in the said executive document therein mentioned, namely:

First. "An ordinance to amend an ordinance to prevent domestic animals from running at large within the cities of Washington and Georgetows; passed by the board of health May 19, 1871;"

Second. "An ordinance to prevent the sale of anwholesome food in the cities of Washington and Georgetown;"

Third. "An ordinance to provide for the inspection of streets, food, live stock, fish and other marine products, in the cities of Washington and Georgetown; and to define the duties of inspectors and other officers of the board of health;"

Fourth. "An ordinance to amend section 10 of the code, so as to read;"

Fifth. "An ordinance to amend an ordinance passed May 13, 1873, to read as follows:"

Fifth. "An ordinance to amend an ordinance passes in section and several lows;"

Sixth. "An ordinance to prevent committing or creating nuisances in or about public urinal or urinals located within the cities of Washington and Georgetown;" Seventh. "Rules and regulations in regard to small pox;"

Eighth. "Regulations to secure a full and correct record of vital statistics, including the registration of marriages, births, and deaths, the interment, disinterment, and removal of the dead in the District of Columbia;" be, and the same are hereby, legalized and made valid; and the penalties therein provided respectively for violations thereof, may be imposed and enforced for the violations of the same respectively, as provided by section 27 of the ordinance passed November 21, 1875.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. NEAL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

DAILY HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. At this point I desire to raise a question of order in regard to the position of a resolution offered by myself last week in regard to the daily hour of meeting. In the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings I find the following:

Mr. Buckner. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on and after Wednesday next, until otherwise ordered, the hour of daily meeting of the House be eleven o'cleck a. m.

Mr. Fernando Wood I object.

Mr. Garfield. Is not that a privileged question?

The Speaker. It is not a privileged question for consideration at this time. It may be a question of privilege to introduce such a resolution, but if introduced the Chair thinks there is no place for it except perhaps the Speaker's table.

Mr. Garfield. I hopethe gentleman will introduce it and let it go to the Speaker's table, where we may be able to reach it some time. If we are to get through before the dog-days we must begin our daily assessions before twelve o'clock.

The Speaker. Upon reflection the Chair recollects that there is a resolution of this nature already on the Speaker's table, introduced by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Hareis.]

The SPEAKER. Was that the Speaker or the Speaker pro tempore?
Mr. HARRIS, of Wirginia. It is my recollection that it was the Speaker who then occupied the chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that Mr. CARLISLS, of Kentucky, while acting as Speaker made a ruling on the same subject in harmony with the ruling of the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. HARRIS, of Wirginia. The gentleman from Kentucky ruled that the resolution which I offered was not a privileged resolution for consideration, but that it was priwileged for introduction. The present occupant of the chair went farther and said that the resolution went to the Speaker's table. lution went to the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair it could go nowhere else. It could not go to the table of the House, for that is the place for bills, &c., which have been reported adversely and go there as rejected bills and propositions.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Then the question I now propound is, ought not that resolution to take precedence over other matters which

The SPEAKER. The rule is silent as to such propositions; but the Chair will recognize the gentleman to state his proposition.

Mr. REAGAN. I trust it will not be assumed that a proposition not reported by a committee but introduced by an individual member and placed on the Speaker's table ought to take rank along with res-and placed on the Speaker's table ought to take rank along with resolutions or bills reported by committees and regularly on the table.

The SPEAKER. If the rule is insisted on, the order of the rule as to disposing of business on the Speaker's table must be adhered to, and this resolution as to the hour of meeting will come up after.

Mr. REAGAN. I shall insist on anything that will prevent the adoption of this proposition at the present time. A number of committees have work before them which requires their whole time. Some of them are obliged to meet both mornings and evenings. It is too early yet to adopt this proposition.

The SPEAKER. Yet the House, in the opinion of the Chair, ought to have some way to say at what hour it will meet.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. At what time does my friend's committee meet in the morning?

Mr. REAGAN. At half past nine o'clock.

Mr. REAGAN. At half past nine o'clock. Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That is a good hour. Mr. REAGAN. Sometimes at nine o'clock, and often in the even-

Mr. REAGAN. Sometimes at time o clock, and of the House ings.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to test the sense of the House on this proposition; and I think that a question touching the hour of meeting ought to be a question of the highest privilege, whether it is or not. If the House desires to meet at a certain hour it ought to have the privilege of saying so.

Mr. FINLEY. If this proposition requires unanimous consent, I object. I concur with the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.]

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask for a vote on the proposition I have submitted.

Mr. REAGAN. I submit that any proposition covering this question ought to come from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CONGER. The twenty-eighth rule provides the manner of changing any standing rule of the House. It is now a standing rule that we meet at twelve o'clock.

Mr. FINLEY. Is not this proposition subject to the point of order that it can only be adopted by a two-thirds vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair, when this proposition was introduced, entertained it as in the nature of a notice. Now the proposition itself must go somewhere. It could not go to either of the calendars; it could not go upon the table of the House. It naturally could go to no other place than the Speaker's table.

go to no other place than the Speaker's table.

Mr. CONGER. Would it not naturally go to the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. That would be by motion. It did not go there.

It could, of course, have been sent by a vote of the House. But the Committee on Rules could not bring it back except when called.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. When this proposition was introduced by me the Chair decided that it might be introduced as one day's notice to change a rule of the House, as required under the rules. I notice to change a rule of the House, as required under the rules. I gave that notice. It should be held as a notice to change the existing rule as to the hour of meeting. Hence that part of the rules has been complied with,

The SPEAKER. The part of the rule which relates to notice has clearly been complied with; and the Chair is of opinion that the House in some way should have the right to fix the time of the daily meeting.

Mr. MILLS. Is not this resolution in the same condition as the resolution which I offered some time ago, providing for regular night sessions, which the Chair certainly ruled was not in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not said that this was in order, to be introduced and acted upon immediately upon introduction. The Chair has heretofore said that a proposition of this kind should go to the Speaker's table; and the gentleman from Virginia raises the point of order that the House being engaged on business upon the Speaker's of order that the House being engaged on business upon the Speaker's table, it has the right under the former ruling to take up and consider this resolution, and that it should have precedence.

Mr. FINLEY. Allow me to inquire whether the rule of the House prescribing the manner in which a standing rule must be changed would not apply in this case as in any other?

The SPEAKER. This is an order of the House as to its hour of meeting.

Mr. FINLEY. But it occurs to me it is necessary to change it by the same process that is applicable in the case of any other rule.

Mr. REAGAN. It seems to me that technically this resolution ought not to go on the Speaker's table, because—

The SPEAKER. Where would it go?

Mr. HOOKER. To the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BEAGAN. It sught to be referred I think: and if the Chair.

Mr. REAGAN. It ought to be referred I think; and if the Chair will entertain the motion now, I will move to refer it to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order if the order is taken from the Speaker's table for consideration.

Mr. CHALMERS. My point of order is this: under Rule XXVIII this is a motion to change a standing rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman means a standing order.

Mr. CHALMERS. The rule is:

No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice of the motion therefor, and no rule shall be suspended except by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third Mondays of each month.

This is a motion to change the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this is what is termed an order of the Honse

Mr. CHALMERS. And it requires two-thirds to pass it. I make the point it cannot be entertained except on Monday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this is an order of the House, and not a rule. The latter part of the rule read applies to a suspension of the rules by a two-thirds vote, but that part of the rule is not applicable as against an order in manner as provided for in first not applicable as against an order in manner as provided for in line clause of the rule read.

Mr. CHALMERS: It says "no standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded." It uses the words "or order."

The SPEAKER. Yes; but that is the first clause. "No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice of the motion therefor." This clause has been complied with, and one day's notice has been given; but the second part which follows immediately thereafter provides: "Nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third tertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third Monday of each month." This clause does not apply to a suspension of an order of the House as referred to in the prior clause.

Mr. CONVERSE. I rise to a point of order.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. CONVERSE. The order of the business on the Speaker's table is: first, executive communications undisposed of; second, Senate bills with House amendments thereto; third, House bills with amendments of the Senate thereto. There is where we are now, and though this resolution may be properly upon the Speaker's table, now is not the time to engider it. the time to consider it.

Mr. REAGAN. I move it be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CONVERSE. It is not before the House. The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the intelligent disposition of this proposition would be to allow it to be referred to a committee of the House with authority to report immediately.

Mr. REAGAN. I would not embrace that in my motion. Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. With instructions to report immedi-

Mr. REAGAN. I am frank to say, Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this rule now would absolutely interfere with the transaction of public business, unless members retire from the House to attend to committee business. Some committees are engaged in important business, occupying their time every morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point we are proceeding with the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table under the rule to which he referred, and that in that order this resolution has not yet been reached, and will not be until the order of business mentioned in the rule has been concluded. The Chair thinks the point is well taken.

Mr. ATKINS. I think the remarks of the gentleman from Texas are very proper. I do not think we will facilitate the expedition of business. The gentleman has been on the floor for half an hour.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I want to hear what the gentleman has to say; but the Chair decides that the resolution is not now before

Mr. WILSON. I understood the gentleman from Texas to move the resolution be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The Chair ruled in favor of the point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio; and the resolution, therefore, is not before the House, not having yet been reached on the Speaker's

The ruling of the Chair is, in the first place, that there is no other place for this resolution fixing the daily hour of meeting than the Speaker's table; secondly, that the one day's notice required of the change of a standing order has been given and the rule in that respect complied with; but, in the third place, under the point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio that the disposal of business upon the Speaker's table should preced in the order set down in the rule. the Speaker's table should proceed in the order set down in the rule, that the resolution is not now before the House, not yet having been reached on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BUCKNER. This is under the heading of "unfinished business" on the Calendar, placed there by the Clerk, with a note that it is "laid over one day under the rule."

MARINE HOSPITAL, MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 2253) to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee, which was returned from the Senate with an amendment

Mr. DIBRELL. My colleague [Mr. Young] from the Memphis district is absent, and, not knowing his wish in the matter, I ask by unanimous consent this be passed over for the present.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CLEVELAND OHIO.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. Not-5623) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to repair and extend the public building owned by the Government at Cleveland, Ohio, returned from the Senate with an amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the House will concur in the Senate amendment. It was passed by unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Public Buildings here. It passed unanimously through the Senate, and the amendment of the Senate only makes appropriation for the recair. ation for the repair.

The amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:
And this sum, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to make this remark in connection with this matter: The post-office authorities at Cleveland have requested the Post-Office Department to authorize them to rent additional building room, and the question as to whether they shall incur that expense or not depends upon the passage of this bill. If this is passed that can be provided for without rental, and this expense avoided. It will be an actual saving to the Government. I hope, therefore, it will be passed.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SURVEY AND DISPOSITION OF THE PUBLIC LAND.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a Senate concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The SPEAKER. THE CARRY THE CLERK read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

June 12, 1879. Resolved by the Senate of the United States, (the House of Representatives concurring therein.) That the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate and Committee on the Public Lands of the House be each authorized to appoint a sub-committee, to consist of not exceeding three members of said committees, to act in aid of the commission, authorized under the "act of March 3, 1879, charged with the duty of codifying the laws relating to the survey and disposition of the public domain, and provide for the classification and sale of the public lands, and other duties therewith connected," with power to sit in vacation. And any expenses incurred in the discharge of said duties shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House respectively, upon the certificate of the chairmen of said committees.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let that be referred to a committee.
The SPEAKER. What committee will the gentleman suggest?
Mr. DUNNELL. Is it desired to bring it before the House for action at this time?

Mr. BERRY. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

SURVEY AND DISPOSITION OF MINERAL LANDS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a Senate concurrent resolution.

The Clerk proceeded to read the resolution.

Mr. STEVENSON. That resolution will not be concurred in and it is hardly necessary to take up the time in reading it. I ask, therefore, that it be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining with-

The motion was agreed to.

ADVANCEMENT OF AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the following Senate concurrent resolution with preamble:

Whereas agriculture is the foundation of nearly all our wealth, and it is mainly through the exportation of its products that we are paying off our large indebtedness, foreign and domestic, and have the present large balance of trade in our favor; and

Whereas, although about one-half of the people of this country are engaged in agricultural pursuits, and all other interests are dependent upon this our leading and most important interest, commercial and otherwise, yet but little has been done by the General Government to promote agriculture, while other less general and important interests have been largely aided: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the Committees on Agriculture of the respective Houses be, and they are hereby, instructed to consider generally the subject of agriculture, and report, by bill or otherwise, what can or ought to be done by the General Government to better advance, encourage, and foster agricultural interests; and that said committees shall have the power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. DIBRELL. I hope that will be agreed to.
Mr. COVERT. I move the adoption of the Senate resolution.
Mr. DUNNELL. Let it go to the Committee on Agriculture. It has never been considered by the committee, and I move its reference to that committee

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That is a very important resolution, and I trust it will be adopted.

Mr. DUNNELL. It has never been considered, as I understand it, by the House Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. DIBRELL. We have considered everything in connection with it very fully in the House, and the subject is pretty well understood here. I am in favor of passing it now. I think we understand what is needed in that connection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It should be passed without delay. The SPEAKER. The question will first be taken on the reference of the resolution.

Mr. BERRY. I would like to know what the proposition before the House is.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is to refer this to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. BERRY. I hope it will not be referred, but considered at the present time.

The motion to refer was not agreed to.

Mr. COVERT. I move the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let it be again read.

Mr. REAGAN. I would like to offer an amendment, if it be in order. I should like to insert a provision that it shall be considered in connection with how far the agricultural interests of this country can be advanced by adopting a revenue instead of a protective tariff, and by revising the laws in relation to internal-revenue taxation.

That is a matter of vital importance, in my opinion.

Mr. COVERT. I am willing to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Texas if I can do so.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order that the resolution in its terms interferes with the rights and the privileges of the House. The Senate has no right whatever to order one of our committees to report by bill or otherwise. We have no right to order any committee of the Senate to report by bill or otherwise. If the House will observe the language of that resolution—I ask that it be read again, as a part of my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the Committees on Agriculture of the respective Houses be, and they are hereby, instructed to consider generally the subject of agriculture, and report, by bill or otherwise, what can or ought to be done by the General Government to better advance, encourage, and foster agricultural interests; and that said committees shall have the power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now, I am as much in favor of having these committees examine and report on those subjects as anybody; and I am willing to vote to direct our Committee on Agriculture to consider this subject and report to the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman think that it is not within the consideration of any particular subject.

Mr. GARFIELD. Oh, no; I say we have.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly they have. If the two Houses should have the right to create respective committees, they surely should the power of the two Houses to instruct by concurrent resolution their respective committees to consider particular subjects and report to the two Houses respectively?

Mr. GARFIELD. I think they may by a joint or concurrent resolution instruct a joint committee, raised under the joint order of the two Houses. But how can I or all of us together properly vote to order the Senate Committee on Agriculture to consider a certain subject and report a bill? Or how can the Senate send us an order which has no binding power upon one of our committees? That is the mean-has no binding power upon one of our committees? That is the meaning of it all.

I do not think I have ever known a proposition of this kind before, and I raise the question to get the ruling of the Chair upon it. If I am wrong, of course I will be very glad to know this sort of thing can be done. If I have it in my power by introducing a resolution here to compel some Senate committee to make a certain investigation and report, I have a power which I never knew I possessed as a member of the House. And on the other hand, if the Senate has that power over our committees, let us know it.

The SPEAKER. The effect of this concurrent resolution might be to create, for the object specified in the resolution, as it were, a special committee. And the Senate indicates and the House indicates, if it committee. And the Senate indicates and the House indicates, if it agrees to pass the resolution, that the members of the respective Committees on Agriculture of the two Houses shall form a special committee for the consideration of the particular subject embraced in the resolution resolution.

Mr. GARFIELD. If that is the view of the Speaker, then the Senate goes a step further and appoints certain specific members of the House, and we by passing this appoint certain specific Senators.

The SPEAKER. The joint committees of the two Houses are appointed by the respective Houses.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the Senate appoints a committee to consider and report upon a particular subject and to act in conjunction with such committee as the House may appoint on the same subject, that I grant the Senate has the right to do. That leaves it to the Speaker to designate the committee on the part of the House. But if we adont this resolution the Speaker has no power of designation. adopt this resolution the Speaker has no power of designation.

The SPEAKER. The two committees have already been designation.

The SPEARER. The two committees have already been designated by the respective Houses.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is to me a new thought altogether.

The SPEAKER. It is an unusual proceeding, it is true, but the Chair thinks such a resolution was passed by the Senate at the last session, but failed to pass the House session, but falled to pass the House.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to make this inquiry: If this resolution be adopted by this body, will it not be adopted in pursuance of the provision of the Constitution that every resolution to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary shall be the supreme law when signed by the President of the United States? Now, what is there in the position of a committee of this House to prevent its being subjected to the high authority of the laws of the land? of the land? A law passed by the Senate and by this House and signed by the President of the United States operates upon every citizen of the Government.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas the difference is that this is not signed by the President.

Mr. MILLS. But it is a concurrent resolution. It comes within the terms of the constitutional provision; and when the House concurs in this resolution I suppose its committee is bound to give effect to it.

Mr. BARBER. I desire to make an inquiry. Under the construction of the rule given by the Speaker, will the report made be a joint report, or will separate reports be made by the respective committees?

The SPEAKER. Any report the committees might agree to would be made to the respective Houses in manner as joint committees report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I think the action of the House might be regarded somewhat in this light: that this is the expression of the sentiments of the House upon a question in which one-half of the people of this country are directly interested. It is an expression of the sentiment of the two Houses upon the claims of the agricultural interest.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the proposition of the Senate as in order. Mr. REAGAN.

Now I desire to offer my amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. Now I desire to offer my amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. May I be permitted for a moment to pursue the question I was submitting to the Chair?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will listen with pleasure.

Mr. GARFIELD. Suppose we pass this and suppose that next week we would like to annul our part of the arrangement. Suppose we should say we do not want our Committee on Agriculture to do this thing. We cannot get out of it because we are bound by a concurrent action of the two bodies. Now, I think the House of Representatives has not any right to place itself in that position. By concurring in this resolution we put ourselves in the power of the Senate.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand the Speaker has ruled upon the point as raised by the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio would hardly state that the two Houses have not a right to create a joint committee for the consideration of any particular subject.

have the right combined to instruct by a concurrent resolution the respective committees of the two Houses in reference to a particular subject. And if the House subsequently wanted to withdraw from the House committee its jurisdiction of such a subject, then the House would find a way under its rules no doubt to take the consideration of that subject away from that committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. Could the House do that without the concurrence of the Senate after having passed this resolution? That is the point I make.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it not be the best way to refer this to the Committee on Agriculture?
The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the resolution.

Mr. MILLS. Let the amendment be read.

The amendment was read, which was to add the following:

That the committee also inquire as to the effect on the agricultural interests of the country of the adoption of a revenue tariff instead of the present protective tariff, and a proper revision of the laws relating to internal revenue taxation, and report on those subjects.

Mr. REAGAN. One word in relation to that.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to the resolution.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman can make that after I am through.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman can make that after I am enforga. This amendment is drawn in the haste of the moment, and perhaps imperfectly drawn, but simply with the view of calling attention to the subject. The purpose of the resolution which has been read is to be made the manner of herefiting the agricultural interests of the inquire into the means of benefiting the agricultural interests of the country. It recites very properly the great importance of that branch of industry and the great office it fills in providing the means of paying our public debt and carrying on the Government. If we do not mean to treat this vast interest with mere general complimentary platitudes; if we mean to do something which will lift the burden from the shoulders of those engaged in agriculture and distribute it over the various interests of the country at large, then this amendment is directly within the scope of the resolution coming from the Senate, in order that we may ascertain what can be done to ameliorate and benefit and promote the agricultural interests of the country. When we look at the fact that we have a tariff constructed with especial view to securing protection, in which revenue is simply an incident, as is evidenced by exempting from taxation coffee and tea and other important articles of import that are not produced in this country, with a corresponding increase of taxation on everything that is made or produced in this country, we see a confirmation of the statement that our tariff is especially a protection as contradistinguished from a revenue tariff.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. In some respects prohibitory.

Mr. REAGAN. And as my friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] suggests, in some respects prohibitory. I believe I have before presented to this House on some occasions the fact that taking the best estimates that our ablest statisticians have been able to make of the amount of articles manufactured and brought into market in this amount of articles maintractured and oblight his articles maintractured and oblight his articles maintractured and oblight his articles are the amount of revenue that comes from the present tariff duties, we impose upon the people of this country a burden of not less than $1,600,000,000 a year, which amount does not go into the Treasury, but is transferred from one class of our people to another class of people by the operation of law and without consideration.

When we remember that these agriculturists that are spoken of so blandly in the resolution are engaged in an industry that is deprived of this vast amount of money for the benefit of other people, it seems to me entirely pertinent and appropriate that we should point out in the resolution some specific means of transferring this vast burden from them and distributing it among the different interests of our

As was very forcibly presented by my colleague [Mr. Mills] a few weeks ago, our internal-revenue laws are so arranged as to tax the consumers of the country and to exempt the capital, the wealth, and the property of the country from bearing its part of the burdens of the Government. If this resolution is not intended to be a barren platitude, it opens a field of investigation that might well command the attention and the general consideration of any committee of this House. That Congress which shall meet the wishes of the people of this country, conform to their interests, and make systems of revenue that will bear alike upon all, extending special privileges to none, but securing alike the interests of all, will be entitled to the profound gratitude of the people of this country, and will receive the expression of its grateful consideration for so doing. But it will never accomplish that by barren platitudes eulogizing agriculture. We can never accomplish it except by ascertaining what burdens press down to impoverishment the agricultural interests while it is building up fortunes in the hands of the few.

I do not know but that I have ever stated it before; but about forty years ago, when Stephen Girard by a long life of earnest industry and fortunate speculations succeeded in accumulating a fortune of $3,000,000, it was considered one of the worlds of the world.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have made a point of order on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] simply to ask that his point of order be reserved, but not to express a wish to take the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Reagan] from the floor.

Mr. REAGAN. I am not going to occupy much more time. As I was saying, when forty years ago Stephen Girard succeeded in accumulating a fortune of $3,000,000 it was a matter of astonishment to the people of this country. At that time the wealth of the country was more equally distributed among the people, and the enjoyment of the fruits of wealth was more universal in this country than in

of the fruits of wealth was more universal in this country than any other country beneath the sun.

Our people live under equal and just laws, conferring no exclusive privileges upon any, giving no special benefits to any, but extending equal protection to all parts of the country and to every class of industry. What is now the case? Within the last fifteen years we see dustry. What is now the case? Within the last niteen years we see colossal fortunes of from five to one hundred million dollars piled up in a few years—such as no man can possibly by any successful speculation or commercial adventure expect without Government aid to obtain through a life-time if it were extended to eighty years. you come to inquire why it is that colossal fortunes are being piled oup at the expense of the industry of the country, you must answer that question by reference to the laws on our statute-books—laws which through bounties conferred on particular interests, through protective tariffs, through discriminating internal-revenue laws, through monopolies secured in particular classes of business, have opened the way under the operation of law and by the help of the law for piling these vast fortunes which come from the earnings of the toiling millions. Hence the few are becoming richer and richer day by day, while the many make no advance, and in most parts of the country white the many make no advance, and in most parts of the country retrograde in fortune year by year.

Mr. BAYNE Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. BAYNE. Has not the national wealth increased more during the last eighteen years than it did in any forty years of the previous history of the country; and is not this due to the protective policy inaugurated about eighteen or nineteen years ago? [Cries of "No!"

Mr. REAGAN. I suppose that is the opinion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. But while the aggregate of wealth in this country has increased, the universal enjoyment of wealth and its equal distribution all over the country are disappearing. If you should go to one of the imperial capitals of Europe, such as Paris or Vienna, as those great capitals increase in dimensions, in population, in wealth, and splendor, they might possibly be pointed to as evidence of the prosperity and growth of those countries; but while that imperial splendor is being piled up for the enjoyment of the few, the toiling millions, without the means of sufficient education, without the proper comforts of life, are bearing the burdens out of which are drawn the millions that create those splendid edifices. Such is the effect and must always be the effect of any system of legislation which robs one portion of the people for the benefit of another portion.

If we are to preserve popular liberty in this country, if we are to maintain republican government, we must do it by a system of legislation which shall command the respect and confidence of the peo-ple and enable them in hearty, cheerful patriotism to support the Government—the common government alike of all classes of the people, which shall in the exercise of its functions impose undue burdens upon none, give undue benefits to none. Just so long as we do this we may expect republican institutions and popular government to stand. When we depart from this policy, as we have now departed in order to adopt a system which has piled up great fortunes in the hands of a few at the expense of the many, we are on the road to a moneyed aristocracy which, when sufficiently established, will, in my judgment, inevitably subvert the liberties of our people and change the character of our Government.

If I had supposed this question was to arise, it is exactly upon this theme I would have liked to address the House for a few moments. But I leave that topic. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] asks me whether it is not protection that has increased the wealth of asks me whether it is not protection that has increased the weather it is not protection that has increased the weather it is not proved in this country. Sir, our country's wealth has grown in spite of vicious and false legislation. It has grown as the result of the inherent energies and vast resources of the American people, which unjust legislation has thus far been unable to fetter in chains tight enough to deprive us wholly of the means of prosperity.

But, sir, aside from this, recognizing the necessity of collecting revenue for the support of the Government and the payment of the public debt, give us a revenue tariff. Place it, if you will, at an averpublic debt, give us a revenue tariff. Place it, if you will, at an average of 20 per cent. higher than any revenue tariff from the foundation of the Government until now. By enlarging the foreign trade of the country, by giving activity to internal industry, by increasing imports and exports, you will obtain as much revenue as you now do; and at the same time you will save not less than $500,000,000 a year to the classes who consume, to the very agricultural class sought to be flattered by the vague terms of the resolution just read. The proposition may be well enough if it is meant to speak a voice that the people will understand and can ratify; but if gentlemen suppose that such platitudes as these can advance the interest or satisfy the demands of this country, they misapprehend the intelligence of the American people.

Not knowing this question was to come up, I have spoken upon it hurriedly and without premeditation. Ifeel, however, that the amendment is proper to come in with the original resolution, so that some real tangible matter can be before this committee to be investigated and reported upon with a view to the amelioration and advancement of the agricultural interests of the country.

Mr. KELLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. COVERT. I call the previous question.
Mr. KELLEY. I have been recognized by the Chair.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] who reserved the point of order yielded to allow the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Reagan] to make his remarks. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley] has applied to the Chair to be heard in reply; and the Chair has recognized him.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the gentleman proceeds will he allow me to offer a substitute

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to discuss the question moved by the gen-tleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] and the House will take a recess in about fifteen minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman can speak on my substitute.
Mr. KELLEY. I propose, with the permission of the gentleman from Illinois, to speak in reply to the gentleman from Texas.
Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Texas yielded to me, as I understood, to offer this substitute.
Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman from Texas surrendered the floor; and I was recognized. This I submit to the decision of the Speaker. I desire to speak now, and am willing the gentleman shall have that right when I am done.

right when I am done.

I desire, Mr. Speaker, to say that many of the generalities uttered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Reagan] command my most cordial approval. But he has evinced a confusion as to facts and as to cause and effect that astonishes me. He holds up Girard and Vanderbilt, Gould, and other millionaires as illustrations of the great fortunes manufacturers make. Girard was a merchant, and I doubt whether Vanderbilt, Gould, or any one of their class ever owned a dollar of manufacturing stock in his life; and all the world knows that the only manufacturing done by the Vanderbilt family was the sailing of small vessels first and managing larger steamboats afterward, and only manufacturing done by the Vanderbilt family was the sailing of small vessels first and managing larger steamboats afterward, and after that the manufacture of watered railroad stock. They, or men of their class, never consumed by manufacturing it into fabrics a pound of the wool or cotton of the farmer or planter. None of the wool of the two and a half millions of sheep which fatten on the ranges of Texas, the owners of which come to the Committee on Ways and Means whenever the tariff is under discussion, asking that the protection to wool-growers accorded by the present tariff shall be maintained, sell any of their wool to that class of men whom the gentleman from Texas selected as types of the great manufacturers of tleman from Texas selected as types of the great manufacturers of the country. The millionaires to whom he referred are the specula-tor, the dealer in stocks and money, the men who grew suddenly wealthy by the contraction of the volume of our money and the consequent increase in the value of the unit of payment by which debtors sequent increase in the value of the unit of payment by which debtors were ruined and creditors enriched.

The gentleman says that by establishing a revenue tariff we would increase commerce and quicken industry. On these points he has read the history of his country all awry. The story of our country furnishes not one confirmation of his theory, but thousands of demonstrations of its falsity. Robert J. Walker, in 1847, gave the gentleman the remarks he has just uttered on these points. A change from the protective tariff of 1842 to a revenue tariff would, Mr. Walker as serted, make New York the money center of the world, and the United States a great commercial nation, the sails of whose ships should whiten every sea. It would enlarge the revenues of the Government while reducing exactions upon the resources of the people. That was in 1847, when, under the protective tariff of 1842, we were enjoying while reducing exactions upon the resources of the people. That was in 1847, when, under the protective tariff of 1842, we were enjoying unprecedented prosperity. It was just before we discovered the gold of California, of which in a few years we mined $1,000,000,000. During the decade that followed Mr. Walker's report, they had the potatorot in Ireland which soon spread throughout Great Britain and to the Continent. The starving people looked to us for food, and we exported in 1847 more than 100 per cent. more of farm products than ever before. Hon. Thomas Corwin, Secretary of the Treasury, in his report of 1850, called attention to the fact that our agricultural exports, owing to the failure of cross shread had in that was reached the or 1850, called attention to the fact that our agricultural exports, owing to the failure of crops abroad, had in that year reached the hitherto unimagined sum of over $68,700,000. Nor did he fail to call the attention of Congress to the fact that under Mr. Walker's revenue tariff our export of grain had fallen in 1850 to $26,050,000.

Let us look at the general result of the decade 1847 to 1857. As the gentleman said we imported more largely, he could not say we also manufactured more largely, but might have said that in the latter years of the decade was imported all the manufactured goods we ter years of the decade we imported all the manufactured goods we consumed. What was the result? In 1857 every banking institution in the country suspended specie payment. A commercial crisis of unparalleled severity and co-extensive with our country occurred. There was none of the thousand million of dollars of gold we had mined in circulation in this country. They had all been exported to pay for foreign manufactures.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Will the gentleman yield to me to ask him a question ?

Mr. KELLEY. No, sir. With this vast amount of gold our silver coin down to the last five-cent piece had also left the country. The grain with which we had fed starving Europe brought us no sterling exchange. The fires in our forges and furnaces had gone out under a revenue tariff. The looms and spindles in our manufactories stood still under a revenue tariff. And when a railroad company advertised for two hundred and fifty men to construct a street railroad in Philadelia a thousand offered thought the wages promised were but sixty. delphia a thousand offered, though the wages promised were but sixty cents a day. Among the eager applicants were skilled artists, jewelers, watch-makers, and others brought up to trades of the highest skill and greatest delicacy. So scarce had a revenue tariff made em-ployment that men of every grade rushed to avail themselves of the privilege of earning sixty cents a day at the hard labor of constructing a street railroad. These are the blessings the gentleman's revenue tariff then brought and would bring again.

He says our present tariff imposes a tax of $80,000,000 upon the people. Where? When? How? By what philosophy has he arrived at that conclusion? Does he accept the mad assumption proclaimed by the dogmatic free-traders of England that the home manufacturer superadds the duty named in the tariff law to the price of his productions? Does he make no allowance for the effect of home nis productions? Does he make no allowance for the effect of home competition upon prices? Has he closed his eyes and mind to the fact that in adequately protected industries in this country of ours, in which raw materials are so accessible, and in such variety and abundance, home competition invariably cheapens commodities while improving their quality?

On the paper question—
Mr. REAGAN rose.

Mr. REAGAN rose.

Mr. KEAGAN rose.

Mr. KELLEY. I decline to be interrupted. The time rapidly approaches when the recess will have to be taken.

I was about to refer to the duty on paper. In the course of the investigation by that much abused body, the Committee on Ways and Means, which has patiently and carefully sought instruction from all who could impart information, we examined the paper question and found that in the whole list of ingredients entering into that writed the only once that were absence on the control of the college of the c and found that in the whole list of ingredients entering into that article the only ones that were cheaper now than at any preceding period were the only ones the manufacturers of which were protected by an adequate duty, namely, paper pulp and alum. Why? Why, in view of such facts, will the gentleman assume that duties are added to the cost of domestic productions? It is never true, and we were selling in the time of the depression steel rails as low as they could be bought in England. We sold steel rails during the time of the depression as low as they could have been bought in England.

Mr. TUCKER. I understand the gentleman to say that steel rails were sold as low as they could be bought in England.

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. TUCKER. What time was that?

Mr. KELLEY. At the period of greatest depression.

Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. TUCKER.

At the period of greatest depression. Fix the date; when was it? Well, I will say the date of the extremest depres-Mr. KELLEY. sion, when the importation of foreign and the production of American rails had both ceased.

Mr. TUCKER. That was the time when no iron was sent into this country, and the fires in every furnace had died out under your high

Mr. KELLEY. The fires of the furnaces of England had died out under free trade. [Applause.] Under free trade, sir, not only had the fires gone out in British forge and furnace, but spiders wove their webs about the looms and spindles of Lancashire. We have sent a Government ship to feed people who live under free trade, and who were brought to starvation, not so much by the failure of crops as by the brought to starvation, not so much by the failure of crops as by the depression of British trade. Sixpence pays a laborer's passage from Ireland to England, but because there was no work for able-bodied men, skilled or unskilled, in free-trade England or Scotland, a short crop brought famine upon the Irish people.

Where will the gentleman look for a market for the productions of his State under a revenue tariff? Would he ship all the wool of Texas to foreign countries? Would he prefer having but one market in which to sell, that of London, to having two, that of London and that of the broad United States? The competitive markets our magnificent system of woolen and worsted manufactures creates for the wool of Texas keeps up its price and is enriching the people of every part of the Lone Star State. They know and recognize the fact, if the gentleman does not, that protection is beneficial to them in giving them the best market the world has ever furnished for such wool as Texas grows on her greatly improved stock of sheep.

the best market the world has ever furnished for such wool as Texas grows on her greatly improved stock of sheep.

Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman know that under the protective system one city in this country produces in manufactured commodities, year by year, more of commercial values than are imported into all the ports of the United States from every country on the face of the globe? Philadelphia alone produces more manufactured goods than arrive in any year through all the custom-houses of our country. What does the gentleman want to do with the market for grain and wool that is found in this busy hive of industry? Does he wish to wool that is found in this busy hive of industry? Does he wish to suspend the multifarious and prosperous workshops of that city in order to increase the importation of cheap and nasty British goods? Does he wish to quicken the wheels of industry in England and in Belgium by stopping those of the United States? Is he willing to see thousands of the mothers, wives, and daughters of America working in force in force in fact and also works not as skilled working in mine, in forge, in furnace, in glass-works, not as skilled work peo-ple, but as laborious attendants upon the artisans in such establish-ments, at twenty cents a day, as I saw women doing last summer in the industrial centers of Belgium?

Mr. HUNTON rose.

Mr. HUNTON. Fose.
Mr. KELLEY. I hope the gentleman will permit me to conclude; a few minutes more and I shall be done.
Mr. HUNTON. Will five minutes suffice the gentleman?
Mr. KELLEY. I presume so. I shall not occupy as much time as the gentleman from Texas did.
Mr. HUNTON. I was going to move that the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock, and that the gentleman could continue his remarks when this subject came up again.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman might do that by unanimous consent if he will yield now for the motion to take a come up as unfinished business until business on the Speaker's table is again gone into.

Mr. KELLEY. I do not yield for the motion to take a recess.

Mr. Speaker, agriculture depends for its prosperity upon the maintenance of the workshop and the factory, and the gentleman from Texas, who so eloquently professes to champion it on this floor, would strike it a harder blow than its enemies, if any there be, could propose. I say, and I challenge statistics to disprove it, that year by year, from the foundation of the Government to 1880, under a revenue tariff imports, instead of increasing, have, except immediately after the change from the protective policy, declined in amount and dutypaying power. Under our heaviest tariff we have annually imported the most in value, for the simple reason that a prosperous people the most in value, for the simple reason that a prosperous people gratify their desires and are able to pay for that which will gratify them, but a ruined and distressed people do not and cannot gratify their desires. They cannot supply their wants, and imports and revenues fall off apace whenever the industries of the farmer, the mechanic, and the manufacturer are prostrated by such plausible pretexts as the gentleman has presented to us to-day. Theoretically, free trade makes grand promises; practically, it serves every nation as it served us in the decade between 1847 and 1857, and as it is now serving England, who under its influence must soon cease to even hope to be, as she was for a century, the workshop of the world and the mistress

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to ask the Chair when this business will again come up if the House should now take a recess?

The SPEAKER. When the House next goes to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to modify my amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the amendment be read, as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report the same back within three weeks with provisions securing a revenue tariff in place of the present protective system, and a proper revision of the laws relating to internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The SPEAKER. There is one point of order already pending.

Mr. CONGER. I do not understand how this can come in while the other amendment is pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes this to be a modification of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTON. I move that the House, in pursuance of the order heretofore made, take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that a session of the House of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON.] The order of the House will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Hunton, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That there shall be evening sessions of this House on Wednesday and Friday of each week, commencing on Wednesday, the 21st of April, 1880; which sessions shall be devoted exclusively to the consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union of House bill No. 5541, to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia, and shall continue till the consideration of said bill is concluded."

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to-ayes 31, noes not counted.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. Field, one week, on account of important business; and To Mr. McLane, until Tuesday next. The question being put on Mr. Hunton's motion for a recess, it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be occupied this evening by the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. SIMONTON, as Speaker pro tempore.

The House accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty-seven minutes p. m.) took a recess until seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., Mr. SIMONTON in the chair as Speaker pro

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order under which the House meets this evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Hunton, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That there shall be evening sessions of this House on Wednesday and most important amendments could be mentioned now.

Friday of each week, commencing on Wednesday, April 21, 1880, which sessions shall be devoted exclusively to the consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union of House bill No. 5541, to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia, and shall continue till the consideration of said bill is concluded."

Mr. HUNTON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the House bill No. 5541; and, pending that motion, I move that all general debate upon the bill be terminated in thirty minutes.

The motion to limit general debate was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

DISTRICT MUNICIPAL CODE.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and by order of the House the business of this evening is confined to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5541) to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia. Upon this bill all general debate by order of the House has been limited to

Mr. HUNTON. I ask that by unanimous consent the first and formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Chairman, I did not propose to discuss this bill in general debate at all. But there were one or two members of the committee who desired to make some remarks in general debate; and I accordingly moved that there should be thirty minutes allowed. I do not see those gentlemen in their places, and it will probably be right I should say a few words in explanation of the bill under consideration

At the last session of this Congress a bill to revise, consolidate, and amend certain acts which provided for a municipal code for the District of Columbia was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, from which emanates the bill under consideration. The title of the bill which was referred to the committee will give the best idea of the character of the bill which we have reported to the House. It was entitled-

A bill to revise, consolidate, and amend certain acts of the late corporations of Washington and Georgetown, of the levy court of the county of Washington, and of the Legislative Assembly, the ordinances of the late board of health of the District of Columbia, certain regulations of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, made in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1878, and certain acts of Congress having relation to the municipal affairs in the District of Columbia.

The reading of that caption of the bill will show to the committee the absolute, indispensable necessity for a revision and codification of the municipal laws of the District of Columbia. As the case stands now, as gentlemen will understand from the caption of the bill which have just read, a person, to ascertain what were the municipal laws of the District of Columbia, had to refer to the acts of the late corporation of Washington and the corporation of Georgetown, and of the levy court of the county of Washington, and of the Legislative Assembly, the ordinances of the late board of health of the District of Columbia, certain regulations of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, made in pursuance of the provisions of law, and certain rete of Congress acts of Congress Persons had to go through these acts of the various governing bodies of the District of Columbia to ascertain and determine what were really the municipal laws of the District.

Congress at its last session referred this matter to the District com-missioners for codification, and when the Committee on the District of Columbia met during the recess, under the order of the House at its last session, they found before them the bill to which I have re-ferred and which was prepared by counsel employed by the District commissioners to codify all these laws so as to bring them before the committee in one body.

Mr. BLOUNT. Allow me to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] if any amendments of the laws were proposed by that codification?

codification?

Mr. HUNTON. Very few amendments were proposed by the revisers in that codification. The committee acted upon that bill so prepared, taking it as a frame-work, upon which they have put very many amendments. Those amendments will be found in the printed bill now before the Committee of the Whole for consideration, and which has been reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia as a substitute for the other bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Can the gentleman point out the changes in the existing laws for the District?

Mr. HUNTON. Legald not do it in general debate for there are

Mr. HUNTON. I could not do it in general debate, for there are Mr. HUNTON. I could not do it in general debate, for there are too many of them; and it would take perhaps an hour to do so. The necessity for the adoption of a code for the government of the District must therefore be apparent to everybody.

Mr. ATKINS. Could not the gentleman indicate some of the most important changes that are proposed?

Mr. HUNTON. I will endeavor to do so.

Mr. BLOUNT. You can do so at all events when the bill is read by paragraphs.

Mr. HUNTON. So far as the mere municipal regulations of the District are concerned, throwing out of consideration the tax question, which was the most important matter that came before the committee, we were governed very much by the recommendations of the commissioners and their subordinates. For instance, when we came to consider the ordinances in regard to health we had before us the health officers of the District, and by aid of information from them we were enabled to draft a code of laws for the government of the health department of this District. I will say here that there are health department of this District. I will say here that there are very few changes, none of any magnitude, in regard to the health ordinances which have been in force in this District for some time past. We have just passed to-day a bill to make valid those very ordinances which have been incorporated in this bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. And you do not change them?

Mr. HUNTON. We make very few changes, scarcely any I think; if any, they are unimportant. On the subject of taxation the committee were not entirely harmonious. They adopted a law on the subject of taxation resembling in principle the present law under which taxes are levied and collected in the District.

One main defect in the present tax law relates to the collection of the taxes. The great trouble in this District has been that persons would not pay their taxes, and according to the provisions of the ex-would not pay their taxes, and according to the provisions of the existing law you could not force them to do so. And I will tell you isting law you could not force them to do so. And I will tell you why. All you could do under existing law was to offer for sale the real property which was delinquent for taxes. In the beginning, when such property was put up for sale, persons would buy it; but when they went into court to enforce their rights as purchasers of that property, they were met invariably by decision of the court invalidating all tax titles. It very soon came to pass that private persons would not purchase property at tax sales, and the District itself had to buy in all the property that was sold for taxes.

The result has been that any one who did not choose to pay taxes

The result has been that any one who did not choose to pay taxes on real estate could not be forced to pay them. We all know that was a great defect in the law. The provisions of this bill upon that subject cures that evil. Some think we have provided too harsh a remedy. That is for this Committee of the Whole to determine. But if this bill is adopted a man must pay his taxes on his real estate But if this bill is adopted a man must pay his taxes on his real estate or else he will have it sold and possession of it given to the purchaser, with the utmost liberality in the way of the right of redemption. If the person fails to redeem, his land is sold, and the purchaser has the right to come in and exercise all the rights of a landlord and get possession of the property, and his tax title is conclusive evidence of the regularity of the proceedings at the tax sale.

Mr. PRICE. While upon that point let me ask the gentleman if provision is made to require that all personal property shall be exhausted before the real estate is sold?

Mr. HUNTON. I was coming to that. In addition to that provision, as the law now stands a man may have a million dollars' worth ion, as the law now stands a man may have a million dollars' worth of personal property and ten thousand dollars' worth of real estate, but you must make the tax on the real estate out of the real property, although he has a million dollars' worth of personal property, because under existing laws you must look to the realty for taxes on

Now, this code provides—and we have passed a similar law here this session—that personal property is to be held responsible for all taxes due by any tax-payer for his real or personal property. Therefore, when this provision shall be adopted there will be no difficulty in collecting the taxes assessed in the District of Columbia where the persons are able to pay the taxes.

There are differences among the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia in regard to the mode of levying the taxes. The majority of the committee decided to tax all property, whether visible or invisible; that is, to tax all bonds and all personal property. The minority of the committee were in favor of yielding to the desire of citizens of the District to release the tax upon the invisible property and make it up on the visible property, mostly in the shape of licenses. That view of the question did not prevail before the committee, and the bill now before the Committee of the Whole is similar in principle to the law in force to-day by which all property, except cortain ple to the law in force to-day by which all property, except certain exempted property, is liable to be taxed.

There was a great deal of discussion in the committee on the sub-

There was a great deal of discussion in the committee on the subject of exemption; what property should be exempted from taxation and what should not be. Of course all public property belonging either to the Federal or to the District government is exempted from taxation. Then came the question as to what should be exempted of property belonging to religious and eleemosynary institutions. The committee finally decided that they would recommend the exemption of church property used for church purposes and the exemption of church property used for church purposes. emption of church property used for church purposes, and property used for the endowment and support of free schools, and the property of purely charitable institutions, and exempt none other. That would leave all church property not used for purposes of actual worship, and the property of schools of a private character, schools taught for pay, to be taxed; and the property of Odd Fellows, and Masonic institutions, and institutions of that class, to be taxed like the property of individuals. The committee thought it was right that that should be done

It is proposed to tax colleges for this reason: if a person comes here to the city of Washington and starts a school, in the opinion of the majority of the committee there is no more reason why he should be exempted from taxation than for a person who comes here and starts a merchandising business; for the one may be a profitable business as well as the other, and one is equally liable with the other not to

Mr. BLOUNT. You spoke of taxing colleges; I suppose you mean

Mr. BLOUNT. I would inquire what school property heretofore exempted from taxation will become liable to taxation under this

Mr. HUNTON. None that I know of. Well, let me see; I am not prepared to say that I am exactly advised on that subject. I have been informed that the colleges in this District have not heretofore been taxed—Georgetown College and the Columbian College.

Mr. BLOUNT. Are those the only two? I ask simply for informa-

Mr. HUNTON. I do not recollect any others.
Mr. BLOUNT. I know that Georgetown College buildings have

Mr. BLOUNT. I know that Georgetown College buildings have heretofore been exempt from taxation.

Mr. HUNTON. The idea was that those colleges ought to be exempt because they are institutions of learning. But they are not free institutions; any one going there has to pay fees. I do not see any more reason for exempting the property of those institutions from taxation than the property of any person who may come here and that the property of th start a private school on his own account in the District of Columbia; and there are very many such.

Mr. BARBER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that a majority of the committee was in favor of a tax on knowledge?

Mr. HUNTON. I do not think the gentleman could have so understood me

Mr. BLOUNT. A tax on college property.

Mr. HUNTON. When a man comes here and starts a school, no matter upon what scale, and charges tuition to the pupils, there is no pretense that he should be exempt from taxation. Now, it seems to me that he and a college stand upon the same footing if they both charge tuition alike.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would inquire whether or not under this bill Howard University would be liable to taxation?

Mr. HUNTON. I think it would be, unless the property belonged

Mr. BLOUNT. The Government gave it to the institution.
Mr. HUNTON. If it is not the property of the Government, then I think it would be liable to taxation with the others. Free-school think it would be liable to taxation with the others. Free-school property, wherever tuition is free, is not touched.

Mr. BLOUNT. Howard University is not a free school.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Does this bill make any change in regard to the commissioners of the District of Columbia?

Mr. HUNTON. I would say in answer to my friend from North Carolina [Mr. DAVIS] that this bill proposes to repeal all laws in regard to the municipal government of the District of Columbia, except the organic act, as we call it, which was passed in April, 1878, providing for a special form of government.

Mr. BARBER. What is the limit of taxation which has been adopted?

adopted? Mr. NEAL.

Mr. NEAL. The organic law fixes that.
Mr. HUNTON. I would ask my colleague from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] to state what that is.

Mr. NEAL. Not exceeding $1.50 on $100.

Mr. ATKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman spoke a moment ago of the Committee on the District of Columbia not being unanimous on the subject of taxation. I would ask the gentleman if the committee was unanimous on all the other subjects contained in this bill?

Mr. HUNTON. I cannot say unanimous, but practically so. There was very little difference of opinion in the committee except upon this question of taxation and the collection of taxes.

I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Neal,] my colleague on the committee.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on the District of Co-lumbia found itself confronted with House bill No. 5746, introduced into the Forty-sixth Congress by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn] and reintroduced into the Forty-sixth Congress without amendment and referred to the same committee. At the extra session Congress authorized the sub-committee on the District of Columbia to sit during the vacation and codify this act. That sub-committee, to sit during the vacation and codify this act. That sub-committee, consisting of the chairman, the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. HENKLE,] and myself, met here in November and were engaged in that work every day until after the Christmas holidays. The result was embodied in House bill No. 3991. The amendments made were to change the phraseology of a good many laws and ordinances, making them more explicit and more lawyer-like in terms.

We also omitted some laws absolutely. For instance, there is an more lawyer-like in terms.

We also omitted some laws absolutely. For instance, there is an act here, which has been in existence for many years, providing for the duties of chimney-sweeps, on which I did not suppose any law existed in the United States anywhere. We left that out entirely, believing the day had gone by for chimney-sweeps.

A great many ordinances had been crudely drawn, were obscure in meaning, and gave rise to lawsuits in the various courts of the District. We changed the phraseology of those acts in such way that even individuals who might know nothing of law would have no trouble in ascertaining what their rights and duties were and courts trouble in ascertaining what their rights and duties were and courts no trouble in construing them in cases where individuals failed to put the proper construction upon them. These are the principal changes of what you may call the ordinances of this city.

We found the tax law in a very crude condition. The principle of taxation embodied in the law as it now stands is that property of all sorts shall be taxed at its true valuation in money, whether that property consists of real extra of horses carriages promises of real extra of horses carriages promises of real extra of horses carriages. erty consists of real estate, of horses, carriages, promisory notes, mortgages on bank stock, or stock of corporations. Under that law the supreme court of the District of Columbia has declared that national banks were not entitled to be taxed in any shape whatever; and consequently all the capital invested in national banks has escaped

We found in addition to that the machinery for the collection of taxes was so imperfect in its character that very few persons cared to pay taxes. Here is a book of several hundred pages of advertisements of delinquent taxes, and I doubt whether the whole State of Ohio, in all its counties, has as many tax delinquents as this District. When people are talked to about paying taxes they snap their fingers in the face of the collectors and tell them to collect them if they can. There is no law distraining property in this District for payment of taxes, and such high officials as judges of the courts, who administer the laws and ought to be willing to obey the laws, are delinquent many thousands of dollars.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is there no process here to collect the present tax assessed upon real estate !

Mr. NEÂL. There is what is called a process, but it is so inefficient in its character that it utterly fails to accomplish the purpose for which it was intended.

Mr. BRIGGS. On account of its lax execution perhaps rather than any defect in the law.

Mr. NEAL. No; there is a defect in the law, as the machinery provided is not sufficient; and perhaps, too, it may be the officers having this matter in charge have not been as diligent as they might have been, one of the evils of an appointive government being it has nothing behind it to spur it on to the prompt discharge of its duties.

We found the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company had not paid any tax for a good many years and was litigating the matter in the courts. The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, notwithstanding its charter authorizes the taxation of its property as other property is taxed, occupies $200,000 worth of the property of the United States and pays no tax whatever upon it; nor does it pay any rent for the occupancy of that property.

the occupancy of that property.

Mr. BRIGGS. What corporation is that?

Mr. NEAL. The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company. A reasonable valuation of the property it occupies, on which it has paid no tax, and for which it has paid no rent, is $200,000. It will be seen there was imperative necessity for amendment of the law, so as to put upon the tax-duplicate the property of individuals who were enjoying the protection of the law. The property of the banks, which were also being protected by the authorities here, and the property of railroad companies, we thought should bear a just proportion of the burden of taxation.

Mr. SAMFORD. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. NEAL. Yes.
Mr. SAMFORD. By what authority does this railroad company occupy property of the United States to the extent stated?
Mr. NEAL. By the act under which it was incorporated. That act provided its property might be taxed but did not provide for its taxation, and the general tax law made no provision for it, the consequence of which was it has escaped taxation during the whole period of time in which it has occupied the property of the United riod of time in which it has occupied the property of the United States

Mr. WILSON. They have avoided taxation? Mr. NEAL. Escaped it is a better term. Mr. WILSON. The property is not theirs?

Mr. NEAL. It is not, but they have the beneficial use of it. We provide in this act all the railroad companies occupying public grounds, or which have the use of the streets and avenues of the city, shall pay taxes upon those grounds at a fair valuation, and shall be taxed for the use of the streets at whatever it may be considered worth by officers having the enforcement of the law.

Now, as an illustration of the character of this law and the manner in which it has been enforced heretofore, a gentleman told me that the tax-assessor came to his house and stuck a notice of tax under his door, but he never paid any attention to it, and was never called upon to pay any tax. I could show many other illustrations which point to the necessity of some amendment in the law in that re-

Now, this bill is denounced by some persons here in the District, who would be glad to escape taxation, as an inquisitorial measure in its character, or, as some of them call it, a Draconic law. It is innot do their duty as good citizens. Where such a class of people is to be dealt with the laws are and should be Draconic and inquisitorial in their character, because such are the only laws which can deal properly with them. Such laws do not bear harshly upon good citizens. All laws bear harshly upon bad citizens.

I do not often find anything to commend in the State of Louisiana, but I find recently that a committee introduced a tax bill into the Legislature of that State which contains the following words:

The committee say it is not equal or uniform or just to tax the willing and obedient citizens and allow others to go free. Objections are made to this act "that it is too stringent and severe, but the worst that can happen to any man is to pay his taxes, and that he ought to do or ought to be made to do. The citizen who withholds from his government his just share of contributions levied equally upon all for its support is not entitled to its indulgence. Your committee distinctly announces that the present act is intended to secure the actual collection of taxes voluntarily from the willing and by compulsion from the unwilling, and no bill having a different intention could receive the approval of its members.

That is precisely the object of this committee. We propose, if it is That is precisely the object of this committee. We propose, if it is possible, to compel the collection of taxes willingly if the parties are disposed to do their duty as good citizens, and by compulsion if they are unwilling to do their duty and if they are endeavoring to shirk or shake off the burden of their responsibilities.

The law as it now stands in regard to the exemption of property I will ask the Clerk to read, and I desire that the members of the House will listen to this in order that they may see the change that we propose to make in reference to the exemption of property. The Clerk read as follows:

PROPERTY EXEMPT FROM TAXATION.

SEC. 51. The property exempt from taxation shall be the following and no other, namely: First, the Corocran Art Building, free public library buildings, churches, the Soldiers' Home, and grounds actually occupied by such buildings; secondly, houses for the reformation of offenders, alms-houses, buildings belonging to institutions of purely public charity, conducted without charge to inmates, profits, or income; cemeteries dedicated and used solely for burial purposes and without private income or profit; but if any portion of any such building, house, grounds, or cemetery so in terms excepted is larger than is absolutely required and actually used for its legitimate purpose and none other, or is used to secure a rent or income, or for any business purpose, such portion of the same, or a sum equal in value to such portion, shall be taxed against the owner of said building or grounds; thirdly, such property as is now exempt from taxation by laws of the United States; fourthly, personal property not in said District and taxed elsewhere, but owned by persons having a residence for any purpose in said District; fifthly, personal property not held for sale and not over the value of $500.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think this is a very important measure, and we are all anxious to hear some more about it. I hope the time will be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole cannot extend the time for debate after it has been limited by order of the House, even by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then if it cannot be done even by unanimous consent, I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. It will not.
Mr. HAWLEY. Then I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SIMONTON, as Speaker protempore, having taken the chair, the chairman of the Committee of the Whole reported that the committee having had under consideration the bill of the House No. 5541, to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia, had come to no resolution thereou.

The motion to extend the time of debate thirty minutes was agreed

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.
The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. Burrows in the chair.

Mr. NEAL. The sub-committee reported in favor of making some considerable changes in reference to the exemption of property in the District. For instance, we cut down the exemption from $500 to $200. That exemption of $500 amounted practically to $1,000 in its operation. The experience of Ohio, which had fixed the limit at $200, was so satisfactory that the Legislature, at the succeeding term, reduced the limit to $50, at which it has remained for the last twenty years, and has proved to be entirely satisfactory.

The sub-committee favored the following exemptions from taxation, which the committee subsequently modified, as will be seen by reference to the pending bill:

First. The property of the United States and of the District.

Second. The Corcoran Art Gallery, with the works of art contained therein, and all real estate now owned by the trustees of said institution.

Third. The Soldiers' Home property.

Fourth. All church buildings, held and used exclusively for religious worship, and the books and furniture therein.

We did not exempt the real estate of the various religious denominations, but the buildings, for it is a notorious fact that in this city a large amount of real estate is held by churches more than is necessary for the full and free enjoyment of the religious exercises of the denominations to which they belong.

Fifth. All chartered institutions of learning, and all buildings and personal property held and used exclusively for the purposes of such institutions, and all lands now owned by such institutions of learning not used with a view to profit: Provided, That all property, real and personal, the rents, issues, and profits of which are used exclusively for the endowment or support of institutions for the free education of youth, shall be exempt from taxation as long as such property, or the rents, issues, profits, and income thereof shall be used and applied exclusively for the support of free education.

Mr. PRICE. I understand the gentleman to say in regard to church property that only the building is exempted. If he does not exempt the ground that the building stands on, in case the ground is sold, what would become of the building?

Mr. NEAL. The bill of the committee as reported to the House, on

Mr. NEAL. The bill of the committee as reported to the House, on page 39, exempts-

And provides that-

All property, real and personal, the rents, issues, and profits of which are used exclusively for the endowment or support of institutions for the free education of youth, shall be exempt from taxation as long as such property, or the rents, issues, profits, and income thereof shall be used and applied exclusively for the support of free education.

The committee will notice the difference in the report of the subcommittee. We propose to exempt all chartered institutions of learn-ring, whether education is free or not. The report of the committee exempts only such property as is used for the free education of youth.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say one word in regard to the machinery we have provided. There were two modes of taxation proposed. One was to exempt from taxation what is known as the invisible personal property and to adopt in lieu thereof a license system; in other words, a system which, in the opinion of the majority of the committee, taxed labor and business enterprise and excluded from taxation the property of the wealthy people of the District who live upon the income derived from mortgages, promissory notes, and other evidences of indebtedness. This did not seem to a majority of the sub-committee to be right, and we refused to adopt it. We do, however, maintain the present system of taxation as it is now in vogue in this District and have added to it licenses upon such trades and occupations as require the surveillance of the police; the sale of and occupations as require the surveillance of the police; the sale of intoxicating liquors, hack-stands, theaters, and other occupations and business employments which, as I have said, require to a certain extent the surveillance of the police. And we have left perfectly free all occupations, trades, and business of every character which are legitimate and praiseworthy in their purposes and objects. That is one of the questions upon which the committee and the House may be called upon to pass. I trust that the report of the committee in this respect at any rate will be adopted, as it seems to me the only correct mode of taxation is to tax all property in every shape and form in which you may discover it, whether it be visible or invisible.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question !

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to ask the gentleman whether it is not the policy in all the States to exempt college property of every kind from taxation; I mean the real estate of institutions which is used exclusively for educational purposes?

Mr. NEAL. I cannot answer.
Mr. WILSON. I will answer for the gentleman. It is.
Mr. NEAL. I cannot answer whether it is or is not. I know in the State of Ohio that is the policy.
Mr. McMILLIN. I will answer that it is not.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will answer that it is not.
Mr. NEAL. And the report of the sub-committee is substantially the law of the State of Ohio on that subject. There we exempt from taxation all chartered institutions of learning, whether tuition fees

Mr. SPRINGER. I know that is the policy in Illinois. All institutions of learning are exempt from taxation; and as these institutions are not run for profit, but for educational purposes, and the charges are merely to pay the expenses, I do not see why we should subject them to taxation.

Mr. WILSON. That is right.

Mr. SPRINGER. If it was a private enterprise to make money out of, it would be a different thing; but when the charges are only for the purpose of meeting the necessary current expenses of the institution, and they are always, so far as my experience go, in debt and struggling for existence, I think we should exempt them from

The views which the gentleman from Illinois has expressed were the views of the sub-committee as I have read them for the most part the law of Maryland. It is the modern system of taxation, and it is the honest system of taxation.

In regard to the machinery, we provide that the land shall be appraised once, I believe, in five years—perhaps we changed it to three years—once in three years or in five years.

The District of Columbia is to be divided into convenient collec-The District of Columbia is to be divided into convenient collection districts. Assessors are to be appointed, who shall appraise all property at its real value in money. We then provide for a board of equalization. This board may increase the valuation, but cannot reduce it in the aggregate. They may take off in one district and put on in another. They may adjust and equalize, but not reduce.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. The assessment is to be made once in three years?

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Is there any provision for modifying the assessment in view of the erection or destruction of improvements in the interim? Mr. NEAL. Wherever-houses are built in the interim the assessor of personal property is to value those houses, and wherever there is destruction of property he deducts from the real estate an amount equal to the value of the buildings destroyed.

Mr. HERBERT. In speaking of the board of equalization, did the gentleman mean to say that if property should be assessed by the assessor too low the board may increase the assessment, but if property happens to be assessed too high the board has no power to reduce the valuation?

Mr. NEAL. The board can take off in one district a certain percentage and put it on in another, but they cannot reduce the grand aggregate of assessment. The reason of that is this: if certain property should be appraised a little too high, and all the other property in the district should be appraised at the same rate, it would reduce the rate of taxation, thereby lessening the burden in that respect perhaps as much as it would be increased by the excessive assess-

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman is speaking of the rates of taxation, not of the assessment of any particular piece of property.

Mr. NEAL. I am speaking of the general assessment in the aggregate. Then we provide that these taxes shall be paid by a certain time of the year; and in default of payment a penalty is to be added. It is not necessary for me to go into details on this point, because the Committee of the Whole will understand those when the bill is read Committee of the Whole will understand those when the bill is read section by section. Then we provide that if the taxes are not paid within a specified time the property shall be advertised as delinquent and shall be sold as such. If any property should not be sold for enough to pay the taxes, it is to be returned unsold and to be placed upon what is known as the forfeited-land list. Within two years the owner may come in and redeem his property by paying the taxes, penalties, and interest. If this be not done the land is to be sold at a forfeited-land sale, and the party forfeits his property forever.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has the committee had before it the question of providing that no land shall be sold for the non-payment of faves until providing that no land shall be sold for the non-payment of taxes until a judgment has been obtained in a court of record for the amount of

Mr. NEAL. The committee considered all those questions; but we unanimously repudiated any provision of that kind. The power to collect taxes must be a good deal more summary than any proceeding in court. Ample provision is made for the correction of assessments which may be too high, for the equalizing of assessments. When the time allowed for this has passed, there is no power to change the assessment. The taxes go upon the duplicate for collection. If the party fails to pay them, they become delinquent and the property is sold. He then has two years within which to redeem it. If not redeemed within two years it is again offered at a forfeited-land sale; deemed within two years it is again offered at a forfeited-land sale; and when it has been thus sold the party forfeits his property forever.

Mr. BARBER. What notice is given to non-residents?

Mr. NEAL. We give no notice to non-residents except the general notice given to everybody.

Mr. BAKER. A delinquent list is published?

Mr. NEAL. It is advertised that a delinquent list is ready for deligrery to envlody who will call for it. Non-residents know that their livery to anybody who will call for it. Non-residents know that their property is subject to taxation. They are bound to know that if they allow it to be sold, then, unless they come within some of the exemptions we have provided, they fare just as residents do—no better and

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to make a sugge tion? In the State of Illinois we have provided by constitutional provision that no land shall be sold for the non-payment of taxes provision that no land shall be sold for the non-payment of taxes until a judgment has been obtained against the party in a court of record; and that provision of our constitution, so far from working any detriment to the State government in the collection of taxes, has been shown to be in the interest of justice, while it does not interfere with the prompt and efficient collection of taxes.

Mr. NEAL. I have only a few minutes remaining. The gentleman can discuss those propositions under the five-minute rule.

Then, Mr. Chairman, we have provided that no person shall impeach a tax title unless he makes tender of the taxes which he admits from its report. As I have stated we have adopted the policy of taxing all property in whatever shape it may be found, and that, so far as I have examined, is the law of all the Western States. It is the law also of Georgia, of New Hampshire, and of Virginia, and it is fault of payment of taxes we make the property pay the penalty. In addition to this we have provided exactly what this House by an almost unanimous vote a month ago adopted and, so far as this House is concerned, enacted into law, that personal property may be distrained for the collection of taxes upon real estate.

Mr. BAKER. Does this code permit the advertisement of real estate for sale until an effort is made to collect the taxes by distraint?

Mr. NEAL. No, there must be effort made to collect taxes by dis-traint upon personal property.

We provide that all personal property shall be taxed at its true value in money, except that there is an exemption to the amount of $200.

We provide for the taxation of national banks in the very words of the law by which the national banks were incorporated-the capital stock of the national banks in the hands of the holders thereof.

Mr. SAMFORD. Not the corporation?

Mr. NEAL. Not the corporation, but the stock in the hands of the owners as the national-bank act provides. There will be no trouble in making those institutions pay their full share if officers of the District do their duty.

We provide for the assessment of personal property annually. We provide for the assessment of personal property annually. We provide for the equalization of assessments by a proper board so that no injustice can be done to any individual if he is diligent in watching and caring for his rights.

Mr. COBB. What means do you provide for the ascertainment of the value of personal property

the value of personal property?

Mr. NEAL. It is to be appraised by sworn assessors. In the first instance the individual himself is required to make out, under oath, a list of his property and put a valuation upon it. If the valuation is honest, that is received by the assessor as true, and no controversy is made about it. If he refuses to assess his property, then it is the duty of the assessor to find out by other means in his power what property the man possesses, and make return for him. In addition the board of equalization has the right to call him before them and put him on eath in regard to his property where he refuses to make assess. him on oath in regard to his property where he refuses to make assessment. It is this provision which is denounced by some wealthy persons in this city as being Draconian, too inquisitorial for gentlemen.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. What penalty do you provide?

Mr. NEAL. We put a penalty of 50 per cent. where the party refuses to make assessment. In some States it is 200 per cent., but we thought we would be moderate and put it only at 50 per cent.

In addition to that we provide for a tax on collateral successions. Persons who as collateral heirs inherit an estate pay a certain tax, which the committee will discover as the bill is being discussed section by section. We thought this only right that the man who is so fortunate as to be made heir of property could afford to pay a pretty liberal tax for the privilege of inheriting that property.

I think what I have stated gives a clear and succinct idea of the provisions of this act. I trust the committee will give it careful consideration; and I believe the more they consider it the more it will commend itself in its general features to their approval.

I will say this: that if the bill becomes a law and is honestly and fairly enforced, it will enable the commissioners of the District to reduce in another year the rate of taxation from one dollar and a half reduce in another year the rate of taxation from one dollar and a half to one dollar and a quarter, and, perhaps, one dollar, and still furnish as much money as is collected under the present tax law.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Will the gentleman inform the committee how the license taxes are equalized?

Mr. NEAL. There is no equalization of licenses. As an illustration, we provide that beer saloons shall pay $100, which is the present license tax.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Without reference to the amount of busines

of business.

Mr. NEAL. Yes; without reference to the amount of business. If they do not make enough to pay the license, they will be frozen out, starved out. We provide that saloons which sell distilled liquors shall pay $250 license, increasing the tax from $100, which it is now, to $250. We did this because we thought it would be a good plan to squeeze out a lot of these small irresponsible concerns and place this business in the hands of men who will have some interest in conducting it with some regard to the decencies and proprieties of public life.

Mr. BRIGGS. Has the committee taken into consideration the prohibition of the selection in the prohibition of the selection in the District instead of licensing it?

hibition of the sale of liquor in the District instead of licensing it? Mr. NEAL. The committee did not take that into consideration.

Speaking for myself and others with whom I have conversed, we concluded the sale of liquors, whether an evil or not, was an absolutely unavoidable thing in the city of Washington.

Mr. PRICE. What! [Great laughter.]

Mr. NEAL. It cannot be suppressed, and the only correct means of deligible with the city of the converse of the liquority of the converse of the converse of the liquority of the liquority of the liquority of the converse of the liquority of the liquority of dealing with it is for us to put it under the surveillance of police by means of a license tax, so unauthorized concerns can be closed up by the police, and we give them that authority.

Mr. PRICE. It is hardly worth while to discuss that just here.

Mr. NEAL. No.

Mr. PRICE. I only wish to ask the gentleman a question. Can he

Mr. PRICE. I only wish to ask the gentleman a question. Can he tell me any reason why it can be suppressed in one place and not in another. Is it because Congress meets here? [Laughter.]

Mr. NEAL. Congress does not meet in Cincinnati, or New York, or in your own town.

Mr. PRICE. I can point, in my State, to towns where you cannot buy a glass of lager.

Mr. NEAL. But you can in Burlington.
Mr. PRICE. But I do not live in Burlington. [Laughter,]
Mr. NEAL. You can find little country villages where the sale of liquors is suppressed, but you cannot find any city in the United States or anywhere in the world where it is suppressed. When the State of Massachusetts had a prohibitory law the sale of liquor was about as open and notorious in Boston as it is now in Washington.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. The authentic statistics of that State do not confirm the statement.

Mr. NEAL. Here we have provided that the police shall have ample authority to close up unlicensed establishments, and no man ample authority to close up unlicensed establishments, and no man can open a liquor store unless he gets the consent of the property-holders in his vicinity. We have thrown around this traffic such restrictions as we believe will be beneficial and prevent unlicensed establishments from operating.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question, leaving the liquor question now, in reference to taxation. I see that after the assessor has made an assessment upon property, there is to be a heard of equalization to whom I suppose something there is to be a board of equalization, to whom I suppose something in the nature of an appeal is to be made from what may be claimed to be excessive assessments. On page 44 of the bill it appears that they have the power to raise or reduce the value put upon property by the assessors.

Mr. NEAL. They cannot reduce the aggregate.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is what I want to get at. Why should they

Mr. ROBINSON. That is what I want to get at. Why should they not reduce the aggregate if they have the power to reduce the assessments if the aggregate amount is too large?

Mr. NEAL. It cannot be too large practically under the operation of this law, and if you allow them to reduce the aggregate the consequence would be that they would be besieged by every property-holder to reduce the value of his property, and unless they had nerves of iron they could hardly be expected to resist the appeals that would be made to them. Therefore it is not intended that they should have the power to reduce the aggregate.

the power to reduce the aggregate.

Mr. ROBINSON. But I understood the aggregate of valuation of property to be the different sums and values set upon different pieces of property in a certain square, say for instance lots to be valued at five, ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand dollars, &c. The aggregate would represent the total value in that square.

Mr. HUNTON. That would apply to the whole District—
Mr. ROBINSON. Well, if I am asking questions that will illuminate the darkness of my own mind it may perhaps have the effect of removing some doubts in the minds of other gentlemen as to the operation of this proposed law. It seems, as I was about to say, that if this board has the right to revise the assessments, it can necessarily reduce the aggregate, and, if so, that it may reduce a piece of property five, ten, or fifteen thousand dollars, and then levy upon the remainder of it.

mainder of it.

Mr. NEAL. In response to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I would only say that I think when we come to examine this law before the committee, section by section, he will be very well satisfied with it, and I will then be able to explain to him the point that he now objects to. How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes remaining. Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will yield that time to me. Mr. NEAL. I have no objection to doing so.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to an amendment I shall offer at the proper time, which will be substantially the law of the State of Illinois upon the subject of the sale of real estate for the non-payment of taxes. That proof the sale of real estate for the non-payment of taxes. That provision of the constitution of Illinois was adopted by one of the ablest constitutional conventions that ever assembled in that State. After a full and fair discussion of all the questions entering into the sale of real estate for the non-payment of taxes, the best lawyers of our State determined that under the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, a law depriving or attempting to deprive a citizen of his freehold, unless by due process of law, which all lawyers understand to be a trial in pursuance of the common law in a court of record, was unconstitutional.

Mr. HUNTON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if this bill provides differently?

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand from the reading of this bill that there is no provision whatever for a judgment of a court of record before the sale.

before the sale.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg pardon, where a person gets a deed for a tax title he has to bring his suit for possession of the property unless the former owner chooses to give it up.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman evidently does not understand me. I spoke of the sale of an estate for non-payment of taxes. Now, I say that under the proposed law there is no provision for requiring a judgment from a court of record before the property can be sold for delinquent taxes, but as I understand it the collector sells that property when it becomes delinquent and by virtue of that sale divests the owner of his freehold without giving the party an opportunity of a decision of a court of record.

Mr. ROBINSON. Do I understand the gentleman to say before the delinquent tax can be collected by the law of the State of Illinois there must be a judgment of a court of record to enable the collector to take possession and sell ?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the law of Illinois. Mr. ROBINSON. Is that the law of any other State in the Union, that before the property can be sold there must be a judgment of a court of record? Mr. SPRINGER.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know that it is, but—
Mr. HORR. Is there any other State than the State of Illinois that has such a law?

Mr. SPRINGER. I am not able to answer that question, as I have mr. SPRINGER. I am not able to answer that question, as I have not examined, but I have no doubt it exists in other States, and it ought to exist in all of them.

Mr. BAKER. Does it not give rise to endless confusion in attempting to carry it into effect?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir.

Mr. BAKER. Are not the Chicago papers annually filled with notices of litigation in reference to these sales for taxes?

Mr. SPRINGER. We have all of our litigation before the preparate

Mr. SPRINGER. We have all of our litigation before the property

Mr. SPRINGER. We have an or our heighton before the property can be sold for taxes, not afterward.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I rise to a point of order. There is no question, as I understand it, pending before the committee; and we would like to have an opportunity of discussing the bill now pending.

Mr. SPRINGER.

I only want to give notice that I will introduce the amendment to which I have referred at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the bill by sections for amendment

Mr. HUNTON. I do not suppose that the Committee of the Whole desire to hear the formal parts of this bill, which were adopted unanimously by the Committee on the District of Columbia; and I think it would save time for the committee to rise and the House to authorize the Committee of the Whole to dispense with the reading of such parts of the bill as the committee shall think unnecessary to be read.

Mr. BRIGGS. I think the proper course would be to read all the sections

Mr. HUNTON. Very well; I will not press the motion.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill by sections for amendment. The third section was read, as follows:

SEC. 3. All words and phrases shall be construed and understood according to the common and approved usage of the language; but technical words and phrases, and such others as may have acquired a peculiar and appropriate meaning in the law, shall be construed and understood according to such peculiar and appropriate

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the committee will not think me hypercritical if I suggest that we strike out that section entirely for the purpose simply of shortening the bill. No court in the world could help

All words and phrases shall be construed and understood according to the common and approved usage of the language, &c.

For the same reason I think sections 7, 8, and 9 might also be struck out. They would simply encumber the statute-book. I have a great respect for the work as a whole, but with the view of simplifying it somewhat I move to strike out this third section.

Mr. NEAL. That section does no harm.
Mr. HAWLEY. It cumbers the act.
Mr. PRESCOTT. Does the gentleman from Ohio think it does any good ?

Mr. NEAL. Yes; I think it does good.

Mr. HUNTON. I believe such a canon of construction is usually placed in codes such as this, that words shall be construed according to common usage except where they have a technical meaning.

Mr. HAWLEY. I withdraw the motion to strike out.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the sixteenth section, as follows:

SEC. 16. Every office shall become vacant on the happening of either of the following events before the expiration of the term of such office:

First. The death of the incumbent;
Second. His resignation;

Second. His resignation;
Third. His removal;
Fourth. His conviction of any infamous crime, or of any offense involving a violation of his official oath;
Fifth. His refusal or neglect to take his oath of office, or to give or renew his official bond, or to deposit such oath or bond within the time prescribed by law;
Sixth. The decision of a competent tribunal declaring void his appointment or election.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to ask whether the words "his removal, being the third event specified, are to be construed as meaning his removal from the District by a change of residence, or whether they mean his removal from the office for any cause which would disqualify him.

Mr. HUNTON. The meaning is removal from the District.
Mr. ROBINSON. Would it not be well to insert those words?
Mr. HUNTON. I have no objection.
Mr. ROBINSON. I move, then, to add after the word "removal" Mr. HUNTON.

the words "from the District."

The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following

SEC. 28. Every official bond, executed by any officer pursuant to law, shall be deemed and taken to be in force, and obligatory upon the principal and sureties therein, for any and all breaches of the condition or conditions thereof, committed during the time such officer shall continue to discharge any of the duties, or hold

Mr. HUNTON. It has been suggested to me that in line 5 of this section, after the word "officer," the words "or his deputies" should be inserted. I think it would be right to insert those words, and I move that amendment.

Mr. BAKER. I suggest that the words proposed to be added should be inserted in line 4, after the word "thereof;" so that it will read:

For any and all breaches of the condition or conditions thereof by such officer or his deputies, committed during the time, &c.

Mr. NEW. I had risen to make the same suggestion.

Mr. HUNTON. I will accept that amendment in lieu of mine.

The question being put on the amendment to insert the words "by such officer or his deputies" after the word "thereof," it was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 39. Unless otherwise expressly provided, there shall be at least two sureties upon the official bond of every officer.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move to strike out the last word, that I may ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. In section 33 it is provided that "whenever the sureties in an official bond, or any one of them, shall remove from this District," &c., the officers shall be required to execute an additional official bond, but I do not discover any provision that the sureties shall in the first instance be residents of the District; and anticipating somewhat the reading of the bill by the Clerk, and turning to the fourteenth page—and I may say I am obliged to make the examination hurriedly because I have not seen the bill till this evening—I notice that the collector of taxes before entering upon his duties is required to execute a bond in the sum of $100,000, with sufficient surety or sureties. Nothing is said there about those sureties being residents of the District.

Mr. HUNTON. The reason for that not being stated is that as the state is been about the sureties being residents.

sureties have to be approved by the commissioners that is left for the commissioners to determine.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest to the gentleman the question whether it is wise to leave to the commissioners the decision whether the sureties in the first instance should be residents in the District; and whether it is wise in any case to take sureties who reside out of the District. I only offer this as a suggestion. I have no knowledge on

Mr. HENKLE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that if he wishes to make an amendment of that character he should make it general, so that it shall apply to all sureties where officers are required to give bonds.

Mr. ROBINSON. If deemed advisable, such a provision could be inserted in this thirty-ninth section.

Mr. HUNTON. The words can be added at the end of the section, who shall reside in the District of Columbia."
Mr. ROBINSON. I offer the following amendment:

At the end of section 39 add these words : "All sureties upon official bonds shall be residents of the District."

Mr. SIMONTON. I think it would not be improper, before the word "sureties," in the second line of the section, to insert the words "good and sufficient;" so that it will read: "two good and sufficient sure-

Mr. NEAL. The officer approving the bond would see to that.
Mr. HUNTON. I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts to modify his amendment by substituting for the word "all" the word "who."

Mr. ROBINSON. The difficulty with that is that in some instances there may be more than two sureties.

The question being taken upon Mr. Robinson's amendment, it was

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following:

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following:

Sec. 43. The following offices are created in and for the District of Columbia, and are anthorized by law, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act of June 11, 1878, namely: Collector of taxes; treasurer and assessor; auditor and comptroller; coroner; water registrar; attorney and assistants; surveyor; one or more assistant assessors; superintendent of lamps; market masters; superintendents of public schools; trustees of public schools; three fire commissioners; chief engineer and assistant of the fire department; superintendent of fire-alarm telegraph; inspector of buildings; health officer; an inspector of plumbing on recommendation of health officer; sanitary inspectors and poundmaster; major and superintendent of police, and officers and members of the police force; sealer of weights and measurers; such inspectors of food, flour, and salted provisions, such inspectors and measurers of wood and lumber, such gangers and inspectors of spirituous liquors, and such weighers of hay, straw, and fodder as may be necessary for the exigencies of the services required of them; one harbor master; intendant of the Washington Asylum; physician of the intended in the poor, to be residents respectively of the districts or localities for which they may be appointed; secretary to the commissioners of the District of Columbia; three trustees of the "Corooran Charity," to be appointed from residents of that part of the District of Columbia known as the city of Georgetown.

Mr. BAKER. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of

Mr. BAKER. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking whether or not this section provides for any officers other than asking whether of hot this section provides for any states that those authorized by existing law.

Mr. HUNTON. I do not think there is one.

Mr. NEAL. Not one.

Mr. HUNTON. I think, if anything, the number of officers is reduced.

Mr. BAKER. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read the following:

Sec. 57. The treasurer of the District, upon receiving any moneys, shall forthwith deposit the same in the Treasury of the United States; and said moneys thus deposited shall be drawn from the Treasury of the United States only in such sums and at such times as the same shall be actually required, and only for the expenditures authorized by law, and only upon warrants of the accounting officers of the District, and issued under the directions of the commissioners of the District, or their successors in office.

Mr. HUNTON. I move to strike out section 57 just read, because there is a provision contained in section 4 of the organic act of June 11, 1878, which covers the same ground, and which I think is better than this. I will read it:

than this. I will read it:

All taxes collected shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and the same, as well as the appropriations to be made by Congress as aforesaid, shall be disbursed for the expenses of said District, on itemized vouchers, which shall have been audited and approved by the auditor of the District of Columbia, certified by said commissioners, or a majority of them; and the accounts of said commissioners, and the tax-collectors, and all other officers required to account, shall be settled and adjusted by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department of the United States.

That is a lattern that the contract of the treasury Department of the United States.

That is a better provision than this section 57, and I therefore move to strike out this section.

Mr. ROBINSON. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that it seems to me the section which he has read does not cover quite all that is included in this section 57. The section to which he refers relates only to tax moneys, not to license fees, which are included in this section 57.

Mr. NEAL. License fees are regarded as taxes.
Mr. ROBINSON. This section 57 requires the treasurer to pay "forthwith" all moneys into the Treasury of the United States.
Mr. HUNTON. I think the section in the organic act is intended to cover all moneys, and the mode of disbursing is better than in this section.

The motion to strike out section 57 was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

PHYSICIANS TO THE POOR

SEC. 85. The physicians for the poor, when called upon, shall attend the poor of the respective localities for which they shall have been appointed, and prescribe such medicines as may be necessary for relief, to be compounded at the stores of the apothecaries for the poor; and each of the said physicians shall give the said apothecaries orders for furnishing the medicine, stating the name of the pauper to be relieved, or the head of the family, if intended for any other member thereof, the age, color, and nativity, and that he believes the person to be a pauper, entitled to the relief of the District of Columbia.

Mr. PRICGS. I design to make any inquiry of the gentlemen in

Mr. BRIGGS. I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman in charge of this bill. This section provides that the poor of the District shall be attended and prescribed for by the physician to the poor, and that prescriptions furnished by this physician shall be delivered by the apothecaries for the poor of the District. I desire to inquire who is to determine whether an individual is a pauper or not? What tributed that? Does the physician determine it?

bunal settles that? Does the physician determine it?

Mr. HUNTON. The physician for the poor, when called upon, determines that.

Mr. BRIGGS. You leave that question to him alone. Do you think he is a safe depositary of that discretion?

Mr. HUNTON. I do not see where we can better put it; that has been the law of the District for many years.

Mr. WARNER. In this connection I would inquire of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia whether there is any thing anywhere making provision for paupers other than for prescripthing any where hasing provision to paspess that the provision for the poor?

Mr. HUNTON. What other provision does the gentleman mean?

Mr. WARNER. I ask simply because I desire to know whether there is any provision for general relief.

Mr. HUNTON. The Washington Asylum is where the very poor are sent

Mr. WARNER. But I notice that on the streets of this capital of the nation there are more beggars than I have ever seen in any other city of the United States. I think it is a daily disgrace, not only to the city but to the whole nation, to have them here. I was led to ask right here in this connection whether any effort has been made to rid this city of this class of professional beggars, and at the same time provide for those who are really destitute and not otherwise provided

Mr. HUNTON. I will answer the gentleman's question, that there is no city on earth that can rid itself of beggars.

Mr. WARNER. Oh, I beg pardon.

Mr. HUNTON. I do not know of one. There is a general provision made here for the poor, and Congress every year makes appropriations to help the very poor in this city. I know of no means by which you can stop a man from asking alms.

Mr. WARNER. They can be taken from the streets, as having no visible support but beggary, which should not be a lawful means of support. At the same time provision should be made for such as are really needy and destitute.

Mr. HUNTON. There is such provision.

Mr. WARNER. Do I understand the chairman of the committee to say that you cannot by law take these persons off the streets? Is beggary a lawful calling?

Mr. HUNTON. There is a provision to take persons off the streets and send them to the Washington Asylum.

Mr. WARNER. That is what I am inquiring about; whether there is any such provision. If there is, then I should hope the officers of the law would enforce it.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE III.—TAXATION.

CHAPTER I.

DEFINITIONS AND PROPERTY TO BE TAXED.

SEC. 120. The terms "real property" and "land" shall be held to mean and include not only land itself, whether laid out in town lots or otherwise, but also, unless otherwise specified, all buildings, structures, and improvements and fixtures of whatever kind thereon, and all rights and privileges belonging or in any wise appertaining thereto. The term "personal property" shall be held to mean and include stock in public funds, including all United States, State, county, district, city, or town stock or bonds, certificates, or other securities not exempt from taxation by the laws of the United States, the capital stock of any incorporated company, the capital of any incorporated banking association or institutions, money on hand, stock in trade of merchants, manufacturers, mechanics, or tradesmen; all tangible property not included in the definition of real estate; all interests, shares, or proportions in all ships or other vessels; all other credits of any corporation or individual, after deducting therefrom the bona fide indebtedness; all wharf structures, and other buildings located on streets, or other real property of the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY I move to every live tribing the property of the content of the content

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to amend by striking out in line 8 of the section just read the words "United States" after the words "including all." There are no United States bonds which are taxable; and I do not wish to convey the implication that there may be. This section speaks of United States bonds or other securities not exempt from taxation by the laws of the United States. Now there may be United States bonds not specifically exempted by any law; but nevertheless by the decisions of the courts and by the generally understood rights of a nation Government bonds are not taxable.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does the gentleman mean to deny that Congress has the right to make Government bonds taxable when they are not by the terms of their issue non-taxable?

Mr. HAWLEY. I suppose we may have the abstract right to do so; but Congress never has been and never will be foolish enough to do so.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Well, that is the question.

Mr. HAWLEY. I need not discuss this; it has been argued upon every stump. The idea of a government taxing its own bonds is against all common sense. The government that proposes to tax its own bonds 1 per cent. had better make the rate of interest 1 per cent. less before issning the bond. We have always proceeded upon the assumption that the Government did not convey and could not convey to others the right to tax its bonds. No sovereign government can afford to recognize the right to tax its bonds. Taxing income is a different question.

Mr. HUNTON. There is no question, I suppose, that if the Government of the United States issues bonds without exempting them from taxation, it is competent for the United States to tax those bonds.

Mr. HORR. Has not the Supreme Court decided that even greenbacks cannot be taxed?

Mr. NEAL. Taxation by the States is one thing; but as respects the General Government the question is different.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has the gentleman ever heard of a government that taxed its own bonds?

Mr. HUNTON. My friend will please observe that if the Government does not choose to tax these bonds, they cannot be taxed. This provision only affects such bonds as are not exempt from taxation.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Government makes no mention of taxation in the law authorizing the issue of the bonds, would the gentleman claim that we could turn round and tax them?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly Congress has the right to do so. Mr. HAWLEY. Let me ask the gentleman a further question: What is the difference between taxing a 6 per cent. bond 1 per cent. and issuing a 5 per cent. non-taxable bond in the first place?

Mr. HUNTON. That is an entirely different question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can tell the gentleman the difference. A law taxing bonds for District purposes would apply only to bonds held in this District; but when you make a deduction from the interest you deduct it in the case of a non-resident who may be in Europe or any other place.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. It is not proposed, as I understand, to tax any Government bonds which by the terms of the act under which they are issued are non-taxable?

Mr. NEAL. No, sir; simply those which are by their terms subject to taxation.

Mr. PRICE. Are there any such?
Mr. NEAL. Suppose there are not; cannot Congress make such.
Mr. BAKER. If Congress should in future provide for the issue of taxable bonds, we can then provide for their taxation.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HAWLEY it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 13, noes 25.

Mr. ROBINSON. Without offering an amendment just now, I would like to ask a question. The pending section, in defining for the purposes of taxation "real property" and "land," declares that these terms "shall be held to mean and include not only land itself, whether laid out in town lots or otherwise, but also, unless otherwise specified, all buildings, structures, and improvements and fixtures of whatever kind thereon." Now, I would like to know where it is "otherwise specified;" that is to say, in what cases are "buildings, structures, and improvements and fixtures" on land not real estate? When are they personal property?

Mr. NEAL. We have provided here that wharf structures placed upon lands of the United States shall be considered personal property. At the end of the paragraph the gentleman will see the words "all wharf structures and other buildings located on streets or other real property of the United States."

Mr. ROBINSON. I am very glad the gentleman from Ohio has suggested that, because I was troubled a little with the last part of this paragraph, and was going to inquire whether the words "or other this paragraph, and was going to inquire whether the words "or other real property of the United States" must be taken in the same grammatical construction as the words "located on streets."

Certainly.

Mr. NEAL. Certainly.
Mr. ROBINSON. Then the language should read "or on other real property of the United States." The word "on" should be inserted.
Mr. NEAL. It is not necessary.
Mr. ROBINSON. That is a question.
Mr. NEAL. I will state to the gentleman that along the Potomac River the property of the United States has been taken possession of and wharves built upon it. We propose to tax that property, as well as all structures located upon the property of the United States overwhere.

Mr. BRIGGS. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Is there any provision in the bill whereby the surplus of national banks is taxed

Mr. NEAL. The law of the United States, incorporating national banks, exempts the banks from taxation. It is nothing but the stock which can be taxed in the hands of individual holders, and that must which can be taxed in the hands of individual holders, and that must be appraised at its true value in money. We provide for taxation of all incorporated companies, and the capital of unincorporated companies, which includes surplus and everything.

Mr. BRIGGS. Take for instance a national bank with a capital of $100,000, the stock divided into shares of $100 each, the States tax the holders of that stock on a hundred dollars a share.

Mr. NEAL. No.
Mr. BRIGGS. That is its value. Now, here is a national bank which may have in its vault a surplus of three times the amount of the actual value of its stock. Does the gentleman contend that is not

Mr. NEAL. I will tell the gentleman if he will examine the law under which national banks are incorporated he will find the only way by which States and the District of Columbia can tax those banks is through the holders of that stock.

Mr. BRIGGS. I wish to say to the gentleman that while I have great confidence in his knowledge of the facts and in his legal ability, the State of New Hampshire has taxed that surplus of the banks to the banks themselves, and collected it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I think my friend is mistaken on

Mr. NEAL. They cannot under the law.
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I know in the State of Illinois the only tax is levied on the stockholder on the amount of stock which he holds without reference to the surplus fund.

Mr. REED. I suggest to the gentlemen that the value of the stock will depend upon the amount of surplus; and if there is a large surplus the stock will have a greater value; and in that way we can get

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The surplus fund is taken into consideration.

Mr. BRIGGS. Suppose, as they do in some States, they tax it at its par value.?

Mr. NEAL. Then they violate the law under which national banks

Mr. NEAL. Then they violate the law under which national banks are incorporated; that is all.

Mr. BRIGGS. That is your construction of it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That is the construction of the courts, that all property shall be taxed on one basis or in one ratio. If personal property is taxed only one-third of its value, bank stock is taxed only at one-third of its valuation.

Mr. NEAL. There is no question before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken, and the Clerk will proceed to read the next section.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am just a trifle troubled about the latter part of that section; and I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio what he understands by "buildings located on streets?" What does the phrase "located on streets" mean? I want to know.

Mr. NEAL. I do not know how it can mean anything else than

Mr. NEAL. I do not know how it can mean anything else than

Mr. NEAL. I do not know now it can mean anything eise than what I have already stated.

Mr. ROBINSON. Do you mean on streets or alongside streets?

Mr. NEAL. Buildings sitting on the streets themselves. You have on the Potomac River wharves located upon the streets—streets occupied by wharves.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then why do you not say "on land belonging to the United States?"

Mr. WARNER. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 12; after the words "money on hand" insert "including legal-tender notes of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we tax everywhere in the States gold and silver and national-bank notes. There is no economic reason in the world, and none can be shown by any gentleman here, why green-backs as money should not be subject to taxation precisely the same as gold and silver and national-bank notes; but there are many reasons why they should be, not only in this District but everywhere without going into a debate on the question of currency I wish simply to say the greenback currency now permits from one to two thousand millions of capital in the form of ready money, bank deposits, &c., to escape taxation. It permits gold and silver and a large part of the money of the United States by nominal conversion into greenbacks to escape taxation, for which certainly there can be no good reason. The plea on which greenbacks have been exempted from taxation no longer exists, and that is that they are debt and debt only. Of course I dispute the proposition that they are a debt only. Grant that they are a debt, that is not all they are; they are money. They perform all the functions of money precisely the same as gold, silver, and national-bank notes; and there is no reason why they should not be taxed the same as other kinds of money.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED. I do not know of any law which exempts greenbacks from taxation; but there is something higher than the law, and that is the Constitution of the United States; and I think we had better have a good many more people here before we undertake to alter the Constitution of the United States and override the decision of the Supreme Court

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like the gentleman from Maine to give me that provision of the Constitution.

Mr. REED. And I am surprised to think that my friend from Ohio has not been able to find that decision of the Supreme Court which covers this question.

Mr. WARNER. I would be very glad if my friend from Maine would point out to me that provision or that clause of the Constituwould point out to me that provision or that clause of the Constitution which covers his point.

Mr. REED. The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in 12 Wheaton; I think the case of Weston against the city of Charleston is the one that I refer to. The provisions of the Constitution to which I refer are embodied in that decision of the Supreme Court, as the gentleman will find by reference to it. The Supreme Court decided the case on the broad ground that the obligations of the United States were not taxable by any authority, and that decision is not only made as far back as Weston against the city of Charleston, but the decision has been reaffirmed in subsequent cases. Whether McCulloch vs. Maryland is earlier or later, I do not just now remember.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does not that refer to taxation of these notes by Mr. REED. No, sir.

Mr. WARNER. I believe I have the floor. I have not yielded it.
Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will yield to permit me to ask a question. Mr. WARNER.

Mr. WARNER. Very well. Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from Maine whether the decision to which he referred was not that these notes were not taxable by States and municipalities, but by the authority of the United States?

Mr. REED. Without stopping to discuss that point, this is an attempt to permit a municipality to impose a tax upon these notes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not at all. This District is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. REED. This amendment proposes to allow this discretion which would inure to the benefit of the District of Columbia alone, and allows the District a privilege which no State of this Union possesses. It is a very plain case, and I will end by restating one point made by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND,] that if this be money, as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, then it is already be money, as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, then it is already included in the phraseology of this bill, money on hand, and his amendment would not affect it. And if he has any confidence in his assertion that this is money, then I imagine that he will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. WARNER. I would have confidence in it, and have confidence in it, if that provision of the law could be carried into effect.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no such language in the law.

Mr. REED. I will repeat the gentleman's suggestion to me and ask him to produce the law.

Mr. WARNER. Again, the decision of the Supreme Court referred to by the gentleman from Maine had reference to greenbacks as debt only, and there has been no decision covering them as money. It applied to greenbacks as debt not redeemable on demand; but now that the research against the lattice of the helderical but now that they are redeemable at the option of the holder in coin, I hold that it has no longer any application whatever to them.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate on this clause is exhausted.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word. I do not believe this amendment ought to be adopted for two reasons.

do not believe this amendment ought to be adopted for two reasons. First, it has been held by our Supreme Court that United States Treasury notes, commonly called greenbacks, are not taxable under the law by which they were issued, standing precisely upon the same ground as a bond bearing interest.

Mr. WARNER. We want to change the law in that respect.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Very well. Now that law is a part and parcel of the contract between the holder of the indebtedness of the Government and the Government itself, and if you can change the law as to the indebtedness of the United States not bearing interest, with much greater propriety can you change the contract as to the with much greater propriety can you change the contract as to the debt of the United States bearing interest. Now, the gentleman from Ohio says they have the option to take coin and therefore these notes ought to be taxable. It is true the holder has the option to exchange them for coin, but under the law they are not canceled but are paid out by the Secretary of the Treasury for the current expenses of the Government, and this continues by direct provision of the law as often as they come into the Treasury.

Now, if the gentleman wants to say that the greenback is redeemed and canceled and paid off, that that contract is at an end, that they lose their legal-tender quality so far as the original law gave it to them under the war power of the Government, let him say so. I will not consent to it. It is true after you cancel the greenbacks you can, under a law to be passed, issue Treasury notes and make them tax-able, but as I understand the Constitution and the ruling of the courts able, but as I understand the Constitution and the ruling of the courts you cannot make them a legal tender unless they are issued by legislation had under the war powers of the Government.

Mr. WARNER. Now will the gentleman answer me a question?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. If I can.

Mr. WARNER. If the greenbacks are paid out as legal-tenders after such an amendment as this had been enacted or after the law exempting them from taxation had been repealed would the question of contract come in then? Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. You are supposing a case that if a thing is done then so and so would result. I apprehend it is competent for the United States to authorize the issuing of a Treasury note under a law passed to-day, to-morrow, or next day permitting it to be taxed by the States or to be taxed for Federal purposes. When that time arrives then we will meet the question.

The formal amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. HAWLEY. I renew the pro forma amendment for the purpose of saying that ordinarily I would raise the point of a quorum on a question of this sort; but I will not do it to-night. I wish to say question of this sort; but I will not do it to night. I wish to say very briefly the power to borrow money, giving bonds therefor, the power to issue Treasury notes, is absolutely indispensable, is the arterial life-blood of any nation. To permit anybody to strike out or diminish that power is to aim a deadly blow at the life of the nation. But I do not raise the point of order, because I do not believe there can be a Congress assembled in these United States that will dare to pass that amendment.

pass that amendment.

Mr. WARNER. That does not touch this question at all.

Mr. HUNTON. I make the point of order that debate is exhausted.

Mr. WARNER. I renew the pro forma amendment. If taxed it would be not as debt, not as a loan at all, but as money. The greenbacks perform all the functions of money, I repeat, precisely the same as gold and silver, and as money, as capital, they should be taxed, and

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask my friend from Ohio a ques District of Columbia while across the river it is not taxed?

Mr. WARNER. That is a question of policy. If begun here, it should be extended over the whole United States.

Mr. COBB. My understanding of the position of greenbacks in respect to taxation is this: they are exempt by statute from State mr. REED. No, sir; it is more than that.
Mr. COBB. I will read from the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 3701. All stocks, bonds, Treasury notes

These are Treasury notes, are they not? Mr. REED. Yes, sir.
Mr. COBB. I continue to read—and other obligations of the United States, shall be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal or local authority.

Now, if Congress by enactment gives the commissioners of the District of Columbia the right to tax these greenbacks, it can be done. There is no constitutional provision in the way; and there is no legal restriction in the way anywhere. As soon as the enactment is passed it repeals that portion of the law which I have read; and hence you can tax the greenbacks.

The policy of what is here proposed is another thing. Whether it is best to pass a law local in its application, giving to the District of Columbia the right to tax the greenbacks while they are not taxed or allowed to be taxed by any of the States or municipalities outside of the District is a different question.

of the District is a different question.

Mr. WARNER. That is the only good reason why this amendment should not be passed.

Mr. COBB. I agree with the gentleman that that is the only good reason why the amendment should not be adopted. My opinion is that greenbacks should be taxed as other money is taxed; and if Congress will pass an act repealing the act which I have read they would be taxable.

Mr. REED. On that point I take issue with the gentleman from Indiana. The statute he has read is only a reaffirmance of the constitutional restriction which would exist without it.

Mr. WARNER. I withdraw the amendment for the reason that it is doubtful policy to tax greenbacks in the District and leave them untaxed everywhere else. But they ought to be taxed everywhere the same as any other money. Nothing but a provision of law now prevents their taxation.

Mr. NEAL. I offer the following amendment:

In line 18, after the word "located," substitute the word "in "for the word "on;" and after the word "or" insert the word "on;" so that it will read:

"And other buildings located in streets or on other real property of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 131. The following property shall be exempt from taxation:
First. The property of the United States and of the District.
Second. The Corcoran Art Gallery, with the works of art contained therein, and all real estate now owned by said institution.
Third. The Soldiers' Home property.

Mr. HENKLE. I offer the following amendment:

After the words "the Soldiers' Home property" insert the words "Masonic Temple and Odd Fellows' Hall."

I shall not attempt to argue in favor of the amendment, the propriety of which I think will be evident to every member. The order of Odd Fellows and the order of Masons are humanitarian and charitable, as everybody knows. The chief property that they own in this District is the Masonic Temple and Odd Fellows' Hall. They are exempted from taxation in almost all large cities in the country. The same reasons that apply for their exemption in other cities apply with equal force to their exemption from taxation here.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would inquire whether these halls are rented

Mr. HENKLE. They are not rented; they belong to these orders.
Mr. McMILLIN. Do the orders rent them for any purpose?
Mr. HENKLE. They occasionally rent these halls for concerts and other public purposes, but the revenues derived from that rental are used for charitable purposes.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to say a word or two in opposition to the amendment offered by my friend from Maryland, [Mr. HENKLE.] The policy of the Committee on the District of Columbia in framing this policy of the Committee on the District of Columbia in framing this bill was to exempt from taxation all property held for purely charitable purposes. Now, if these Odd Fellows and Masons hold property for purely charitable purposes, then they ought to be exempt from taxation; otherwise they ought not to be.

Now, I take issue with my friend when he says that these are purely charitable institutions. I am the last man in the world to say aught against these institutions. But Odd Fellows and Masons, as all know, are charitable to themselves and to the families of their members, not to the public generally; that is, not as Odd Fellows or as They are mutual insurance companies, not in point of law but in point of fact. When parties enter these lodges of Masons and Odd Fellows they contract that in certain events they will do certain things for sick members and the orphans of former members of those institutions.

In addition to that these halls where these Odd Fellows and Masons are accommodated are connected with stores underneath, almost invariably, and those stores and their halls are rented for public exhibivariably, and those stores and their halls are rented for public exhibitions. Now, why the property of these institutions should be exempt from taxation more than other property I cannot for the life of me see. If A, B, and C own property conjointly they have to pay taxes upon it. But if A, B, and C are Odd Fellows or Masons, and own this property as such, then it is proposed to exempt them from taxation upon it. Now, I do not see the reason or the propriety of any such exemption.

We considered in the Committee on the District of Columbia that

We considered in the Committee on the District of Columbia that we were not authorized to make the proposed exemption list very large, lest the revenues of the District should fall short of the needs of the District government.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend the amendment by adding to it the words "and the real estate belonging to the Young Men's Christian Association;" that is, Lincoln Hall.

Mr. HENKLE. In reply to what has been said by the chairman of our committee, I want to say that the revenues of these orders, whatever they may be derived from the rental of their halls or other proposed. ever they may be, derived from the rental of their halls or other property, all go into the general treasury of these orders and are devoted to the same charitable and laudable purposes as their general fund.

Now the truth is that these orders are generally poor and in debt, and their funds are inadequate to meet the demands upon them for the charities which they are in the habit of supplying to those who are the beneficiaries of their respective orders. The gentleman from Virginia says that the charity of these orders is exclusive, and limited to the members or families of the members of these several orders. If it is exclusive in that sense, it is generally beneficial, because to the extent that they aid the members and families of their respective the extent that they aid the members and families of their respective orders they benefit the general community by taking that much of the burden of taxation that would otherwise fall upon the general community. I repeat that this exemption from taxation is common in other States and cities, and I hope it will be adopted here.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. A single word upon the amendment, as well as upon the section. I am not in favor of the amendment, for the reason that I do not believe that the people who do not indorse these or any other similar organizations should be virtually compelled to assist in their support.

to assist in their support.

I know that these orders have magnificent charities. I have great sympathy with the objects for which they are instituted. I admire them; perhaps I have a stronger feeling than admiration for them. Yet there are people who have not that admiration, and who desire to dispense their charities and do their good through some other organization, perhaps not a secret one.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is this character of property exempt from taxation

Mr. BLOUNT. Is this character of property exempt from taxation in your State?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I think it is not exempt in my State, and I do not think it ought to be exempt in any State. Some people as a matter of conscience are opposed to all organizations of this kind. They have just as much right to be opposed to this way of administering charity as I have the right to be in favor of it. I have no right, and the majority has no right, to impose upon those people who are conscientiously opposed to this way of administering charity the burden of assisting in supporting these institutions.

Now, I would go further and strike out this whole section; not that I do not indorse the work of churches, but all people do not belong to the same church. Some belong to different churches than others; some churches have more extensive property than others, and some people do not belong to any churches at all.

Mr. PRICE. They ought to.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The gentleman says they ought to. I think they ought, but still they have the right to do just as they please about it.

I have great sympathy with the churches and have no war to make upon them; but after all, in this country, under our Constitution, I believe that each man everywhere should contribute upon his own free motion to the support of churches and of charities, and should not be compelled to contribute in either a direct or an indirect way for their support.

I submit that the power to exempt certain property from taxation throws the burden which it would bear if taxed upon other property that is taxed, and is equivalent to taxing other property for its support.

[Here the hammer fell.]
The question being taken on Mr. PRICE's amendment to the amendment, it was not agreed to.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I wish to reply briefly to my friend from Illinois, [Mr. Cannon.] The churches of this land constitute a vast system of education indispensable to our institutions. No man will question of education indispensable to our institutions. No man will question that. This system of education, just as important to our institutions as our common-school system, is sustained solely by the benevolence of a small class of individuals who pay their taxes for the common-school system on all their remunerative property just as fully as other men. They help to bear all the ordinary burdens of the State and at the same time assist in supporting this grand system of education without which our institutions cannot stand. I ask is it just to tax this small class of benevolent persons for this work indispensable to the State 3. I do not believe that the State ought to tax itself to supthe State? I do not believe that the State ought to tax itself to support the church; nor do I believe that it ought to tax the church to port the church; nor do I believe that it ought to tax the church to support itself.

Mr. HUNTON. I wish to say that if the pending amendment be adopted it will be an enlargement of the list of exemptions. The amendment applies to Odd Fellows' property and Masons' property.

Mr. HENKLE. Two buildings here in Washington.

Mr. HUNTON. Never in the history of this District have Odd Fellows' property and Masons' property been exempt from taxation. If the list of exemptions is to be enlarged by this amendment and other amendments indicated here to-night, and of which we have had notice, the revenues of the District will fall short. For this reason, and for the other reasons which have been presented in opposition to the amendment, I hope it will not be agreed to. amendment, I hope it will not be agreed to.

amendment, I hope it will not be agreed to.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Chairman, in the State of Maryland and, so far as I have able to ascertain, in all the States of the Union, property belonging to the Order of Odd Fellows and to the Masonic fraternity has always been exempt from taxation.

Mr. NEAL. It is not so in Ohio.

Mr. TALBOTT. Then Ohio is an exception to the general rule.

These associations are charitable organizations. It is true that their charities are conferred first on their own membership; but from the information I have been able to gather, all proper objects of charity, whether the persons needing relief are members of the fraternity or not, are recipients of whatever these associations are able to bestow. They are recognized as charitable institutions all over this land, even in the State of Ohio, though their property in that State may not be exempt from taxation. I hope the amendment of my colleague [Mr. HENKLE] will be adopted.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HENKLE, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 16, noes 34. The Clerk read as follows:

Fourth. All church property, held and used exclusively for religious worship-All property, real and personal, the rents, issues, and profits of which are used exclusively for the endowment or support of institutions for the free education of youth, shall be exempt from taxation as long as such property, or the rents, issues, profits, and income thereof shall be used and applied exclusively for the support of free education.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out, in line 12 and line 15, the word "free," before the word "education." This paragraph will then provide in effect that the property of all institutions for the education of youth shall be exempt from taxation. In its present form the exemption is confined to institutions for free education.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest that the gentleman also strike out the word "support."
Mr. SPRINGER. That amendment I do not think material, though

Mr. SPRINGER. That amendment I do not think material, though I have no objection to accepting it.

Several educational institutions in this city which under the provision as it stands would be subject to taxation will be exempt if my amendment be adopted. In my view all these institutions for the instruction of youth ought to be regarded as a part of the governmental system of education; and as the instruction of youth is essential to the proper administration of a free government all such institutions should be exempt from taxation. Persons who give their means to the support of these institutions are contributing to the best means to the support of these institutions are contributing to the best interests of the Government itself, and the Government ought not to compel them to pay taxes upon contributions which are in fact an aid to the Government. The education of the people is absolutely essential to the preservation of a Government like ours. We submit all questions to popular decision, and this decision to be worth anything must be based upon an intelligent understanding of the ques-

These educational institutions to which my amendment will apply are not managed for the profit of any individual. Only such sums are charged as will pay the expense of their support, and persons who contribute to their maintenance should not be taxed upon their contributions

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the gentleman understand the word "institutions" as applying to incorporated institutions?

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand it to mean and to apply to institutions established for the purposes of education.

A Member. Public or private?

Mr. ROBINSON. It will apply to an individual coming here to teach school.

Mr. HUNTON. Unquestionably it will.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think it would apply to any property used exclusively for educational purposes, and that property should be exempt from taxation.

exempt from taxation.

Mr. ROBINSON. The reason why I asked the question is that the word "institution" would seem to throw that in great doubt.

Mr. SPRINGER. It says all property, real or personal. Education is a good thing and I wish to support it.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment, and on the same grounds partially on which I opposed the amendment last offered. I am at a loss to know upon what principles a man who sets up one sort of business in the District of Columbia shall be taxed, and another man who sets up another character of business in the District shall be exempt from taxation. I see no reason for it.

These institutions or these individuals who come to the District of Columbia to open schools do it as a matter of business. It is a moneymaking business to many of them, and very many of them would not making business to many of them, and very many of them would not pursue it a day if it was demonstrated there was no money in it.

Upon what principle do you tax merchants and exempt school-masters? Mr. SPRINGER. You tax the public to support the schools here.

Mr. HUNTON. My friend from Illinois says education ought to be encouraged and every institution of learning ought to be exempt from taxation because people ought to be educated and because they are the persons who decide all questions at elections. Mr. Chairman Laman advected of education but I person learning ought. man, I am an advocate of education, but I never knew the Governman, I am an advocate of education, but I never knew the Government afforded to the youth of the country opportunities for an academic and collegiate course. We provide free schools and the people are taxed to sustain them, but they are open to all; and there is no money made out of it. But when you come to higher branches of education, such as these institutions afford, I say they ought to pay tax on their property like other people.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

tion?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly.
Mr. McMILLIN. Is it not a fact that some of these institutions are used as residences for the teachers as well as for the purposes of Mr. HUNTON. I think it is likely.

Mr. McMILLIN. So, then, it would give to these teachers homes free from taxation?

Mr. HUNTON. That is true, sir; it would give the teachers an exemption from taxation so far as their residences are concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.
Mr. BLOUNT. I rise, Mr. Chairman, to offer a substitute for the proposition of my friend from Illinois. I ask the Clerk to read section 147 of the Revised Statutes, which is the present law, and which I move as a substitute for the pending paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 147. All churches and school-houses, and all buildings, grounds, and property appurtenant thereto, and used in connection therewith in the District, and any cemetery therein, held and owned by a religious society, having a regular and known place of worship, or by any incorporated association, shall be exempt from any and all taxes or assessments, national or municipal.

Mr. BLOUNT. I offer that for this reason—
Mr. SPRINGER. That does not cover the question of education.
Mr. BLOUNT. I submit that it does, for it is under that section every college and school in this city is to-day exempted from taxation. I am sure the matter is satisfactory to parties interested.

My friend from Virginia says there is no reason why the private schools or colleges in this city should be exempt from taxation any schools or colleges in this city should be exempt from taxation any more than an individual, or any more than you would exempt a merchant or physician or attorney. I submit there is every difference. Here is the truth: your private institutions are staggering and almost driven out of your District by your free-school system. In my own city, and other cities, they are stricken down in their business by your free-school system. There is no other person, no physician, no lawyer, who by Government action is stricken down in any such

It stands on an entirely different footing, and when gentlemen come here into this city with their private institutions of learning, and colleges are erected and you set up competition by your free institu-tions and strike down their business, you have gone far enough. I say that we ought not to go any further and tax those very people, those very private schools and institutions, to help build up the competition which is striking them down. I believe, sir, in view of the liberal policy which has been inaugurated in this District, every movement toward education, whether it be your free school or private schools or colleges, whatever they may be, should be treated in exactly the same manner.

I trust, sir, that we are not going back on the policy that has been obtaining here for the past ten years, a policy that has been eminently productive of good results. Take Howard University as an example. The Government has given large sums of money to that institution for its endowment. It has appropriated year after year for its maintenance, and we voted in the last Congress $15,000 for its support. I ask are you now going to withdraw the Government aid from it and let it fail $\frac{1}{2}$ Or are you going even further and not only withdraw. let it fail? Or are you going even further and not only withdraw your aid but impose a tax upon it, when it is a matter of doubt that it can sustain itself under the most favorable circumstances? For one, sir, with the large appropriations which are made toward free education in this country, I trust that all such institutions in this District will not be crushed out of existence. I am in favor of the utmost liberality where the educational interests of the people are involved.

And now a word upon another point. The plea has been made here that how a word upon another point. The pies has been made here that there are already too many exemptions in the District, and yet there is a complaint of illiberality on our part. Sir, there is no city in this Union favored as Washington is to-day in some respects. The appropriation bill lately reported by my friend from Indiana [Mr. Cobb] covers $3,000,000 to be paid out of the public Treasury for the Support of this District.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will not this amendment favor it more?

Mr. BLOUNT. That I am not discussing now. But when you touch the question of liberality toward the District, I say when you are paying one-half of the taxes, it does not lie in her mouth to complain

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a point of order, that this discussion applies to a portion of the bill which has not yet been reached.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is a provision in reference to cemeteries that may be stricken out when it is reached, and this proposition of mine is not in the nature of an amendment but a substitute for the whole section.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to hear the substitute read.

The substitute was again read.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the substitute of the gentleman from Georgia. I agree in all that has been so well said by the gentleman, and fully concur with him in his views upon this subject. I hope the policy that has been adopted and pursued for the last twenty-five years in the wisdom of Congress is not now to be changed.

It has been flung into the teeth of the democratic party for years that they are the opponents of education. The point has been made and repeated that the republican party has ever been the champion of education, and that the democratic party is opposed to it. I hope the democratic party will not permit that charge to remain unanswered. Its history in the past has shown that it is not true, and I hope the present occasion, when the educational interests of this District that the party is a superposed to the present occasion. trict are involved, will prove no exception to that history. Twenty years ago, sir, this subject entered into the consideration of Congress. A policy was adopted then substantially the same as that now proposed in this substitute of the gentleman from Georgia. When the democratic party came into power the very first legislation was in reference to the exemption from taxation of property used for educational purposes. The following words will be found in the law:

And, third, such property as is now exempt from taxation under the law of the United States.

I read from page 84 of the United States statutes of 1875, volume 19. I will not take the time of the House by reading at length. Gentlemen can see for themselves what was then done.

Two years after that date, when the next Congress came in, a similar provision was passed exempting from taxation all such property exempt under previous laws. These colleges and institutions of learning in this District are not realizing any profit. On the contrary, it is a well-established fact that they are barely able to sustain themselves. That being the condition of affairs it would seem to be a hardship to impose upon them an additional tax at this time.

Mr. Chairman, during the fifteen years that the republican party had undivided sway in both branches of Congress they manifested toward the schools and colleges of the District a liberality that was highly commendable and one which I should not object to see the democratic party follow to-day.

It is wise and well to continue it. It is humane. It is important to maintain these institutions, and in their behalf I favor the utmost extent of liberality commensurate with public interests. I hope the substitute of the gentleman from Georgia will be adopted.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. SPRINGER. Would that be in order, as there is an amendment to an amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Georgia offers a substitute for the amendment.

Mr. NEAL. Then I move to strike out the last word of the substi-

Mr. Chairman, the committee do not comprehend the scope of this provision.

Mr. BARBER. What committee?

Mr. NEAL. The Committee of the Whole House; that is the only committee here.

Mr. BARBER. I thought the gentleman possibly referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. [Laughter.]
Mr. NEAL. This clause provides that all property, real or personal, the rents or profits from which are used exclusively for the endowment or support of institutions of learning for the free education of youth, shall be exempt from taxation in the District as long as such property, or the rents, profits, &c., shall be used and applied exclusively for the support of free education. Now, that includes not only the buildings, but all property which they may have or rent for the uses prescribed in that section.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any such institution in the city of Washington; I mean any institution which would come under the provisions of that fourth clause of this section?

Mr. NEAL. I do not know whether there is or not. We have not drawn this bill with reference to existing institutions, or with reference to what may be in the future.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no such institution in the District, and I do not believe there is such a one in the United States.

Mr. NEAL. I will tell the gentleman there is such an institution in the District

Mr. SPRINGER. What is its name? Mr. NEAL. I refer to the Columbian Law College. It has a building which it rents and the profits go to that institution.

Mr. SPRINGER. They charge for trition.

Mr. NEAL. Certainly they do. And if you strike out the word "free," the property of Columbian Law College will be exempt from taxation.

Mr. SPRINGER. I refer to institutions for the free education of vouth.

You propose to strike out the word "free." Mr. NEAL.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman has misunderstood me. I stated there is no institution in the District for the free education of youth, or anywhere else that I know of, supported by private individuals.

Mr. NEAL. I know this: there are institutions of learning that are run for purposes of profit to the gentlemen who have charge of them. There are, for example, the Columbian Law College, a medical institute, and some others which might be named. And if you adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois you will exempt from taxation all their property, property which they have rented, and from which they receive an income. There is no reason in the world why the Columbian Law College should not pay taxes upon its

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask my friend from Ohio if those very rents do not go to support the professors?

Mr. NEAL. I do not know what they go for.

Mr. BARBER. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me for a question 9

Mr. NEAL. I have only five minutes, and two minutes of my time have already been taken up by other gentlemen. I will suggest an amendment to the language of this clause, so that it shall distinctly provide that whenever there is property that is rented, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof go for free education, then that property shall be exempted; but if they go for other purposes than free education, then it shall pay taxes, except the buildings of these institutions, the property they occupy exclusively for educational purposes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to oppose the formal amendment.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I had risen for the same purpose.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will leave my colleague two-thirds of my time.

I wish to say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] that he does not seem to understand me. As this clause now stands it would not apply to any institution in the District of Columbia. Nor do I believe it would apply to any institution in the United States if this law should be extended so far. I know of no private institution for the free education of youth. All free schools are public schools, and supported by the Government; and those of course are exempt from tax-ation, because the property itself belongs to the State or to the Dis-trict. But as the provision here stands, it is utterly worthless. You may strike it out entirely, and it will not change anything, because there is no institution of the kind owned by private individuals for the free education of youth. To make the provision practical, I pro-pose to strike out the word "free." I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague.

to my colleague.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to have my own five minutes, and if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Neal] will withdraw the formal amendment I will renew it.

Mr. NEAL. I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I renew it.

I am opposed to the amendment of my colleague from Illinois, but ram opposed to the amendment of my colleague from lithous, but perhaps upon a broader ground than has been spoken of, at least in my hearing. I allow no man to have a greater admiration for general education for all the people than myself. If I had power I would make that education in this Republic of ours compulsory. But I would not educate by compulsory means or at the expense of all the people unless the system applied to all the children of the country; unless at least the option was given to them, and unless they could be under the control in these institutions of the body-politic of teachers selected under general law, paid for by taxation levied by general law upon property everywhere. This clause, however, as it stands in the bill, provides for exempting from taxation institutions which are used for free education both as regards the real property and the personal. The amendment of my colleague is to strike out the word "free."

Now, let us see where that will lead us to. If you strike out the word "free."—and I am not sure but the whole provision ought to be stricken out—if you strike out the word "free" it allows anybody to endow an institution in this District with ten millions or five millions or one million or one hundred thousand dellars—it makes no ions or one million or one hundred thousand dollars-it makes no difference as to the amount-and there to pursue a certain line of education if you please.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would you prohibit him from endowing an institution !

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I would prohibit nothing that a man has a right to do in this Republic of ours without violation of law. has a right to do in this Republic of ours without violation of law. I am speaking now of conducting this course of education at the public expense. To illustrate: it pleases me with my views to send my daughter to an Episcopal school where I pay tuition. That is my business; it is my money that pays it. There is a certain kind of moral and religious education, a training, which I pay my money for and which I have a right to pay it for.

But I have no right, directly or indirectly, to tax my Catholic friend or my Methodist friend or my Presbyterian friend to support that school, and thereby help to educate my daughter in that way. So it should and thereby help to educate my daughter in that way. So it should be in my opinion everywhere. I will go as far as anybody to give a high grade of education to all children in this country; compulsory if you will, permissive if you please, if you are not ready yet for compulsory education. But let all stand alike.

One other thing. This is a pretty broad provision—"all institutions for education." What kind of education? Why, sir, in many well-ordered schools now I believe, at least in many schools of the higher grade, there is a dancing-master. Dancing is a kind of education. You have it in your Military Academy and in your Naval Academy and you have it in almost all your higher schools. Are you going to exempt from taxation Marini's real estate, which is used, or rather the building is, for teaching dancing, singing, and etiquette, and also Sheldon's dancing-academy? They are covered by the terms of this bill.

Now there is no man with less prejudice upon religious matters and other matters than myself. I think I am pretty broad in my views upon all these subjects, having great charity for everybody, those who agree with me and those who do not agree with me. But I am not here to impose a burden upon anybody to help support an institution which they cannot conscientiously indorse.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to call attention to a possible construction of this paragraph. It proposes to exempt from taxation institutions that are rich enough to be able to educate children free of charge; that are rich enough to be able to educate children free of charge; but if they are not rich enough for that, and have to charge a little something for tuition, then they are to be taxed. Is not that so? Precisely. If they are well endowed, rich, able to take pupils for nothing, then they shall not be taxed. But if they are like most of the institutions that I know anything about and have to charge tuition, at least to those who can afford to pay it, then they are to be taxed. Now, I say with all due respect that such a proposition is ridicalled.

I would change the paragraph; it would satisfy me to strike out the word "free" where it occurs twice and put in the word "incor-porated" before "institution." That would make it really and sub-stantially the proposition that is now before the House and the old law; and I think it would perhaps be better than the old law with those two changes

My friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] makes the point with some considerable force that some of these institutions are Catholic, some are Episcopalian, some are Presbyterian, &c. I know that. But if there be only a Presbyterian or a Baptist institution, the door is wide open for the Catholics or the Episcopalians to establish their colleges, and they will be exempt also from taxation.

I am happy to say that my State furnishes free education for every child in the State, and has a compulsory law to compel the attendance of those children at school. Then we have colleges there. The Episcopalians established one there some time ago, and besides their college buildings and grounds they have a block of buildings in my town, free of taxation. The Baptists have a large seminary there which is free from taxation, and the Methodists have an institution there and their buildings are free from taxation. If there is any other denomination we will bid it God speed in building up an acadother denomination we will let their property be free from taxation, because there is nothing in the world that we can do for our land better than to encourage education, both moral and mental.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I withdraw the amendment which I

Mr. NEAL. I renew it. The proposition of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] resolves itself into just this: if there are some rich people who have got together and become incorporated, and have established a fine seminary or a college for any purpose whatever, whether for medical education or education in law, or education of any kind, then they are to be exempt from taxation. But if a poor woman comes here into the city and establishes a school with the most benevolent purpose in the world, she must be taxed. I do not myself appreciate that sort of benevolence.

I do not understand the justice or equity of that kind of law. we are going to exempt institutions of learning let us exempt such institutions as Mrs. Archer's school and Mrs. Smith's school.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to make a correction?

In this District we open public schools which are absolutely free;

every child can go there.

Mr. NEAL. I understand all that, but the gentleman said that he would exempt all chartered or incorporated institutions. Yet he would require these poor women who are doing just as good a work as our chartered institutions, and a great deal better than some of them, to pay taxes.

Mr. BAKER. What harm will be done if we continue the law on

Mr. BAKER. What ham will be done it we continue the law on this subject which has been in force for fifteen or twenty years?

Mr. NEAL. I do not know that any harm will be done.

Mr. BAKER. Then, let us do it.

Mr. NEAL. I know that the Columbian Law College, which rents offices in its building to lawyers and others, will be exempt from taxition under this proposition. I am not in favor of that ation under this proposition. I am not in favor of that.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question? He has alluded twice to the Columbian Law School. I would like to know whether that is connected with the Columbian College on Fourteenth street?

Mr. BLOUNT I make the street of the columbian connected with the Columbian connected with the Columbian college on Fourteenth street?

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand it is.
Mr. NEAL. That is my understanding.
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Then I wish to say that the Columbian College has had great difficulty in getting along. Within a few years it has been extricated from the most severe embarrasment by the liberality of one of the west embarrasment. by the liberality of one of the most eminent citizens of Washington.

That institution is ill able to bear taxation. I do not want that Baptist association brought in here as an argument in favor of taxing this college. Mr. NEAL.

I would like to know why the people of the District of Columbia should be taxed to educate the gentleman's sons or some other man's sons in the law

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) This provision as proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] and as advocated by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] has been the law for ten years; and I would like to know whether during this whole period any tax-payer has objected to these exemptions? If so, he has never, to my knowledge, come to Congress with his complaint.

Mr. NEAL. I do not know whether tax-payers have objected or not; but I say that there is no sound principle of legislation which will justify the exemption of a building like the Columbian Law Building from taxation.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I believe the policy of this country and this Government should be to promote education, to encourage moral and religious training in every direction. This being done, we secure the greatest possible good to the greatest number.

Mr. NEAL. Then I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to hold that the public ought to pay for educating young men in the

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I believe that a great government like this should see that its citizens are educated in every direction; for education brings contentment and happiness, and it is the purpose of all government to bring to its citizens contentment and happiness.

Mr. SPRINGER. In order that the law which has been in force for the last ten years may be continued, I withdraw my amendment, so that the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia may be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute proposed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] for the fourth paragraph will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

All churches and school-houses and all buildings, grounds, and property appertaining thereto and used in connection therewith, in the District, and any cemetery therein, held and owned by a religious society having a regular and known place of worship, or by any incorporated institution, shall be exempt from any and all taxes or assessments, national or municipal.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I suggest that the gentleman strike out the clause in regard to cemeteries, as that matter is provided for in another part of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to the modification suggested by the gentleman if he thinks the committee have agreed on a better provision.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. We have, because we provide that cemeteries used for purposes of profit or speculation shall be

Mr. BLOUNT. Very well; I modify my amendment by striking out the words "and any cemetery therein."

Mr. HUNTON. The gentleman from Georgia will allow me to make a suggestion. His substitute concludes with the words "shall be exempt from any and all taxes or assessments, national or municipal." Now, that language is processed in the second of the secon pal." Now, that language is unnecessary, because in this part of the bill we are under the head of exemptions.

Mr. BLOUNT. Very well; let those words be struck out.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute of the gentleman from Georgia, as modified, will be read. The Clerk read as follows:

All churches and school-houses, and all buildings, grounds, and property appertaining thereto, and used in connection therewith, in the District, held and owned by a religious society having a regular and known place of worship, or by any incorporated institution.

The amendment of Mr. BLOUNT was agreed to.
Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. Burrows reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill to establish a revised code for the District of Columbia, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. KLOTZ. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at eleven o'clock and fifteen minutes p m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 22, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Bullock, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The VICE-PRESIDENT signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 1160) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of peace and the recognition of American Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and the products of the soil and mine, in the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the year 1883, which had previously received the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of citizens of New Hampshire, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was ordered to lie on the table, the bill having been reported.

He also presented resolutions of the American Numismatic and Archæological. Society of the city of New York, in favor of the admission of classical antiquities free of charge; which was ordered to lie on the table, the bill relative to the subject-matter having been reported.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of the German Society of New

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of the German Society of New York, asking the passage of a bill for the protection of arriving emigrants; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a petition signed by Henry M. Rice, A.
S. Elfelt, J. H. Stewart, T. M. Newson, David Day, John Farrington, D. A. Robertson, Franklin Steele, John B. Sanborn, Henry F. Masterson, Orlando Simons, and R. R. Nelson, citizens of Minnesota, praying Northup, a citizen of that State, in consideration of long, perilous, and valuable service rendered to the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ROLLINS presented the petition of N. F. Mathes and 70 others, it is a few services of the control of the co citizens of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, praying the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3743) to provide for the relief of navy-yard employés who shall become disabled while employed in the line of their duty; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1478) for the relief of Lizzie D. Clarke, administratrix of the estate of Thomas L. Clarke, deceased, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MAXEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 5524) to establish post-routes, which was reported by that committee and recommitted and printed, to report it with certain amendments.

I gave notice on a former day of the session that on to-morrow morning I should ask unanimous consent of the Senate to put this bill on its passage. That request was made on behalf of the committee, and the time given until to-morrow, and I ask that the bill be laid on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be placed on the Calendar.

CYRUS B. INGHAM AND OTHERS.

Mr. PLUMB. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back the bill (H. R. No. 3992) for the relief of Cyrus B. Ingham, of the Territory of Dakota; Harvey Bryant and Guilford A. Wood, of Kansas; and Richard Parker, of Minnesota, with an amendment, and as this is a bill which ought to receive immediate considment, and as this is a bill which ought to receive immediate consideration and only affects some four or five persons named in the bill and the amendment, I ask that it be considered at this time.

The bill was, by unanimous consent, considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Is there a written report.

Mr. PLUMB. There is no written report. I will simply state the facts. These persons for various reasons, having made entries and having taken separate steps for taking out patents, one of them by reason of having been driven off by the Indians, and the others for different reasons, were not able to perfect their entries. The bill only applies to cases of that kind; and only legislation can relieve them and enable them to make entries in place of those which they were not permitted to make by reason of circumstances which they could not control. It applies to but four or five persons of that sort

The amendment reported from the Committee on Public Lands was read, being, in line 7, after "Minnesota," to insert:

James H. Pinkerton, of Colorado, and Ed. G. Wright, of Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be reported now as amended.
The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c.. That the right to homestead, pre-emption, and timber-culture entry upon public lands subject thereto, is hereby restored to Cyrus B. Bingham, of the Territory of Dakota, Harvey Bryant, and Guilford A. Wood, of Kansas, and Richard Parker, of Minnesota, James H. Pinkerton of Colorado, and Ed. G. Wright, of Kansas, as fully as though they had not heretofore made any one or all of such entries, and had abandoned the same, or for any cause they have been unable to perfect their title thereto: Provided, That this act shall not be so construed as to enable any of said parties to procure title to land, either as a homestead, pre-emption, or timber-culture claim, in excess of what is fixed and provided by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Cyrus
B. Ingham, of the Territory of Dakota; Harvey Bryant and Guilford
A. Wood, of Kansas; Richard Parker, of Minnesota; James H. Pinkerton, of Colorado, and Ed. G. Wright, of Kansas."

. BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1660) for the relief of William P. Chambliss, late major Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire also to present the memorial of Major W. P. Chambliss, asking the passage of an act authorizing the President to reinstate him on the retired list of the Army with the rank of major, with certain documents, which I move be referred with the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BALDWIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1661) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Detroit River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

JOHN PATTEE.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Yesterday morning, at a time when I was not in the Chamber, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Pryor] reported from the Committee on Claims adversely the petition of John Pattee, praying for pay as lieutenant-colonel of cavalry for certain periods, and asked to be discharged from the further consideration of it. I should like to have the matter in such shape that it can be got upon the Calendar and receive the consideration of the Senate. I am inthe Calendar and receive the consideration of the Senate. I am informed that the only mode in which I can do that is to ask to have the petition referred back to the committee, so that I can prepare a bill and send it to the committee, and then when the report comes back the bill can be put on the Calendar. I ask to have the petition recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PRYOR. I have no objection to the recommittal, as suggested by the Senator from Iowa

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the petition will be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

EXCLUSION OF MATTER FROM RECORD.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution:

Resolved. That the Committee on Public Printing be instructed to take such measures as will exclude from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD what purports to be a copyrighted argument of a territorial Delegate, which appears in the RECORD of to-day, but which was not, in fact, delivered in the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to this resolution? Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear it read again. The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the reso-Intion, and it is agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not know whether it is proper for us to do that. I think such action should come from the House.

Mr. MORRILL. I am very sure that for the credit of the American Congress the Senate ought to take some notice of it, because we shall have to bear a part of the reputation, good or bad, for this poetical production. The resolution only proposes that the Committee on Printing shall take such measures as shall exclude the production from the permanent Record. I suppose the committee will confer with the committee of the House.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to say simply that we have had a case like this on another occasion, though not so poetical. The case to which I refer was one of abuse and personal stander, and I think in that case what purported to be a speech or an essent that naver was decase what purported to be a speech or an essay, that never was de-livered in the House, was stricken from the RECORD in its regular edition, and was not printed in permanent form.

Mr. ALLISON. On the application of the Senate?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes, sir; on the application of the Senate. I think the case runs on all fours with this.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand that the poem to which reference is made was placed in the RECORD by the permission of the House of Representatives. I do not know certainly that that is the fact; but if the House gave the Delegate authority to publish it in the RECORD the House gave the Delegate authority to publish it in the RECORD the question arises as to whether it is competent for us now to have anything to do with it. It is rather a question for the House any way. This gentleman is a member of the House of Representatives, and it seems to me that we ought not to be inquiring in reference to this matter until the House itself takes some action in regard to the conduct of one of its members. Such action on our part would seem to be rather a reflection on the House of Representatives if they have in fact given him permission to publish it, although it was not deliv-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I enter a motion to reconsider for the purpose of having it explained.

Mr. President, I understand, only from the reading of the RECORD, that the Delegate referred to asked permission of the House to publish an argument, and it was granted. It appears to me that what the Senator from Delaware has said is in the right line. It is a matter for the House, and not for the Senate.

I should probably not enter the motion to reconsider except that by the resolution the committee is not requested to inquire into the matter or to confer with the House committee or anything of the kind, but instructed to exclude this argument from the permanent RECORD. It appears to me we are stepping in the dark and too fast. We should not think it very kind in the House to pass such a resolution if the Senate had by any means directed a certain matter to go in the RECORD, and I think we had better go slowly.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think the Senator from West Virginia, when he fully understands the facts, will have any objection to the resolution. As appears from the RECORD, the gentleman who is the author of this poetical effusion, covering a good many pages of the RECORD, asked permission of the House to present an argument. I think the House was imposed upon. At all events the House cannot authorize the publication of convergeted articles in the RECORD. think the House was imposed upon. At all events the House cannot authorize the publication of copyrighted articles in the RECORD. This purports to be copyrighted by the author; and certainly, so far as we are concerned, I think it is due to the dignity of this body, as a part of Congress, that we should see to it at once that this should be excluded from the permanent RECORD. We cannot get it out of the copy that is printed to-day, but for the credit of Congress I think it should be excluded from the permanent RECORD.

Mr. DAWES. I quite agree with the Senator from Vermont on the question of tasts and promistry. Just I must say I can hardly agree with question of taste and propriety; but I must say I can hardly agree with him ast o the idea that the Senate shall pass upon the question whether the House has been imposed upon. It seems to me that that is a question for the House; and the notion that the House cannot give consent or order anything to be printed in the RECORD without asking the Senate is also a new idea to me. We direct to be printed in the RECORD every day documents and papers that are not parts of speeches.

I agree with the Senator from Vermont about the impropriety of this matter going into the RECORD; but then that is a matter for the House to judge of, and not for us. They should pass upon it if they desire to do so; and if they are content with it, we cannot set up that the House shall come here and ask us what they shall put into the RECORD.

Mr. MORRILL. By unanimous consent I hope it will be allowed that the resolution as passed instead of reading "instructed" shall read "requested." I think there will be no objection to that.

Mr. HAMLIN. Without stopping to inquire specifically what may be the powers or what ought to be the action of the Senate finally upon this question, I think we should pass the resolution in some form. The Senate will recollect that the Committee on Printing is a light to be the action of the senate will recollect that the Committee on Printing is a joint committee, and when the resolution goes to the committee the House will have a hearing on the subject.

I think there ought to be some method taken to draw the attention of the House not only to this particular case but to a practice that prevails in that body of permitting speeches to be printed that are never delivered. It is wrong in principle in my judgment, and there is a proper method of reaching the House through a committee where the House is represented, and it will bring up the whole of this ques-

I doubt very much if under the law such matter can legally go into the RECORD. When an essay or a speech is allowed to be printed without being delivered it may be abusive in its character; nobody hears it and there is no opportunity of replying to it. We had that occasion, as I said, once before, where a speech was published as if delivered in the House grossly personally abusive of a Senator, and according to my recollection, (but I am willing to admit that my memory is somewhat defective,) that was a case which went upon all fours with this, and that speech was omitted in the regular edition.

Of course we shall do nothing in the matter without the concur-

Of course we shall do nothing in the matter without the concurrence of the House; we should do nothing in any such ease without consulting them, and without their joining in the action; but I think something ought to be done to impress upon the House the gross abuse that has grown up in that body, of permitting the publication of what was never delivered. Oh, a man must want to make a speech awfully who writes it out for a newspaper. I should have some commiseration for him, I grant, but it has grown into an absolute abuse. Here is this exhibition of I know not what to call it; I suppose the author would call it a poem. To say nothing of its rhythm or rhyme, it certainly contains all the measures and meters known to the muses. I suppose he might say that many are poets, perhaps the best, who never penned their inspiration; but here is inspiration penned in fifteen mortal quarto pages. I hardly think it was proper to allow it to be published in our RECORD.

I would say that such productions as a part of legislative proceedings are disgraceful to the legislative bodies of the country

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest to the mover of the resolution that it would be well to let the motion to reconsider be pending for a day or two in order to see what the House will do. Let the resolution go over to-day. The House will take action, no doubt.

Mr. MORRILL. Since this discussion has commenced I have learned that the matter is before the House now. I shall be quite willing to have the resolution reconsidered, and I will modify it so as to instruct the committee to invair into the preparature of excluding the preparature.

the committee to inquire into the propriety of excluding the production from the permanent RECORD.

Mr. COCKRELL. I find in the proceedings of Congress of the 13th of April the following entry in the RECORD of the 14th of April:

PAINTINGS ON WALLS OF THE NATIONAL CAPITOL.

Mr. Downey. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared an argument in support of a bill (H. R. No. 5795) providing for certain paintings on the walls of the National Capitol, which I desire printed in the Congressional Record.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to say simply that this is a matter which, in my judgment, concerns the other House entirely. We should regard it as a personal insult on their part if they were to introduce a resolution proposing to exclude from the RECORD anything which the Senate had declared should be printed therein. Whether it be in poetry or in prose, I consider makes no difference. If a gentleman chooses to submit a poetical argument rather than a prosaic one, why may he not do so? I have myself seen a bill in a chancery court, filed in the court and entered, all in poetry. I think this matter is one, as I say, resting entirely with the House, and the Senate has nothing whatever to do with it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the vote by which the resolution was agreed to be reconsidered?

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Now, as I understand the House are taking cognizance of this matter, for the present, if I may be allowed to do so, I will withdraw the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is withdrawn,

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. GARLAND submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 5524) to establish post-routes; which was ordered to lie on the table.

ELIAS C. BOUDINOT.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask unanimous consent to have considered the bill (S. No. 1315) making an appropriation for the erection of a light-house and fog-bell on Old Gay Rock at the entrance of Wickford Harbor, Narragansett Bay.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Voornees] wishes to submit some remarks this morning. I know my friend from Rhode Island will not interfere with Mr. VOORHEES. What is the pleasure of the Senator from Rhode Island !

Mr. BURNSIDE. I yield the floor.
Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to call up the bill (S. No. 120) to permit Elias C. Boudinot, of the Cherokee Nation, to sue in the Court of Claims, for the purpose of submitting some remarks upon it and then letting it go back upon the Calendar and resume its place there.

The Chief Clerk read the bill by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the present consideration of the bill for the purpose indicated by the Senator from Indiana

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the amendment which I send to the desk be read.

The CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "treaty," in line 18, page 4, down to the end of line 21, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

He, the said Elias C. Boudinot, be, and he is hereby, authorized to bring suit in the Court of Claims against the United States Government to recover what may be due to him in justice and equity for the loss inflicted upon him by reason of said seizure, for an alleged violation of the internal-revenue laws, of his property, a to-bacco factory, its detention and damage thereto whilst under seizure, the value of the tobacco, material, and other personal property also seized, and the expenses to which he was subjected thereby.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, on the 24th day of March, 1879, more than one year ago, I had the honor to introduce into this body the bill now under consideration, it being a bill authorizing Elias C. Boudinot to bring suit in the Court of Claims for the alleged wrongful seizure of his property by the revenue officers of this Government. The Judiciary Committee has reported it back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute restricting the right of recovery in such suit to the amount realized to the Government on the sale of said property. The amendment which I have now offered is to the effect that if the claimant shows a right to recover at all, he shall be permitted to recover "what may be due to him in justice and equity for the loss inflicted upon him by reason of said seizure."

Sir, we have heard much of late of the Indian question. It appears in many forms. Generally, however, it arises in connection with the in many forms. Generally, however, it arises in connection with the mission of the white man to obtain what belongs to the Indian. I think I will show that it so arises in the matter under discussion. Elias C. Boudinot is a Cherokee Indian by birth and citizenskip. In his veins commingle in equal quantities the blood of the red man, his father, and of the white race, his mother's people. His life and his hopes have been with the people of his father. Advancing himself in education and in all the ways of civilization he has labored for a similar advancement for them. It has been my good fertune to have known him long and well. He is a man of high ability, with rare natural gifts and rich acquirements—a gentleman of culture and of broad progressive views.

and of broad, progressive views.

During the war of the rebellion the Cherokee Nation, following the example of its neighboring Commonwealths, was torn by internal dissensions; one party adhering to the Union and the other following the colors of the lost cause. When the war was over both parties appeared here seeking by treaty to place the nation on a favorable footing again with the Government. At the head of the delegation, known as the Southern Cherokees, appeared Colonel Boudinot. I had the honor to introduce him and the entire delegation to the President of the United States and to hear from his line a stream of President of the United States, and to hear from his lips a stream of the most touching eloquence as he addressed the Great Father and invoked for the whole Cherokee people a generous and beneficent policy. He said that he spoke for a people who simply aspired to pursue the arts of peaceful industry and wealth, and to educate their children into a higher plane of civilization. It was largely due to his influence that the treaty of July, 1866, between this Government and the Cherokee Nation was concluded. In fact the more liberal features were all his. He was anxious to induce his people to embark in trade and manufacturing. He also desired to secure for them the advantages of all the markets outside of their own territory for everything they had to sell. This was true statesmanship for his nation. He therefore obtained the insertion of article 10 into the treaty, which reads as follows:

Every Cherokee and freed person resident in the Cherokee Nation shall have the right to sell any products of his farm, including his or her live stock, or any merchandise or manufactured products, and to ship and drive the same to market without restraint, paying any tax thereon which is now or may be levied by the United States on the quantity sold outside of the Indian Territory.

By this clause Colonel Boudinot believed, as he had the clear right to believe, that he had secured to the citizens of the Cherokee Nation the great privilege, among others, of manufacturing for their own use any articles they pleased, and further that he had secured for them free access, without restraint, to the markets outside of their them free access, without restraint, to the markets outside of their nation for all their manufactured goods, subject only to such taxes as this Government levied on similar goods in its own markets. The believers in Indian progress and civilization hailed this provision of the treaty of 1866 as an immense step toward the fulfillment of their hopes and faith. Wise and benevolent people accepted it as a good omen for the future of the Indian and for our own frontier popula-Colonel Boudinot himself acted upon it at once, showing his absolute reliance on the honor of this Government and giving an example of enterprise and industry to his Cherokee countrymen. In 1867, about a year after the treaty went into effect, he erected a tobaccomanufactory in the Cherokee Nation and commenced the manufacture of tobacco. Rumors very soon reached him that he was likely to encounter the hostility of tobacco manufacturers in Saint Louis and eisewhere, who had up to that time enjoyed a monopoly of the to-bacco trade in the Indian Territory, selling tobacco to the Indians for three or four times as much as the Indians would have to pay for it if manufactured, under the treaty, in their own country. He promptly communicated with the Office of Internal Revenue and he received assurances that allayed his fears. The spirit of hostility, however, to Indian enterprise and advancement did not sleep. An act of Congress was procured, which became a law July 20, 1868, containing the following provision: elsewhere, who had up to that time enjoyed a monopoly of the to-

That the internal revenue laws imposing taxes on distilled spirits, fermented liquors, tobacco, snuff, and cigars, shall be held and construed to extend to such articles produced anywhere within the exterior boundaries of the United States, whether the same shall be within a collection district or not.

If "the exterior boundaries of the United States," the terms used in this act, do embrace, so far as the sovereign title is concerned, all the Indian territories, reservations, and lands set off, or rather spared he Indian territories, reservations, and lands set off, or rather spared the Indians out of what we have step by step taken from them, still I believe it is the first time in our history, or in the history of the world, where one nation has attempted to assess taxes for its own support on the citizens of another nation with which it had peaceful and friendly relations defined by treaty. If in fact, as has been decided by the Supreme Court, this act of Congress operates in the Indian country to levy and collect taxes, then this Government presents the pitiful spectacle of gathering an internal revenue from a small and powerless people, who are not American citizens, have no representation in making the laws by which they are taxed, are denied the ballot as much as if they were citizens of China, and cannot bring suits in our courts to obtain protection. And when this is also done in flain our courts to obtain protection. And when this is also done in fla-grant and confessed violation of a treaty stipulation, kicking it contemptuously out of our way, simply because the other party was too feeble to resent the miserable indignity, the attitude of this Govern-ment, on this phase of the Indian question at least, becomes a matter of wonder if not of praise.

Soon after the passage of this act of July, 1868, Colonel Boudinot became aware that the white man who, as usual, wanted to trade with the Indian, and in this instance it was the white manufacturer of tobacco wanting a monopoly of the trade in the Indian country, was at work to have the provisions of the act enforced in the Cherokee Nation. The spectacle of an Indian, the first of his race, engaged in manufacturing articles of use in the Indian country for his own people was not to be endured by the patriotic Indian trader on the Indian trader on the Indian trader of the country for his own people was not to be endured by the patriotic Indian trader on the Indian trader on the Indian trader on the Indian trader on the Indian trader of the Indian trader of the Indian trader on the Indian trader of the Indi Was it not a violent innovation upon the Indian trader's immemorial right to cheat and plunder the Indian? That trader thought so in this instance. He moved without delay, and with all his forces, and with all the evil traditions of centuries clinging to him, upon the official quarters of this Government. He had never before failed to find there all the rich and good things his heart desired. It remains to be seen whether he failed in this raid against treaty obligations and common honesty. When the note of alarm reached Boudinot he addressed the nearest revenue officer on the sub-ject. Here is his manly and frank letter to Major James Marr, then supervisor of internal revenue at Saint Louis, Missouri:

CHEROKEE NATION, November 20, 1868.

CHEROKEE NATION, November 20, 1868.

SIR: I am a citizen by birth of the Cherokee Nation of Indians, and am the owner of a tobacco factory in said nation. The tobacco I have sold in the Indian country is exempt by treaty from taxation. Such quantities as I have sold in the United States I have paid the tax upon, and still intend to do so upon every pound disposed of hereafter. It has been my custom to report all tobacco sent within the States, to the nearest assessor; who marks the same, and collects the tax when sold. I respectfully ask that the assessors for ithe southern district of Kansas, and those stationed at Carthage and Kansas City, Missouri, be instructed to permit the continuance of the practice until otherwise directed, with such additional regulations to prevent fraud as you may deem expedient.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. C. BOUDINOT.

Major James Marr, Supervisor Internal Revenue.

This letter does not sound as if it was written to cover fraud or fraudulent designs. A more upright tone of perfect integrity was never contained in any communication to the authorities of the Government. Major Marr forwarded it to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in this city, with his indorsement upon it, as follows:

Office Supervisor Internal Revenue,
Saint Louis, December 3, 1868.

Respectfully referred to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for decision as to how this tax can be collected. I believe Major Boudinot desires to pay the tax on all tobacco sold in the States, and I would recommend that the assessors and collectors and their deputies in the southwestern portion of the State be instructed to assess and collect this tax upon requiring Major Boudinot to report all tobacco to them that he intends offering for sale in this State. I am not exactly aware how this tax is to be collected, but if this is not contrary to the spirit of the law, I think it would be well to afford him this facility. Major Boudinot desires to pay this tax at Carthage and Kansas City, Missouri.

JAMES MARR. Supervisor

JAMES MARR, Supervisor. Here the question was plainly presented whether the act of Congress approved July 20, 1868, made any change in Boudinot's right under the treaty to manufacture and sell tobacco in the Indian Territory exempt from taxation. The question was put direct by Boudinot himself to the proper officers having the subject in charge. following explicit and binding answer was addressed by the Com-missioner of Internal Revenue to Major Marr, the supervisor at Saint Lonis:

Louis:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,

Washington, December 26, 1868.

Sir: I have received the letter of E. C. Boudinot, esq., dated Cherokee Nation,

November, 20, 1868, addressed to you, and by you referred to this office with the request that instructions be given to the assessor and collector in the southwest ern portion of the Statel of Kansas to assess and collect the tax on all tobacco manufactured by Mr. Boudinot in the Cherokee Nation and sent into the State for sale.

sale.

In reply I have to state that under the law now in force all taxes on tobacco must be paid by affixing stamps of such denominations and value as will cover the amount of tax to which the tobacco in question may be liable when sold or offered for sale in any of the States or Territories of the United States where collection districts are established and officers of internal revenue are appointed to collect the tax and see that the law is strictly administered.

No collection district is established over the Cheroke Nation, and no taxes are authorized to be assessed or collected under the internal revenue law upon goods manufactured and sold in the Cherokee Nation. But tobacco, snuff, and cigars manufactured within the Cherokee Nation and sent into the States for sale will be liable to seizure and forfeiture unless the same shall bear revenue-stamps denoting the payment of the tax.

liable to seizure and forfeiture unless the same shall bear revenue-stamps denoting the payment of the tax.

To secure his tobacco against such liability Mr. Boudinot must purchase and affix the stamps, and there can be no objection, under the circumstances, to the collector or deputy collector nearest to Mr. Boudinot's place of manufacture furnishing him with the amount of stamps he may require upon his paying for the same. Mr. Boudinot can affix to his tobacco labels and he can put upon it his/brands showing where and by whom it is manufactured.

This being done, and the stamps affixed, which the Government regards as the most important point, his tobacco will pass current in any of the States where he may desire to ship it, and will be free from any liability to seizure or detention.

If the collector should have any hesitation in furnishing Mr. Boudinot with stamps, upon application of Mr. Boudinot stating of whom he wishes to purchase stamps, instructions will be given.

I presume, however, that this letter, or a copy of it, sent to the collector, will be all that is needed to enable Mr. Boudinot to purchase stamps.

Yours, respectfully,

THOMAS HARLAND.

THOMAS HARLAND,

Acting Commissioner.

To show that this important ruling of the Commissioner was received and acted on, I submit the reply of Major Marr acknowledging its receipt. It reads as follows:

Office Supervisor Internal Revenue, January 4, 1869.

SIR: Your letter of the 26th of December last in relation to the manner in which tobacco manufactured in the Indian Territory can be sold within the limits of collection districts is received, and copies thereof have been sent to collectors in districts adjacent to the Indian Territory for their information. Under the instructions of the Commissioner all trouble in the premises will be surmounted, and Mr. Boudinot can go on with his business without molestation.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES MAPP.

JAMES MARR, Supervisor.

Hon. E. A. ROLLINS, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Washington, D. C.

To any ordinary mind this correspondence with the Revenue Office would seem to have clearly and conclusively settled all an Indian manufacturer's rights under the tenth article of the treaty of 1866. This correspondence was placed in Boudinot's possession by Major Marr, and he fondly believed that he had reached an end of all his troubles, and that he could go on with his business unmolested. The resources of the outside manufacturers and traders, however, were not exhausted. They knew that if they could obtain a construction compelling Boudinot or any other Indian manufacturer to pay the tax on manufactured articles at the factory in the Indian Territory the whole business would be broken up, and the right secured by the treaty to ship such articles to market without restraint would become a mockery and a snare. This, therefore, was the next point aimed at. Colonel Boudinot again appealed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for a decision.

He again appealed to that Government with which he has always kept honest and scrupulous faith. I can do no better than to lay his letter before the Senate:

Washington, D. C., February 20, 1869.

To the Commissioner of Internal Revenue:

By the terms of the tenth article of the Cherokee treaty of 1866, a citizen of the Cherokee Nation has a right to send any article manufactured in said nation to market without restraint. No tax is required upon any such article unless it is sold outside of territory of Mor tax is required upon any such article unless it is sold outside of territory of said nation.

I am engaged in the manufacture of tobacco in said nation, being a citizen thereof. There is but little market for it in the nation, and I wish to avail myself of the treaty stipulations to send it into the market of the country "without restraint." It is plain that this stipulation is defeated if I am required to pay the tax upon my tobacco before I start with it from the place of manufacture, or as soon as it crosses the line of the territory of the nation into the States.

No one manufacturing tobacco in the nation can pay the taxes on the same until he gets it into a market where he can anticipate the proceeds of the sale of the same. To require me or any one else to do so defeats at once the provisions of the treaty. Besides, by the terms of said article of the treaty a tax can only be levied upon what is actually sold outside of said nation. How can a proper tax be levied unless a sale is allowed outside of the boundaries of the nation? A proper construction of this article of the treaty would doubtless require means to be provided by which the amount of actual sales should be kept, and upon it the assessment be made; that is the wording and only correct meaning of the treaty if it was literally fulfilled. But I do not ask that this shall be done. I only desire to send my tobacco manufactured in said nation "to market without restraint." For that purpose I respectfully ask that the collectors and revenue officers of the collection district of Kansas—the third collection district of Arkansas—and the sixth district of Missouri, all of which border on the territory of said nation and are contignous to my place of manufacture, be instructed to receive into their custody such manufactured tobacco as I report to them, and that I have transit without restraint or molestation for the same to Baxter's Spring and Fort Scott, in Kansas; to Fort Smith, Fayetteville, and Bentonville, in Arkansas, and to Kansas City, Carth to Boudinot, made the following decision, again in his favor:

In response to the foregoing communication the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, on the 23d of February, 1869, in a letter addressed to Boudinot, made the following decision, again in his favor:

In a former correspondence between this office and yourself upon a similar subject attention was directed only to the provisions of section 107 of the act of July 20, 1868, imposing a tax on manufactured tobacco produced anywhere within the exterior boundaries of the United States, whether the same shall be within any collection district or not. It was then held by this office that, notwithstanding the language of said section, the tax could not be collected upon tobacco manufactured in the Indian country so long as it remains in said country; but upon its being brought within any collection district of the United States it would be liable to seizure and forfeiture unless it should be properly stamped, thus indicating that the tax imposed by law had been paid.

At that time attention was not called to the provision of the treaty above referred to. The construction of the statute then adopted seemed to be in conflict with the provisions of the treaty. Inasmuch as the treaty is the paramount law, the statute when in conflict must give way to it.

Although the treaty provides that every Cherokee and free person resident in the Cherokee Nation shall have the right to sell any product of his farm, including any merchandise or manufactured products, and to ship the same to market without restraint by paying any tax thereon which is or may be levied by the United States, it is nevertheless proper and reasonable that the Government of the United States, it is nevertheless proper and reasonable that the Government of the United States, it is nevertheless proper and reasonable that the Government of the United States, it is nevertheless proper and reasonable that the Government of the United States, it is nevertheless proper and reasonable that the Government of the United States, it is nevertheless proper and reasonable that the Government of the United States, it is nevertheless proper and reasonable that the Government of the United States, it is neverthel of manufacture, the name of the manufacturer, and be shipped to the care of the collector of the district in which the place of destination is situated, the tobacco upon arrival to go into and remain in the custody of the collector of said district until the tax thereon is paid, and provided further that timely notice is given such collector of the shipment of such tobacco, the notice indicating the quantity and description shipped, where shipped, and when its arrival may be expected, and the same must be shipped by the most direct route.

The observance of these provisions will probably save you annoyance, and secure to the Government its rights.

Here at last every question arising out of the treaty of 1866 and the law of 1868 was passed upon and closed by the authority of this Government. For more than two years and a half Boudinot had in the only possible mode sought to know exactly what his rights were. In a patient and respectful tone he had repeated his inquiries from in a patient and respectful tone he had repeated his inquiries from time to time, as new dangers threatened him, until it was finally and fully determined what he might lawfully do in the premises. Will any one say that his conduct could have been better, or that it ought to have been different? Will any one say that this Government had not concluded itself as to his right to manufacture and sell tobacco in the Indian Territory exempt from tax? Was it not also plainly decided that he had the right to ship manufactured tobacco without decided that he had the right to ship manufactured tobacco without restraint to the markets outside of that Territory, and to sell the same, first having paid the Government tax at certain designated points? What more or what else could any man do than to rely on the good faith of this Government under such circumstances? Is there a gentleman on this floor who would not have felt perfectly secure in proceeding with a business thus guaranteed and sheltered under the repeated decisions of the proper Department of his Government? Boudinot, confident that all controversy was over, pushed forward in his enterprise and invested almost everything he had to make it a success. We will see directly what measure of success awaited him.

Sir, the official history of this case was made thus far while Mr. Rollins was Commissioner of Internal Revenue. It is due to that officer to say that he kept his official word with Boudinot and maintained the integrity of his decisions. A change, however, came over this country in March, 1869, and in no branch of the public service was that change more marked than in the administration of the internal-revenue laws. During that month Mr. Rollins was superseded by Columbus Delano, and it soon became apparent that a new era had in fact been inaugurated. Confining myself, however, to the subject immediately under discussion I find that Boudinot was not molested for a period of about five months under the new order of things. During that time he was proceeding with his business strictly in conformity with the rulings and instructions of the Internal Revenue Office, when all of a sudden, on the 13th of August, 1869, and without notice, the following peremptory letter was issued from that office:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE, Washington, August 13 1869.

Washington, August 13 1869.

Sir: I am informed that for the purpose of avoiding the tax imposed upon manufactured tobacco parties have established factories in the Indian territories, in some cases just across the boundary-lines, where tobacco is manufactured on which no tax is paid, and it is further intimated to me that this tobacco is intended to be sold, at least large portions of it, in the States adjoining the Indian territories. It is my purpose, if possible, to break up this illegal manufacture and sale of tobacco, and as a first step toward this you are authorized and instructed to seize every pound of manufactured tobacco found outside of a factory or bonded warehouse in your district that does not bear the evidence of having paid the tax to which it is liable, and take the proper steps for its confiscation.

You will also present to the United States district attorney for prosecution, for violation of section 71, act of July 20, 1868, all persons in your district who sell, offer for sale, or have in their possession, not in a factory or bonded warehouse, any manufactured tobacco on which the tax has not been paid as required by law. In a few days I shall probably write to you further on this subject.

Very respectfully,

J. W. DOUGLASS,

J. W. DOUGLASS, Acting Commissioner.

R. W. WISHARD, Esq., Collector Third District, Dardanelle, Arkansas.

In this remarkable document the treaty right to manufacture tobacco in the Indian Territory is utterly ignored. It is written as if bacco in the Indian Territory is utterly ignored. It is written as if no such treaty existed. The acting Commissioner speaks of parties having established tobacco factories in the Indian country in order to avoid the tax imposed on manufactured tobacco, when in point of fact that is exactly what the treaty provides may be done. He denounces such manufacture as illegal, when by the treaty of 1866 it is expressly legalized. He gravely says that "it is further intimated" to him "that this tobacco is intended to be sold, at least large portions of it, in the States adjoining the Indian Territories." The treaty guaranteed the right to sell such tobacco outside of the Indian Territory in so many words, and the Internal Revenue Office had instructed Bondingt how to proceed under that provision. The acting Commis-Boudinot how to proceed under that provision. The acting Commissioner authorized and instructed the collector of the third Arkansas sioner authorized and instructed the collector of the third Arkansas district to seize and confiscate every pound of manufactured tobacco found in his district outside of a factory or bonded warehouse on which the tax had not already been paid. He did this in the face of the records of his own office, which showed him that within less than six months before he issued this outrageous order Boudinot had received official permission to ship his manufactured tobacco without previous payment of the tax to Baxter Springs and Fort Scott, in Kansas; Fort Smith, Fayetteville, and Bentonville, in Arkansas; and to Kansas City, Carthage, and Nosho, in Missouri. The conditions to Kansas City, Carthage, and Neosho, in Missouri. The conditions on which such shipments were to be made are contained in the decision of the Commissioner of February 23, 1869, already cited. Every pound of tobacco shipped under this license of the Government was made liable to seizure and confiscation by the order of August 13, 1869, if it was found in the very places where Boudinot was authorized to send it.

And as if to reach a climax of absurdity and outrage, the Commissioner, in closing this order, instructs his collector to see to it that Boudinot is criminally prosecuted for doing precisely what he had the written authority of the Government of the United States to do. Let no one pretend, in defense of this and subsequent proceedings, that Boudinot ever sold, offered for sale, or in any manner tried to dispose of manufactured tobacco outside of the Indian Territory without the payment of the Government tax. No such charge was ever made against him. No such suspicion, or the faintest trace of it, ever attached to him. He paid tax on every ounce he ever offered to sell in the States and his worst appears payer said or intimated otherwise. the States, and his worst enemy never said or intimated otherwise. It has never been pretended in any quarter that he defrauded the Government or that he ever owed it a dollar which he did not pay. This ernment or that he ever owed it a dollar which he did not pay. Thislast blow, therefore, was aimed at him in the mere wanton brutality, of power, inspired, I have no doubt, by the corrupt influences which pervaded the revenue service in the States of Missouri, Arkansas, and Kansas. Of course there was nothing left for the poor Indian in this instance except to again turn his troubled face toward Washington, and to again appeal to the Government for justice and security for himself and his property. Weary of the struggle single-handed and alone, he at this time employed distinguished counsel to aid him. In response to their able and conclusive arguments they received the response to their able and conclusive arguments they received the following very important communication:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE, Washington, October 21, 1869.

Washington, October 21, 1869.

Gentlemen: This office does not propose to apply, within the territories of the Cherokee Nation, the revenue laws relating to tobacco and spirits produced there; but holds that section 107 of the act of July 20, 1868, applies to the articles themselves, and will be enforced when those articles are carried into the States or Territories of the United States for sale. The grounds of this determination, and the instructions given to the revenue officers, are more fully explained by the accompanying memorandum of opinion by Judge James, to whom the question was originally referred.

Very respectfully,

C. DELANO, Commissioner.

C. DELANO, Commissioner.

Messrs. Pike & Johnson, Counselors at Law.

The memorandum of opinion referred to in the foregoing letter of Commissioner Delano was in these words:

In the matter of taxes on tobacco produced in the Territory of the Cherokee-Nation.

Sign: I have examined the argument of Colonel Elias C. Boudinot, a citizen of the Cherokee Nation, against the collection within its territory of taxes upon tobaccomanufactured there, and have the honor to make the following reply:

The question, whether section 107 of the act of 20th July, 1869, intended that the revenue laws relating to tobacco and spirits produced in "the Indian country" should be extended into that country and there enforced, was submitted to me by yourself about the 12th day of August last. I had the honor to advise you, that without any reference to existing treaties, it was apparent on the face of the statute itself that Congress did not intend to apply the revenue laws to the Indian country itself, but to the articles produced there, and that the application could be made only to such part of these manufactures as might be carried thence into the States or Territories of the United States. The action of your office was afterward taken in accordance with this advice, and instructions to that effect were sent, as I was informed, to the revenue officers of Kansas, Missouri, and Texas.

Very respectfully,

Very respectfully,

CHARLES P. JAMES, Counselor at Law.

Hon. Columbus Delano, Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Sir, it will be seen from this decision that the position of the acting Commissioner of Angust 13, 1869, was abandoned, and the ground taken by Mr. Rollins was affirmed. The right to manufacture and sell tobacco in the Indian Territory, exempt from taxation, is here clearly and expressly recognized. The right to sell such manufactured tobacco outside of the Indian Territory is also recognized, subject simply to the payment of taxes. So well satisfied on this point was Solicitor James that he declares it "apparent on the face of the statute itself (act of July, 1868) that Congress did not intend to apply the revenue laws to the Indian country itself, but to the articles produced there, and that the application could be made only to such part of these manufactures as might be carried thence into the States or Territories of the United States."

It would seem to be trifling with the time and the intelligence of Sir, it will be seen from this decision that the position of the act-

It would seem to be trifling with the time and the intelligence of the Senate to dwell a single moment on the explicit and conclusive character of this language. Boudinot therefore thought himself once more secure and proceeded with his business. He had an unmolested career this time of about sixty days. Sixty days after Commissioner Delano and Solicitor James had joined in the foregoing construction of the statute and the treaty, John McDonald, then a supervisor, and John A. Joyce, then an agent in the internal-revenue service, fell upon Boudinot's entire establishment in the Indian country and upon all his tobacco wherever it was found.

On the 20th day of December, 1869, in what was then thought a sort of natural outbreak of official rascality, these two revenue officers seized, as if subject to the internal-revenue laws, Boudinot's tobacco seized, as it subject to the internal-revenue laws, Boudinot's totaccomanufactory, and everything pertaining to it. They did not only this but they arrested him as a criminal charged with violating the revenue laws in the Indian country. This being done in the face of the decision of October 21, 1869, on which the ink was hardly dry, Boudinot and his counsel felt sure that the act would be disavowed by Commissioner Delano the moment his attention was called to it. They reasoned that as an honest man, or even desiring to be thought one, he could not do otherwise. He had said in so many words that he did "not propose to apply within the Territories of the Cherokee Nation the revenue laws relating to tobacco and spirits produced there;" and there never was a suspicion, much less a charge, verbally or in writing, against Boudinot for selling an ounce of tobacco outside of the Indian Territory on which the tax was unpaid. No notice whatever had been given to Boudinot or his counsel of a change in the ruling of the Commissioner. No order had been made embracing the Indian country in a collection district, but the Commissioner had expressly said he would do nothing of that kind. Boudinot's property could not have been seized for the non-payment of taxes, because none had ever been assed against him in the Indian country. He was under arrest for violating the United States internal revenue laws in the Indian country when in fact he had carefully complied with these laws as they had, up to this point, been interpreted to him by the Government which enacted them. No wonder, therefore, that Boudinot's counsel, Messrs. Pike & Johnson, called with confidence on the Commissioner for the release of his person and his property. On December 31, 1869, they addressed that officer upon the subject, citing his former ruling, and asking immediate action. Among other things they said:

and asking immediate action. Among other things they said:

We therefore most respectfully request that you will direct the immediate release of all manufactured and other tobacco and other material seized at the factory of Elias C. Boudinot, in the Cherokee Nation, and the restoration to him of everything seized, and that explicit directions and instructions be sent to Supervisor McDonald, in accordance with the decision communicated to us on the 21st of October. For, as the seizure was in direct contempt of that decision and of your instructions, we respectfully submit that the wrong and injury inflicted by this act of disobedience ought not to be suffered to continue a day longer than is unavoidable, for in such a case to delay justice is almost to deny it.

We have the honor to be, most respectfully, your obedient servants, Counselors, &c.

To this urgent appeal for justice under the law as construed by the Commissioner himself, no answer was made. January 1, 1870, Messrs. Pike & Johnson addressed another communication to the Commissioner on this subject, to which they received no answer. Finally, January 7, 1870, they wrote him as follows:

Washington, January 7, 1870.

Sir: We are advised by a letter from Mr. E. C. Boudinot, dated at Van Buren, Arkansas, on the 25th of December last, that Supervisor McDonald had caused him to be arrested and held in custody for numerous alleged violations of the internal-revenue laws within the Indian country.

Fully aware of his rights and of the illegality of all the proceedings of the supervisor, Mr. Boudinot will not give bail, and, as a citizen of the Cherokee Nation and not of the United States, appeals to the Executive Department of the Government for protection under the solemn guarantees of repeated treaties, against violence that borrows the forms of law, to abuse them for what he believes sinister purposes.

ment for protection under the solemn guarantees of repeated treaties, against violence that borrows the forms of law, to abuse them for what he believes sinister purposes.

We are quite certain that he cannot have been charged with any violation of the revenue laws outside of the limits of the Indian country. Whether it be so or not, we suppose the supervisor will have informed you.

And, being a Cherokee, Mr. Boudinot is unlawfully and criminally deprived of his liberty, if charged only with violations of those laws within the Indian country. For, first, the Cherokee treaty is the supreme law, in this respect, of the land, which no act of Congress can annul; and under it he cannot have committed any effense against those laws in the Indian country, in which he has the right to sell any tobacco he may manufacture in the Cherokee country without paying any tax or duty upon it to the United States.

And, second, even if the intention of Congress was to extand the revenue laws over the Indian country, Mr. Boudinot can have committed no criminal offense against them, because no regulation of the Treasury Department, or order of the Executive, or decision of the courts, has warned him of the necessity of conforming to those laws within that country; but, on the contrary, your predecessor directed that he should be required to stamp only such quantities of tobacco as he might actually sell within the States and Territories, and when you changed that, you required him to pay the tax only on so much ashe should carry from the Cherokee country into the States and Territories for sale. So that, if he has committed any offense, he has done it by conforming to your own opinion and decision, and relying upon your assurance, implied in law, and as clearly given in fact as if expressed, that he was not required by any law to conform to the requirements of the revenue laws within the Cherokee Nation.

If it is alleged that he has violated your regulations or the law, by doing anything forbidden, or omitting anything required,

Hon. Columbus Delano, Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

A verbal response was at last extorted from the Commissioner to these several earnest communications. He barely said that he had these several earnest communications. He barely said that he had reversed his former decision, and that he sustained McDonald and Joyce in their seizure of Boudinot's property, and their arrest of his person. He did not dare to put such an indescribable outrage in writing, and there is now no record of the reasons which led him to overrule his well-considered interpretation of the law, and thus to inflict total pecuniary ruin on an unoffending, law-abiding man. Not a whisper of intimation was given to Boudinot of the impending change. It was made without a note of warning, and as no explanation was possible, none was ever attempted. Nearly a month after he had indorsed the conduct of McDonald and Joyce, on the 25th of January, 1870, he issued an order extending the internal-revenue laws January, 1870, he issued an order extending the internal-revenue laws of the United States into the Indian Territory, and provided by certain regulations for the assessment and collection of taxes therein. This was not only the first official notification, but the first notice of any kind that the laws of the United States for the collection of taxes on manufactured goods would be applied and enforced in the Indian country. Sir, we have all heard of ambuscades in war. We have all read of armies destroyed and brave men cut to pieces, misled by treachery. Here, however, was a legal ambuscade, extending over three years in length, into which Boudinot was lured by the solemn assurances of this Government, from time to time made, that there was no danger ahead, that no pitfalls awaited him, and that no en-emy lurked in his path. He followed these assurances as implicitly as the traveler in the wilderness ever followed his trusted guide, as the traveler in the wilderness ever followed his trusted guide, until, at a given point, without so much warning as a rustling leaf, or "the sound of their light-springing footsteps," McDonald, Joyce, and Delano closed in upon him, robbed him of all he had, and left him, as they thought, dead by the wayside. The question now is whether we shall pass him by, following the example of the priests and Levites on a certain notable occasion, or shall we not rather pour some oil into his wounds which remain unhealed even at this late day?

When Boudinot found that Delano sustained the revenue marauders by whom his property had been seized and himself arrested, his next step was to make his appeal directly to the Secretary of the Treasury. As I intend to make a complete record of this most remarkable case for the use of the historian, and as I know of no better material for the columns of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD than this apeal of a wronged and plundered ward of the nation, I will ask the peal of a wronged and pundered ward of the Clerk to read it entire in the hearing of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 26, 1870.

Hon. GEORGE S. BOUTWELL:

Washington, D. C., January 26, 1870.

Hon. George S. Boutwell:

As a citizen of the Cherokee Nation, born a Cherokee, and resident in the Cherokee country, and as personally and gravely interested in the question. I appeal to you from the decision and action of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in respect to the collection within the Cherokee country of the tax upon tobacco manufactured there by me, and respectfully request your consideration of and judgment upon these questions:

First. Whether under the tenth article of the treaty of 19th July, 1866, a Cherokee Indian manufacturing tobacco within the Cherokee country can, under the pretense that section 107 of the act of 1868, imposing taxes on distilled spirits, tobacco, &c., applies to the Indian country, be compelled to pay any tax to the United States on other or more of the tobacco manufactured by him than he may sell beyond the limits of the Indian Territory?

Second. Whether as to such tobacco so manufactured in the Cherokee country by him a Cherokee Indian is punishable for not observing the provisions of the revenue laws when he takes none at all outside of the Indian Territory or when he pays the taxes required on all that he does carry beyond those limits?

Third. Whether a Cherokee Indian, residing in the Cherokee country, is liable to pay the tax on tobacco manufactured by him, which was grown in a State and purchased by him, when manufactured and sold by him in the Cherokee Nation and not elsewhere, and for use and consumption in the Indian Territory?

A more full statement of the case and its circumstances in which these questions arise, and referring to some charges which may seem to you to deserve to be inquired into, accompanies this letter. I most respectfully invite your attention to it, and have the honor to request that the foregoing questions, being of the utmost gravity and importance, may be submitted to the Attorney-General for his decision, with the arguments herewith presented.

With the utmost respect, your obedient servant,

ELIAS C. BOUDINOT.

SIR: The undersigned, Elias C. Boudiaot, the son of a Cherokee, born a Cherokee Indian, and not by birth or naturalization a citizen of the United States, but a citizen of and resident in the Cherokee Nation, west of Arkansas, respectfully asks your careful consideration of a matter which affects and concerns the good faith and honor of the United States and the rights guaranteed by them by solemn treaty to a domestic nation under their protection.

It has always been a cherished object of the wise and benevolent statesmen of the United States to foster the advancing civilization of the Cherokees and the neighboring tribes that own and inhabit the country lying between Arkansas and New Mexico, and to encourage them to produce and manufacture the articles of common use which their daily needs require. And they have always sought to protect all the Indian tribes against the rapacity of white traders who have in all time plundered them of their substance.

Nor have the United States ever exercised or stipulated for the right of levying taxes or duties of excise in any part of the Indian country, or sent tax gatherers among the Indians. Neither has any statesman or officer of the Government until now imagined that any such power could be exercised rightfully, nor has it ever been even proposed in the Congress of the United States that it should be exercised.

been even proposed in the Congress of the United States that it should be exercised.

In pursuance of which settled, uniform, wise, and just policy, when the United States, on the 19th day of July, 1866, treated with "the Cherokee Nation of Indians" as an independent State and people, reaffirming and declaring in full force the provisions of all former treaties with the same, it was, by article 10 of that treaty, stipulated and solemnly agreed as follows:

"Every Cherokee and freed person resident in the Cherokee Nation shall have the right to sell any products of his farm, including his or her live stock, or any merchandise or manufactured products, and ship and drive the same to market without restraint, paying any tax thereon which is now or may be levied by the United States on the quantity sold outside of the Indian Territory."

Which provision is, as the Supreme Court of the United States has decided, to be construed against the United States if its meaning be in any manner doubtful or ambiguous. So construed, it certainly gives to the Cherokees the right to manufacture for their own use and consumption of other Indians anywhere in the Indian Territory, not their own products only but any other products wherever produced, in the United States or even abroad, and it does clearly stipulate that no tax shall be levied on any such manufactured products except on so much and such quantities of the same as may be sold beyond the limits of the Indian Territory.

tory.

If products not of the Indian country are imported into it and manufactured there they will of course pay such tax or duty on the raw product, either directly or indirectly, as consumers of the same in the States and Territories do; and as there is no tax or duty levied on raw tobacco in the leaf they have the same right to purchase and manufacture that without paying a duty or tax as they would have to manufacture cotton or wool of the production of the United States.

The honorable Secretary of the Treasury will not fail to bear it in mind that the tax or duty on manufactured tobacco is, both in theory and effect, an indirect tax, paid by the manufacturer but advanced by him for and ultimately reimbursed by the consumer, being added to the price which he pays for it. So that to compel the Indian people to use these articles manufactured in the States, on which the Government levies a tax or excise duty, levying none on the unmanufactured article, would be to tax the Indians for the support of the Government of the United States, and to take from them every inducement to manufacture for themselves.

The United States speak by article 10 of the treaty of 1866, and if they intended to limit the "merchandise and manufactured products" mentioned in it, to such merchandise and such products only as may be produced in the Cherokee country, and to exclude those produced elsewhere and manufactured there, it was in their power to express themselves more clearly, and in such words that their intention should be unmistakable; wherefore no such limitation can be added by construction in favor of the United States.

It is a vague and unfounded notion that the revenue laws of the United States are defrauded if the Indians are allowed to purchase tobacco in the adjoining States and manufacture it for their own consumption. For the revenue cannot rightfully be increased by levying a direct or indirect tax on the Indians against their will. It would be quite as sound a notion to imagine that the revenue was defrauded by the non-use of stamps in their business transactions.

The undersigned respectfully represents that in consequence of and relying upon the said article of said treaty, he some time since, in partnership with Stand Watie, also a Cherokee Indian, citizen, and resident of the Cherokee Nation, established a manufactory of tobacco in the Cherokee contry, purchasing the raw tobacco brought to him from any quarter and manufactured tobacco that has ever gone from his factory and been sold beyond the limits of the Indian, enabling them to purchase some factured to p try, under section 107 of the act of 1868 in regard to the taxation of spirits, tobacco, &cc.

Fearing which the undersigned, on the 7th day of October, 1869, addressed to the honorable Commissioner of Internal Revenue an argument against such threatened action, in which he endeavored to show that it would be contrary to article 10 of the treaty of 1866 and without warrant in the legislation of Congress, as well as utterly inconsistent with the treaty relations between the United States and the Cherokees.

A copy of which argument is presented with his petition, and the undersigned respectfully asks for it your consideration. And in addition to what is there said in regard to the said section 107, he invites your attention to this:

That this section extends the internal revenue laws, imposing taxes on distilled spirits, fermented liquors, tobacco, snuff, and cigars, to such articles produced anywhere (not such articles manufactured from corn, wheat, rye, nait, and raw tobacco grown or produced anywhere) within the exterior boundaries of the United States. "Such articles" in this law evidently means the manufactured articles, which would be equally taxed although the raw products from which they are manufactured came from Canada and Europe.

But if this section 107 is to be so construed as to levy a tax on such articles, wherever manufactured, then, as it would be in direct violation of article 10 of the treaty to extend it to the Cherokee country, it must be so construed, if possible, as not to do so; and as it is only when sold or removed for consumption and use that tobacco, smuff, &c., are taxable by the act of 1868, it must be held to mean that such articles, manufactured in the Cherokee country, are taxable when sold outside of that country in a State or Territory or removed into such State or Territory for consumption and use.

The nudersigned further represents that on the 21st day of October 1869 in try in a State or Territory or removed into such State or Territory for consumption and use.

The undersigned further represents that on the 21st day of October, 1869, in response to the said argument the Commissioner of Internal Revenue declared by letter to the attorneys of the undersigned that the Office of Internal Revenue did not propose to apply, within the territories of the Cherokee Nation, the revenue laws relating to tobacco and spirits produced there; but that it held that section 107 aforesaid applied to the articles themselves, and would be enforced when those articles should be carried into the States or Territories of the United States for sale. And he stated that the grounds of this determination and the instructions given to the revenue officers were more fully explained by an accompanying memorandum of opinion by Judge James, to whom the question was originally referred.

In which opinion Judge James said that the question presented by the undersigned had been submitted to him by the Commissioner what without any reference to existing treaties, it was apparent on the face of the statute itself that Congress did not intend to apply the revenue laws to the Indian country itself, but to the articles produced there, and that the application could be made only to such part of these manufactures as might be carried thence into the States or Territories of the United States." And he said that the action of the Office of Internal Revenue was afterward taken in accordance with that advice, and instructions to that effect sent, as he was informed, to the revenue officers of Kansas, Missouri, and Texas.

Copies of which letter and opinion are presented herewith, and the undersigned asks for them your consideration, because what has since occurred gives them peculiar significance.

asks for them your consideration, because what has since occurred gives them peculiar significance.

For, notwithstanding this explicit decision and the instructions, real or pretended, mentioned in the letter of the Commissioner, the supervisor of internal revenne for Arkansas did, on or about the 22d of December, 1869, acting by the counsel and advice of some agent of the said office, enter the Indian country, and in the Cherokee country violently seize the said factory of the undersigned and carry away all the manufactured tobacco found, there into the State of Arkansas, and there cause it to be libeled; and did also immediately thereafter cause the undersigned to be arrested upon a charge of violating the revenue laws and to be committed to custody to answer the same, by the United States commissioner for the western district of Arkansas, not upon any allegation or charge as ground of either seizure or arrest that the undersigned had sold any manufactured tobacco outside of the Indian Territory without paying the tax on it, but upon the charge that he had not complied with the provisions of the law within the Cherokee country upon tobacco there manufactured by him.

And he understands also that the stores in the Cherokee and Creek country have been visited by the same authority and all tobacco over the quantity of ten pounds in each seized and carried away, even when the proprietor of such store and the owner of the tobacco was an Indian.

Information of which seizure being given to the Commissioner, he authorized the release of the tobacco and factory of the undersigned upon condition that he should execute bond, which he has not done.

The adersigned also states that when the said seizure was made he exhibited to the supervisor a copy of the said decision of the Commissioner, thinking that it would be respected; but the said supervisor told him that he saw that when he was in Washington in October; that it was sent to the attorneys of the undersigned only to quiet their complaints, and that at the same time the Commissioner was urging him to hasten back and make the seizure; which statements were by the attorneys of the undersigned communicated to the Commissioner, and they were afterward informed by him that the letter in regard to these statements had been referred to the supervisor testified, upon the examination of other parties before the commissioner for the western district of Arkansas, he admitted that he made such statements, but said that he had not seen the said decision of Commissioner Delano until it was shown to him by the undersigned, and that his former statement that he had done so was false; but he averred then and avers still that the said seizure was so made in virtue of instructions in writing from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and from the President.

And the Commissioner now informs the undersigned that he has wholly recalled his said decision, and he has permitted public information to be given that the revenue officers of the adjoining district are to be instructed to enforce the revenue in the Indian country, he being of opinion now that even tobacco produced in the Indian country, or in the Cherokee Nation, cannot be manufactured and sold there without payment of the tax upon it, under the act of 1868.

And the said Commissioner has distinctly informed the undersigned that his purpose is to deprive him of any advantage that he may have over dealers in tobacco in Saint Louis and elsewhere, by compelling him to pay the tax on all the tobacco he may manufacture, which satisfies the undersigned of that which he had reason to be believe before, to wit, that the proceedings taken against him were prompted by the said dealers, and are in their interest, which is thus preferred to the faith of treaties and to the interest and advantage of the Indians, of whom the United States claim to be the guardian.

The undersigned respectfully submits that altho predecessor.

And it has been still more unusual to assure a party that particular instructions have been given, if in fact they have never been given at all, as the undersigned understands to be the case in regard to the instructions spoken of in the said letter of 21st of October, 1869.

The undersigned will not insult the Secretary of the Treasury by inquiring whether the treaty with the Cherokees is or is not part of the supreme law of the land, or whether, when two laws conflict, that which is supreme must or must not

But he respectfully submits that the treaty and section 107 of the law of 1868, are entirely reconcilable with each other; and that the legal adviser of the Commissioner was in the right when he treated the question as one which admitted of no doubt.

Nothing is so odious as the oppression of a citizen by his government, contrary to its own laws, except the oppression of an ally or a ward. The action of the Commissioner's subordinates, now fully sanctioned by him, is an invasion of the rights of the Cherokee people, the wanton and inexcusable violation of a trary and of the good faith of the Government, and most oppressive, injurious, and unjust in respect to the undersigned, whose property has been seized and carried away, and his personal liberty violated, and he accused as a public criminal, because he has exercised rights guaranteed to him by the plain and unmistakable language of a treaty.

exercised rights guaranteed to him by the plain and unmistakable language of a treaty.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has to-day published an order appointing officers to enforce the revenue laws, as to distilled liquors and tobacco in the Indian country, which will compel the payment of a tax even upon tobacco grown in the Cherokee country and manufactured there, though never taken beyond that country for sale. That is a direct and flagrant violation of the tenth article of the treaty of 1866, by which that article is utterly annihilated, and this upon the naked ground that the language of section 107 of the act of 1866, seems to be broad enough to warrant it.

Neither was it the object of that article to give the Cherokees the right of selling articles of produce or manufacture within their own country, without needing to have it guaranteed by treaty. The United States have no more right to send tax-gatherers into the Cherokee country than into Canada. The Cherokees have the same right to manufacture for their own use any thing that they produce or that they purchase anywhere in the world, as the Canadians have; as much right to buy tobacco and manufacture it for sale in their country as to purchase wool and cotton and manufacture that. Once in their country without violation of any law of the United States, the tobacco, like the wool or cotton, is theirs, and beyond the reach of the revenue laws of the United States, which can no more tax it, when manufactured, in their hands, in their own country, than they could tax the coat or the shirt manufactured by them from the wool or cotton.

The undersigned submits that it is an immense exercise of power on the part of the mere head of a bureau or an office, without even taking the opinion of the chief law officer of the Government, and against the opinion of his own legal adviser, to undertake by a simple order to revolutionize all the relations between the Government for eighty years.

The object of the tenth article of the treaty was to secure to Cheroke in their own country. For it is well known that when any article of consumption is taxed with an indirect tax, the consumer pays much more than the tax, in addition to the costs. He pays an additional tax or toll to every one through whose hands it passes, and the tax laid by the Government is always the pretext for private extortion.

rate extortion.

The undersigned has ample reason to be satisfied, from the declarations of the Commissioner himself, and otherwise, that the persecution and violent injustice to which he is subjected, and under which he still suffers are for the sole purpose of preventing competition in the Indian country, with those who deal in tobacco outside its limits, and to compel all Indians to pay tax to the Government on all the tobacco they use. How worthy of the Government it will be to become the instrument by which this perpetual extortion upon its wards is to be effected, and to permit its powers to be perverted and abused for the purpose of augmenting the gains of combinations of individuals, the undersigned prays the honorable Secretary of the Treasury to consider.

For all which he appeals from the action and decision of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and as he cannot speedily have judicial action and decision, he prays that the opinion of the Attorney-General may be taken upon the questions presented herewith; and that the violation of his rights of property and liberty may be made to cease.

be made to cease.
Respectfully submitted.

ELIAS C. BOUDINOT.

Hon. George S. Boutwell, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. VOORHEES. This powerful and unanswerable appeal was overruled, and the work of confiscation and false imprisonment was left to Boudinot's factory and all his tobacco were libeled in the United States district court for the western district of Arkansas. They were declared forfeited by the court, and everything was sold. Pending these proceedings, however, Boudinot proposed to the Commissioner, as the record shows, that if he was allowed to resume his business he would thereafter comply in the Indian country with all the regulations respecting the collection of taxes on tobacco in the United States; and further, that he would pay the revenue tax on all the untaxed tobacco he had already sold in the Indian country, whenever the courts should decide that such a tax was due. This offer was rejected in the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE, Washington, February 9, 1870.

Washington, February 9, 1870.

Sir: I have considered the proposition of E. C. Boudinot, presented through you, to compromise his liabilities to the United States for having manufactured and sold tobacco in violation of all the requirements of the act of July 20, 1868, relating thereto, and declined to accept it.

I shall be obliged to you if you will inform Mr. Boudinot of this result of his proposition, or give me his address that I may so advise him.

Very respectfully,

C. DELANO, Commissioner.

Hon. A. McDonald, United States Senator.

When it is remembered, as it always will be, that Boudinot had not manufactured or sold a single pound of tobacco except in strict ac-cordance with Delano's own construction of the law, this letter of the Commissioner simply adds an unprovoked insult to former in-juries. If Boudinot had violated the requirements of the act of July 20, 1868, he had done so by following the express instructions of the Commissioner, and this fact the Commissioner well knew when he wrote the foregoing false and insincere communication.

From the adverse judgment rendered in the district court for the western district of Arkansas, Bondinot prosecuted his writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States. He thought that a treaty could not be abrogated by an act of Congress, and he thought, moreover, that the act of July 20, 1868, showed on its face that it did not conflict with the treaty of 1866. In these views he was supported, not only by the repeated decisions of the highest revenue afficials. not only by the repeated decisions of the highest revenue officials, but also by many of the foremost legal minds in the country. The Supreme Court, however, reached a different conclusion, and held that the act of Congress of July 20, 1868, extending the internal-revenue laws to the exterior boundaries of the United States, annulled the tenth article of the treaty of July, 1866, with the Cherokee Nation, "as if the treaty were not an element to be considered." I am not about to assail this surprising decision. It is not at all necessary for me to do so. In fact I have no inclination in that direction, for I doubt not it was reached with conscientious deliberation. It may not be improper, however, to point out some circumstances which

Of the nine judges, there being then a full bench, but six took part in the decision of the case. Chief-Justice Chase and Justices Nelson and Field were absent. Of the six judges who heard the argument, four rendered the opinion of the court, while Justices Bradley and Davis joined in a dissenting opinion. It will thus be seen that the decision was in reality made by a minority of the court. These facts all appear from the decision itself, which is found in 11 Wallace, page 116. I am tempted to read from the dissenting oninion to show what I am tempted to read from the dissenting opinion to show what powerful reasons Boudinot had for believing that he was in the right. It was delivered by Justice Bradley, with whom concurred Justice Davis, now the distinguished and very able Senator from Illinois:

In my judgment-

Says Justice Bradley-

it was not the intention of Congress to extend the internal-revenue law to the Indian Territory. That Territory is an exempt jurisdiction. While the United States has not relinquished its power to make such regulations as it may deem necessary in relation to that Territory, and while Congress has occasionally passed laws affecting it, yet by repeated treaties the Government has in effect stipulated that in all ordinary cases the Indian populations shall be autonomies, invested with the power to make and execute all laws for their domestic government. Such being the case, all laws of a general character passed by Congress will be considered as not applying to the Indian Territory, unless expressly mentioned. An express law, creating certain special rights and privileges, is held never to be repealed by implication by any subsequent law couched in general terms, nor by any express repeal of all laws inconsistent with such general law, unless the language be such as clearly to indicate the intention of the Legislature to effect such repeal.

In the case before the court I hold that there is nothing to indicate such a legislative intent. The language used is nothing but general language, imposing a general system of requirements and penaltics on the whole country. Had it been the intent of Congress to include the Indian Territory, it would have been very easy to say so. Not having said so, I hold that the presumption is that Congress did not intend to include it.

The case before us is, besides, a peculiar one. The exempt jurisdiction here depends on a solemn treaty entered into between the United States Government and the Cherokee Nation, in which the good faith of the Government is involved and not on a mere municipal law. It is conceded that the law in question cannot be extended to the Indian Territory without an implied abrogation of the treaty protanto. And the opinion of the court goes upon the principle that Congress has the power to supersede the provisions of a treaty. In such a case there are peculiar reasons for applying with great strictness the rule that the exempt jurisdiction must be expressly mentioned in order to be effected.

To my mind, sir, this reasoning is overwhelming and conclusive.

To my mind, sir, this reasoning is overwhelming and conclusive. There is a strange and indeed a painful contrast between it and that which sustains the decision of the court. The following strain of argument in the body of the decision on page 621, I confess struck me with amazement. Speaking of the act of Congress of July, 1868, the court says:

As before remarked, it extends the revenue laws over the Indian territories only as to liquors and tobacco. In all other respects the Indians in those territories are exempt. As regards those articles only the same duties are exacted as from our own citizens. The burden must rest somewhere. Revenue is indispensable to meet the public necessities. Is it unreasonable that this small portion of it shall rest upon these Indians?

This is strange language: "The burden must rest somewhere!" That is true, but I think this is the first time in American history where it has been claimed that the burden of taxation should be imposed upon a people without representation, without voice in legislation, denied the ballot, and ostracized from every right of citizenship. The tax-gatherer in the midst of a people who have no right to vote is an emblem of despotism. A free ballot must be given to every people who pay taxes, or they are at once slaves.

But accepting the decision of the Supreme Court as the final law of his case, Boudinot can and does find much even in it to comfort and sustain him. It is not often that the failing party to a suit receives the commendations of the court for his honorable and uprightconduct. It is still less frequent that the court goes out of its way to advise such a party where to seek the relief it feels compelled to deny. In rendering the decision in this case, however, the court

We are glad to know that there is no ground for any imputation upon the integrity or good faith of the claimants who prosecuted this writ of error. In a case not free from doubt and difficulty they acted under a misapprehension of their

And again the court say:

If a wrong has been done, the power of redress is with Congress, not with the judiciary; and that body, upon being applied to, it is to be presumed will promptly give the proper relief.

The fact is, that the absolute good faith and honesty of Boudinot have never been called in question by any respectable person, court, or committee. When this case was under investigation in the Forty-first Congress, with a view to having him relieved from further criminal prosecution, the Judiciary Committee of the House made a unanimous report in his favor. I quote the following extract from that

There is no complaint that Boudinot ever sold, or authorized to be sold, a pound of tobacco outside of the Indian Territory, without the payment of the tax required by law. The judge of the district court which decided his case testifies to his good faith in every respect; the Supreme Court, affirming the judgment of the lower court, takes pleasure in testifying to his good faith.

There is not the slightest doubt that Mr. Boudinot is a Cherokee Indian, and a citizen of the Cherokee Nation; he was one of the recognized representatives or delegates from the Cherokee Nation to the United States Government in 1868, and his name appears as such to the treaty of that year made by this Government with the Cherokee Nation. Though an Indian, he claims no leniency on the ground of ignorance; he has shown throughout a disposition to deal honorably and justly with the Government of the United States in this matter, and pursued just such a course as any gentleman of intelligence and education would have pursued under similar circumstances.

Six this case forms an almost incredible chapter in American his.

Sir, this case forms an almost incredible chapter in American history. On such a state of facts, who could conceive that any man under the protection of American law could be made to lose not only all his worldly possessions, but also be compelled to defend himself against a felon's fate in the penitentiary? Such, however, was exactly Boudinot's experience. Not content with leading him into an ambuscade and plundering him, the revenue pirates of the Southwest under the lead of M.D. west under the lead of McDonald and Joyce, actually secured an indictment against him in the United States district court for the western district of Arkansas and seriously demanded his conviction. I am not sure but what at this juncture in his misfortunes the faith of my Indian friend in the Christian's God became somewhat shaken. When he saw the prison gates ajar to receive him and the odious prison garb awaiting him simply because he had believed the words of Christian statesmen in his dealings with a Christian Government, I am afraid he relapsed, at least for the time being, to paganism. I imagine he must have appealed to the great Manitou, the god of his fathers, and the protector of all just Indians. At any rate it was but a short time until nearly all who were striving to put him in the penitentiary reached there as convicts themselves. A few escaped, which is to be regretted; for has it not been said, "Let no guilty man escape?" Colonel Boudinot is a most amiable man, with as little of cape?" Colonel Boudinot is a most amiable man, with as little of the spirit of revenge in his nature as any one I ever knew; yet I have heard—I do not vouch for it, and it may be mere fable—but I have heard that sometimes as the express train was passing through Jefferson City, Missouri, a lone Indian might have been seen on the rear platform of the rear car gazing with a peculiar look on the walls of the State prison within which his unprovoked enemies and persecutors were doing the Government some service.

The spectacle to him was the beginning of even-handed justice, and though long delayed I sincerely hope the present Congress will finish the work by passing the bill now before us. Is it possible for a stronger case to be presented calling for personal relief? What element of aggravation has been omitted? I challenge the entire history of this Government for a more wanton, cruel, and deceptive history of this Government for a more wanton, cruel, and deceptive use of power than this case exhibits. An Indian, Boudinot is a ward, and the Government is his guardian. Under the guise of that sacred relation he has been impoverished, and barely escaped imprisonment, without the slightest fault or short-coming on his part. We made a treaty with him and with his people, and we broke it in just two years without deigning a word to him or his on the subject. We told him over and over again to enter into his stipulated rights under the treaty, and we have ruined him because he did so. We repeatedly construed the treaty and the law of our own making and he has construed the treaty and the law of our own making, and he has been destroyed because he implicitly followed our construction. We have broken faith with him as extensively and as odiously in manner and in form as any government ever did with any human being to whom it owed protection. Let this disgrace be wiped out as speedily as possible by an act of liberal justice. There is not a government on earth strong enough to afford to inflict injustice upon the humblest being subject to its laws.

He merely asks to be allowed to enter one of our own courts and there exhibit his wrongs and plead for redress. He simply stands a humble petitioner at the door of justice asking to be allowed to cross its threshold and approach its altar with the burden of his complaints. Who will shut that door in his face? Who dares to say to him, or to any other being on American soil, that those who are subject to the law shall not have the protection of the law? And who will say in advance how much or how little he shall recover in a will say in advance how much or how little he shall recover in a court of justice? Are we afraid of our own judiciary? Is there danger that the Court of Claims will assess in favor of this claimant more damages than the proof warrants? Not at all, nor can any fair-minded man desire him to recover less. I trust that my amendment will be adopted, and that the bill will speedily become a law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will now be returned to its place on the Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I now ask unanimous consent to take from the Calendar Senate bill No. 1315.

Mr. WITHERS. The hour for the consideration of the regular order has arrived.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I hope the Senator from Virginia will allow this bill to come up. It will not take more than a moment, and it is very important if the bill is to pass at all this session that it should be

Mr. WITHERS. It is scarcely so important as the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. BURNSIDE. If it causes any discussion, I shall not press it

Mr. INGALLS and others. What is the bill?
Mr. BURNSIDE. It is a bill making an appropriation for the erection of a light-house. Unless the contract is given out very soon the year will be lost.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia insist on the regular order?

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I hope the Senator from Virginia will understand that I yielded the floor this morning early, the moment I was asked, in order that the Senator from Indiana might go on with his remarks. I think I ought to be allowed to get this bill through now.

Mr. WITHERS. I am acting under the instructions of the Appropriations Committee.

priations Committee.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The bill is recommended by the Light-House Board and the Committee on Commerce, and if the light-house is to be erected there at all the contract must be given out very soon, and there is no chance of building the light-house this summer unless the bill is passed soon as it has to go to the House. I certainly hope the Senator from Virginia will allow it to be considered. It will not delay the appropriation bill two minutes, I am sure.

Mr. WITHERS. I will simply state to the Senator from Rhode Island that while my inclinations personally are certainly in the direction of granting the privilege he asks, I know that there are many other Senators who have bills in which they are equally interested.

Mr. BURNSIDE. It is the first time I have asked the Senate to step out of the regular order to consider any bill during this whole session. However, I suppose I must yield.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is insisted upon, which is the Army appropriation bill. there is no chance of building the light-house this summer unless the

mr. SAULSBURY. The committee of which I am the organ—Mr. McMILLAN. Regular order, Mr. President.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.
Mr. WITHERS. The Senate can decide between these bills when the pending bill shall have been disposed of.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Very well.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish, in presenting this bill, to make one or two general statements. The bill is almost identical in its provisions with the Army bill as it passed last year. I propose to call attention in the progress of the bill to the points of difference which exist.

I wish to state also, that while all the provisions of the bill are not in exact accordance with the views of some of the members of the committee, possibly of all, the late period of the session and the fact that we as yet have disposed finally of but one of the general appro-priation bills have prompted the committee to report the House bill without amendment, in order that no further time may be consumed than is absolutely necessary for its consideration.

I now ask that the pro forma reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that we may proceed to consider it by paragraphs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to that

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1881, as follows:

For expenses of the commanding general's office, $2,500.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the same appropriation as was made last year, and is the sum estimated for.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

For expenses of recruiting and transportation of recruits from rendezvous to depot, $75,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the same amount of appropriation as was made last year.

The Secretary read as follows:

And no money appropriated by this act shall be paid for recruiting the Army beyond the number of twenty-five thousand enlisted men, including Indian scouts and hospital-stewards; and thereafter there shall be no more than twenty-five thousand enlisted men in the Army at any one time, unless otherwise authorized by law. Nothing, however, in this act shall be construed to prevent enlistments for the Signal Service, which shall hereafter be maintained, as now organized and as provided by law, with a force of enlisted men not exceeding four hundred and effict.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the provision of last year.

The Secretary read as follows

For contingent expenses of the Adjutant-General's Department at the head-quarters of military divisions and departments, $3,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the same amount as was in the bill of last

The Secretary read as follows:

For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, purchase, equipment, and repair of electric field-telegraphs and signal equipments and stores, $10,500.

Mr. WITHERS. That is also identical with the bill of last year. The Secretary read as follows:

PAY DEPARTMENT.

For pay of the Army:

One General, 1 Lieutenant-General, 3 major-generals, 15 brigadier-generals, 70 colonels, 85 lieutenant-colonels, 243 majors, 312 captains, mounted, 306 captains, not mounted, 34 chaplains, 21 storekeepers, 40 adjutants, 40 regimental quartermasters, 202 first lieutenants, mounted, 360 first lieutenants, not mounted, 146 second lieutenants, mounted, 305 second lieutenants, not mounted; including the additional pay to 35 aids-de-camp, to the adjutant and quartermaster of the Engineer Battalion, to 180 acting assistant commissaries of subsistence, in addition to pay in line, to officers of foot regiments while on duty which requires them to be mounted, to the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in Washington, and to the examiner of State claims in the office of the Secretary of War; 400 retired officers; enlisted men of all grades not exceeding 25,000 men; 450 enlisted men of the Signal Corps; the allowances for travel, retained pay, and clothing not drawn, payable to enlisted men on discharge; and I retired ordnance sergeant, $11,548,601.55.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish simply to state that while that paragraph

Mr. WITHERS. I wish simply to state that while that paragraph as just read is different in form, its substance is identical with the bill of last year. We have examined the Army Register and find that the estimates have been made correctly and that the aggregate sums are the amount reported in this bill for the officers of the grades

Mr. BURNSIDE. I submitted an amendment to take the place of this paragraph, which I shall not press now, as it was thrown out by the committee, and I am sure it would only be a loss of time to press it; but I think the clause as it is, although it is not subject to any very serious objection, is objectionable because it is incorrect in statement. There are appropriations made here for fifteen brigadier-generals in the Army, when in point of fact there are not that many in the Army; and if they should be provided for at all, the officers ought to have their proper designation. But, as I said, I submitted an amendment to the committee covering that point, and it was thrown out, and it would only be a loss of time to present it here now. I content myself with making this statement.

Mr. McMILLAN. If there are not fifteen brigadier-generals in the Army, why appropriate for that number?

Mr. BURNSIDE. There are certain heads of departments who have the rank of brigadier-generals, making up the fifteen, but that is not their proper designation. A person unskilled in matters of this kind would not understand the bill. In other words, it would require some explanation which is not embraced in the text of the bill.

Mr. WITHERS. The statement of the Senator from Rhode Island is correct, that the Senate Committee on Appropriations had under consideration the amendment which he suggested. Their view was that inasmuch as it was rather a criticism upon the phraseology of the bill and did not affect the real merit of the question we would make no alteration, as there are fifteen persons in the Army who hold the rank and receive the pay of brigadier-general, and consequently in estimating for their pay it has been estimated for on that basis. That is all this bill does. We but deal with the pay and make no distinction as to rank.

The Secretary read the bill from line 53 to line 71, as follows:

The Secretary read the bill from line 53 to line 71, as follows:

For mileage of officers of the Army for travel on duty under orders, $200,000.

For miscellaneous expenses, to wit: Hire of 125 contract surgeons and 200 hospital matrons; extra-duty pay to enlisted men for service in hospitals; pay of 54 paymasters' clerks and 14 veterinary surgeons; hire of paymasters' messengers, not to exceed $15,000; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army; compensation of citizen clerks and witnesses attending upon military courts and commissions; travel expenses of paymasters' clerks; commutation of quarters for officers on duty without troops at places where there are no public quarters; and for the payment of any such officers as may be in service, either upon the active or retired list, during the year ending June 30, 1881, in excess of the numbers for each class provided for in this act, $551,198.45.

Mr. WITHERS. That is in accordance with existing provisions. The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

Subsistence Department:

For subsistence of 25,000 enlisted men, 120 additional half rations for sergeants and corporals of ordnauce, enlisted men of the Signal Service, women to companies, (laundresses,) 1,875 civilian employés, 125 contract surgeons, 200 hospital matrons, 110 military convicts, and 500 prisoners of war, (Indians, in all 10, 753.8-10 rations, at twenty cents each; for difference between cost of rations and commutation thereof for detailed men, and for enlisted men and recruits at recruiting stations, and for cost of hot coffee and cooked rations for troops traveling on cars; for subsistence stores for Indians visiting military posts, and Indians employed without pay as sconts, and guides, $2,250,000; of which amount $300,000 shall be available from and after the passage of this act for the purchase of stores necessary to be trassported to distant posts in advance of the 33th of June, 1880: Provided, That to the cost of all stores and other articles sold to officers and men, except tobacco, as provided for in section 1149 of the Revised Statutes, 10 per cent. shall be added to cover wastage, transportation, and other incidental charges, save that subsistence supplies may be sold to companies, detachments, and hospitals, at cost prices, not including cost of transportation, upon the certificate of an officer commanding a company or detachment, or in charge of a hospital, that the supplies are necessary for the exclusive use of such company, detachment, or hospital.

Mr. WITHERS. In reference to that paragraph I will state that

Mr. WITHERS. In reference to that paragraph I will state that the amount appropriated by it for subsistence is $2,250,000 as against $2,300,000 appropriated last year. The estimates for subsistence, however, being predicated upon the assumption that the Army consists of twenty-five thousand enlisted men, and the actual fact being that there are in service a little less than twenty-two thousand men, the committee considered that the amount contained in this appropriation would suffice to supply all the subsistence required for the Army.

In addition there is a little new matter in this paragraph. In the seventy-fifth line enlisted men of the Signal Service are introduced for the first time. These men, however, having previously drawn their subsistence from the Department, there will be no change in the practical operation of it; it is simply the introduction of this phraseology. But commencing on the ninety-seventh line and extending to the end of the paragraph, there is other new matter:

Save that subsistence supplies may be sold to companies, detachments, and hospitals at cost prices, not including cost of transpertation, upon the certificate of an officer commanding a company or detachment, or in charge of a hospital, that the supplies are necessary for the exclusive use of such company, detachment, or hospital.

This is new matter, but is recommended by the Secretary of War in his communication to Congress, found in Senate document No. 26, and commended itself to the judgment of the House and of the com-

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as Ioliows:

Quartermaster's Department:

For the regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, consisting of stoves for heating and cooking; of fuel for officers, enlisted men, guards, hospitals, storehouses, and offices; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department at the several posts and stations, and with the armies in the field; for the horses of the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of artillery, mounted men of the Signal Service, and such companies of infantry and soouts as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; of straw for soldier's bedding; and of stationery, including blank-books for the Quartermaster's Department, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the Pay and Quartermaster's Departments, and for printing of division and department orders and reports, $3,600,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the same as the existing provision. The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

For incidental expenses to wit: For postage and telegrams or dispatches; extra pay to soldiers employed under the direction of the Quartermaster's Department in the erection of barracks, quarters, storehouses, and hospitals, in the construction of roads, and other constant labor, for periods of not less than ten days, including those employed as clerks at division and department headquarters and Signal Service sergeants; expenses of expresses to and from the frontier posts and armies in the field; of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers, and to trains where military escorts cannot be furnished; expenses of the interment of officers killed in action, or who die when on duty in the field, or at posts on the frontiers, or when traveling on orders, and of non-commissioned officers and soldiers; authorized office furniture; hire of laborers in the Quartermaster's Department, including the hire of interpreters, spies, and guides for the Army; compensation of clerks to officers of the Quartermaster's Department; compensation of forage and wagon masters authorized by the act of July 5, 1838; for the apprehension, securing, and delivering of deserters, and the expenses incident to their pursuit; and for the following expenditures required for the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of light artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the trains, to wit: hire of veterinary surgeons, medicine for horses and mules, picket-ropes, and for shoeing the horses and mules; also, generally, the proper and authorized expenses for the movement and operations of the Army not expressly assigned to any other department, $1,000,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the same as the existing provisions of law.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the same as the existing provisions of law. The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

For purchase of horses for the cavalry and artillery, and for the Indian scouts, and for such infantry as may be mounted, $200,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the same appropriation as last year. The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

For transportation of the Army, including baggage of the troops, when moving either by land or water; of clothing and camp and garrison equipage from the depots of Philadelphia and Jeffersonville to the several posts and Army depots, and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipments and of subsistence stores from the places of purchase and from the places of delivery, under contract, to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small-arms from the founderies and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; the purchase and hire of horses, mules, oxen, and harness, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, and drays, and of ships and other sea-going vessels and boats required for the transportation of supplies, and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters; transportation of funds for the pay and other disbursing departments; the expenses of salling public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific; for procuring water at such posts as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance; and for clearing roads and for removing obstructions from roads, harbors, and rivers, to the extent which may be required for the actual operations of the troops in the field, $4,000,000.

Mr. WITHERS. This amount is $200,000 less than the bill of last.

Mr. WITHERS. This amount is $200,000 less than the bill of last year. Being for transportation, however, the committee thought that margin would be perfectly allowable, inasmuch as it is entirely an arbitrary estimate as to what the expenses might be.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if in stating this amount of $4,000,000, the committee took into account the fact that what is known as land-grant railroad transportation is not now paid for at all?

Mr. WITHERS. I will state in connection with this matter that the whole of the estimate of the Department amounted only to $200,000 more than the amount appropriated, and as that estimate was predicated simply upon an approximate assumption of what would be required, the committee thought that $4,000,000 would probably suffice to cover the cost of transportation.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to call the attention of the Senate and the committee to what no doubt the committee were advised of, but I desire to have some public attention called to the fact that a very considerable portion of Army transportation is not now paid for at all. In 1873, I think, the Army appropriation bill contained a pro-hibition as to the payment of transportation to certain land-grant railway companies, but permitting them to go to the Court of Claims with their claims against the Government for such transportation. Subsequently the Court of Claims, and afterward the Supreme Court of the United States also, decided that these railway companies were entitled to transportation subject to a certain deduction for the use of their track. The Quartermaster-General had before that time been paying for such transportation subject to the deduction of .33½ per cent but the Ourtermasters Department held them set it is a likely and the court of the court of the courter of the courter of the centre of the courter of the centre of the courter of the courter of the courter of the courter of the centre of the centre of the centre of the courter of the centre of the ce but the Quartermaster's Department held then as it still holds. that it cannot adjust those claims, but that each claim must be made the subject of a suit.

In pursuance of the policy of the Government before that time the Quartermaster-General now, wherever he can do it, sends the Government supplies over one of those land-grant roads. So it happens, I have no doubt, that a very large portion of the service in the way of transportation is rendered to the Government by roads which do not really receive any benefit from this appropriation. Consequently a large annual deficiency is arising, to be paid only as judgments from time to time are rendered.

I speak of this as one of those things which ought to be taken into account in determining which should be paid. I think myself the bill should provide for the payment of this transportation, or that bill should provide for the payment of this transportation, or that some rule should be established. I have tried on several occasions to get the Senate to adopt such a rule, by a bill which provides for the payment; but if this amount, which I understand aggregates from three to four hundred thousand dollars a year, is not paid, the Senator will see that a deficiency to that amount will be constantly arising to be appropriated for hereafter. I suggest to him whether there should not be either an appropriation here for that transportation or a limitation upon the amount, so that we may know precisely, or as nearly as possible, what we are paying the four millions for.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to inquire what is the necessity of a continuance of the provision of law which requires each one of these roads to go to the Court of Claims and prosecute a suit? I understand very well why it was necessary for a judicial determination of what portion of the expense of transportation over the land-grant railroads should be credited to the Government for the franchise and what portion for the rolling stock and expense of carrying the freight, under the rule of law that the Government have the right to transport their own freight over the road; but if instead of transporting it themselves they employ the railroad to transport it, some portion of the expense should be apportioned and paid to the railroad. It was necessary to have that judgment of a court to determine what portion that was. That has gone from the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court and a rule has been established there, and still the law requires each one of these roads to go to the Court of Claims, and it may be through to the Supreme Court, before it can get any satisfaction. I would inquire of the Senator whether the committee had their attention called to

Mr. WITHERS. Only the general knowledge of the facts which have been cited by both Senators. In view of the fact that all these circumstances which have been mentioned were within the knowledge of the Quartermaster-General, who has charge of the transportation of the Army, and as the committee found the amount appropriated by the bill to approximate nearly to the amount fixed by the Quarter-master-General in the Book of Estimates, I assume that there will be no deficit of any serious extent in the matter of transportation. The total amount would, all must see, become entirely problematical and uncertain.

The Committee on Appropriations did not deem it proper to make any appropriation specifically for the benefit of the class of roads which has been alluded to by the Senator from Kansas, because they thought that the courts were open for the adjudication of these questions, and in cases where the adjudication had been had the Department would conform to the decision of the court.

Mr. PLUMB. But notwithstanding the theory of the Senator from Virginia, which would seem to be all right, the fact is that the Quartermaster's Department holds that notwithstanding that adjudication it cannot pay any sum of money to these land-grant railroads by reason of the prohibition in the appropriation act of 1873 until they can get a judgment, and then that judgment is paid. The judgment of the Court of Claims is made necessary by that act before the payment can be made. The amount that is deficient according to the estimate of the Quartermaster-General of last year was over a million dollars. It is accumulating now at the rate of three or four hundred thousand dollars a year. The fact is, therefore, that we are appropriating for military transportation without knowing the amount that will be actually needed for that purpose.

I think one of two things ought to be done. Either we ought to provide for applying a portion of this money to that transportation, which is as much a legal charge against the Government as any other, or we should diminish this appropriation to correspond with what are the actual necessities of the Army.

Mr. WITHERS. As I understand it, the bill does conform to what are the actual necessities of the Army.

I would call attention to the fact that if any legislation on the

I would call attention to the fact that if any legislation on the subject is necessary it would not probably come from the Committee on Appropriations, but from the Committee on Railroads or the Military Committee. In addition to that, I will state the fact that the Quartermaster-General himself, as well as the heads of the other departments of the Army, knew that this bill was pending and was under consideration before the Appropriations Committee, and while any suggestions that they might desire to make were requested, no suggestion was made that this appropriation was at all inadequate to serve the purposes designed by it.

Mr. PLUMB. The Quartermaster-General has, from time to time, made recommendations for legislation on this subject. I presume he

Mr. PLUMB. The Quartermaster-General has, from time to time, made recommendations for legislation on this subject. I presume he may have wearied of making them year after year without any attention having been paid to them. I will call the attention of the Senator, however, to the fact that last year, in one of the appropriation bills, we did appropriate the sum of $300,000 to meet this deficiency, which only shows the existence of the fact, as I have stated, that deficiency is constant. that a deficiency is constantly being created, and that Congress does not know to-day, and no one can tell except by going to the Quarter-master-General's Office, what we are paying for military transportation, notwithstanding the amount we appropriate, because the Quartermaster-General will still continue to send, as he has heretofore done, a large portion, and much the larger portion, of military sup-plies, so far as he can have them transported, over these land-grant railroads, which get no pay.

I presume the amendment which I design offering is not in order, but I will offer it at all events for the consideration of the Senate and of the committee

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "water," in line 154, it is proposed to insert:

And including 50 per cent. of the pay of such land-grant railroads, as by the decision of the Supreme Court are entitled to payment for transporting troops and supplies, subject to a reasonable deduction for the use of the track of the same.

Mr. WITHERS. I shall have to interpose —— The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia will yield while the Chair receives a message from the House of Representatives. MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (H. R. No. 5623) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to repair and extend the public building owned by the Government, at Cleveland, Ohio; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 189) legalizing the health ordinances and regulations for the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 290) accepting the gift of the desk used by Thomas Jefferson, in writing the Declaration of Independence; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ACCEPTANCE OF JEFFERSON'S DESK.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read. The message was read, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have the honor to inform Congress that Mr. J. Randolph Coolidge, Dr. Algernon Coolidge, Mr. Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, and Mrs. Ellen Dwight, of Massachusetts, the heirs of the late Joseph Coolidge, jr., desire to present to the United States the desk on which the Declaration of Independence was written. It bears the following inscription in the handwriting of Thomas Jefferson:

"Thomas Jefferson gives this writing-desk to Joseph Coolidge, jr., as a memorial of his affection. It was made from a drawing of his own, by Ben. Randall, cabinet-maker of Philadelphia, with whom he first lodged on his arrival in that city in May, 1776, and is the identical one on which he wrote the Declaration of Independence.

"MONTICELLO, November 18, 1885."

The desk was placed in my possession by Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, and is herewith transmitted to Congress, with the letter of Mr. Winthrop, expressing the wish of the donors "to offer it to the United States, that it may hereafter have a place in the Department of State in connection with the immortal instrument which was written upon it in 1776."

I respectfully recommend that such action may be taken by Congress as may be deemed appropriate with reference to a gift to the nation so precious in its history and for the memorable associations which belong to it.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 22, 1880.

"WASHINGTON, D. C., April 14, 1880.

"MY DEAR SIR: I have been privileged to bring with me from Boston, as a present to the United States, a very precious historical relic. It is the little desk on which Mr. Jefferson wrote the original draught of the Declaration of Independ-which Mr. Jefferson wrote the original draught of the Declaration of Independence.

"This desk was given by Mr. Jefferson himself to my friend the late Joseph Coolidge, of Boston, at the time of his marriage to Jefferson's granddaughter, Miss Randolph; and it bears an autograph inscription, of singular interest, written by the illustrious author of the Declaration in the very last year of his life.

"On the recent death of Mr. Coolidge, whose wife had died a year or two previously, the desk became the property of their children—Mr. J. Randolph Coolidge, Dr. Algernon Coolidge, Mr. Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, and Mrs. Ellen Dwight—who now desire to offer it to the United States, so that it may henceforth have a place in the Department of State, in connection with the immortal instrument which was written upon it in 1776.

"They have done me the honor to make me the medium of this distinguished gift, and I ask permission to place it in the hands of the Chief Magistrate of the nation in their name and at their request.

"ROBERT C. WINTHROP."

"ROBERT C. WINTHROP.

"His Excellency RUTHERFORD B. HAYES,
"President of the United States."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate thejoint resolution received from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 290) accepting the gift of the desk used by Thomas Jefferson in writing the Declaration of Independence was read the first time by its title.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the thanks of this Congress be presented to J. Randolph Coolidge, Algernon Coolidge, Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, and Mrs. Ellen Dwight, citizens of Massachusetts, for the patriotic gift of the writing-desk presented by Thomas Jefferson to their father, the late Joseph Coolidge, upon which the Declaration of Independence was written; and Be it further resolved, That this preclous relic is hereby accepted in the name of the nation, and that the same be deposited for safe-keeping in the Department of State of the United States; and
Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, signed by the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, be transmitted to the donors.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This joint resolution having been read twice, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I cannot think that the Senate will object to an interruption of its ordinary business to consider for a brief moment so interesting a subject as that contained in the resolutions which have just come from the House. The message of the President and the resolutions themselves have already communicated to us so much of the history of the subject to which they allude that little worse is present to put us in present of the facts which in little more is necessary to put us in possession of the facts which impart to it an interest and value justifying these proceedings.

This small, plain, unpolished, mahogany writing-desk, was once the property of Thomas Jefferson. Why it has been preserved with scrupulous care, and now arrests the attention of the nation, he himself, after keeping it for half acentury, has told us in an inscription placed upon it by his own hand in the last year of his life, in these words:

Thomas Jefferson gives this writing desk to Joseph Coolidge, ir., as a memorial of his affection. It was made from a drawing of his own by Ben. Randall, cabinet-maker, of Philadelphia, with whom he first lodged on his arrival in that city in May, 1776, and the identical one on which he wrote the Declaration of Independence. Politics as well as religion has its superstitions. These, gaining strength with time, may one day give imaginary value to this relic for its association with the birth of the great charter of our Independence.

November 18, 1825.

Mr. Coolidge was the husband of a granddaughter of Mr. Jefferson. He was a resident of Boston and has recently deceased. His children, Mr. J. Randolph Coolidge, Mr. Algernon Coolidge, Mr. Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, and Mrs. Ellen Dwight, through our distinguished fellow-citizen, the Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, now present this most remarkable relic to the United States.

Embellishment or enlargement can add nothing to this simple story. It is, of itself, enough to draw to this plain memorial the homage of mankind, and will be told to listening pilgrims and votaries in all the generations that shall count the years of the Republic and the spread of free institutions in the world. The man, the occasion, and the subject crowd in upon our thoughts and fill us with the admiration and wonder of those who look upon the place where miracles have been wrought.

The youngest and least experienced of all his associates in practical government, none of whom had shared in anything but the affairs of a dependent colony, is called upon to commit to writing, for the judgment of all mankind and for all time, the reasons for the dismemberment of an empire and the creation of a republic among the nations of the earth. And the work thus undertaken was so accomplished, upon this writing-desk, that the test of a century of criticism and trial has only made it more clear that nothing could have been added or excluded. Constitutions based upon it have indeed been altered and amended many times, but it has always been in the endeavor to more and more conform them to the great truths enunciated in this immortal instrument. Mr. Jefferson termed it in the inscription upon this memorial, after fifty years of experience and growth, "the charter of our Independence." It is more. A century of political commotion and upheaval has proven it to be the great title-deed of free institutions throughout the world.

It cannot but be that everything connected with the production of this wonderful instrument will be cherished by the American people with an almost sacred reverence, and by lovers of free institutions everywhere with the regard which draws the devout to a shrine. Let, therefore, this writing-desk, upon which it was written, be gladly accepted by the nation and carefully preserved with the great charter itself in the archives of that mighty Government thus called into being. And there, with the sword of Washington and the staff of ter itself in the archives of that mighty Government thus cancer may being. And there, with the sword of Washington and the staff of Franklin, which the nation has already accepted with reverent gratitude, let these muniments of our title be preserved evermore.

I should, Mr. President, fail altogether in my duty to the people of Massachusetts if I did not give expression at this time to their great gratification for the large share that Commonwealth has had from the beginning in all that makes this occasion proper or worthy of attention. Massachusetts and Virginia had from the outset of the Revolution conspicuously joined hands in the great struggle, sharing the obloquies and perils with which it opened on their soil. Arthur Lee, of Virginia, had, for many years before, as the agent of Massachusetts, pleaded her cause before the British throne. Samuel Adams and Richard Henry Lee kindled together the fires of the Revolution. It was on motion of John Adams, in a most critical period in the temper was on motion of John Adams, in a most critical period in the temper of the Colonies, that Washington himself was called to the command of the American Armies. Mr. Adams was with Mr. Jefferson upon the committee instructed by the Continental Congress to draft a declaracommittee instructed by the Continental Congress to draft a declaration of independence, and joined in imposing that duty upon one many years his junior, because of his "reputation for a matchless felicity in embodying popular ideas." That matchless felicity of Mr. Jefferson produced the Declaration of Independence, and the peerless eloquence of John Adams carried it through a hesitating Congress. These distinguished patriots having each in turn enjoyed the highest honors of the Republic they had together so conspicuously helped to create, were both permitted by Providence to close their illustrious career on the fiftieth anniversary of the day they had made immortal, and to pass together to their reward amid the shouts of a people application of the providence to the shouts of the providence to the providence plauding their great work.

And now this precious relic, around which so many memories of the great actors of the Revolution cluster, kept by Virginia for fifty years and then committed by its illustrious owner to the care of Massachusetts for another half century, is to-day donated to the United States by those in whose veins commingles the blood of both these ancient Commonwealths. Thus do Massachusetts and Virginia again stand side by side amid the glories which have come down to us from the Revolution.

I hope, Mr. President, that the third reading of the resolution will

mr. Johnston. Mr. President, as one of the Senators from the State in which Mr. Jefferson was born, it is a duty most agreeable to me to move concurrence in the resolution under consideration. One of Mr. Jefferson's biographers describes the relic now before us as "a little writing-desk only three inches high," which has upon it this inscription placed there by Mr. Jefferson himself:

Thomas Jefferson gives this writing desk to Joseph Coolidge, jr., as a memorial of his affection. It was made from a drawing of his own by Ben. Randall, cabinet-maker, of Philadelphia, with whom he first lodged on his arrival in that city in May, 1776, and is the identical one on which he wrote the Declaration of Independ ence. Politics, as well as religion, has its superstitions. These, gaining strength with time, may one day give imaginary value to this relie for its association with the birth of the great charter of our Independence.

MONTICELLO, November 18, 1825.

And though he was then nearly eighty-three years old, it is written in the same bold, clear, and strong handwriting in which he penned the Declaration of Independence almost half a century before, when he was a young man, only a little more than thirty. He speaks of the superstitions of politics and of the imaginary value which may one day attach to this relic. But the reverence a free people are ready to accord to the instruments of such events as this little desk He speaks of fearly to accord to the instruments of such events as this little desk chronicles is neither superstition nor an idle and empty imagination; for on that little desk was done a work greater than any battle, loftier than any poem, more enduring than any monument. When the Declaration of Independence was written this earth was centuries old; many peoples had existed, many battles had been fought, many struggles had been made, and many patriots had lived; revolutions, rebellions, and wars for freedom had been waged, but civil liberty, as we now see, enjoy, and understand it, was still unknown. The struggles of past days had been merely for a change of actual governstruggles of past days had been merely for a change of actual government, and not so much for new and better principles. It was to get rid of the then ruler, but to let the new one put in the place of the old govern on the same platform. When Casar was killed the conspirators had no thought of anything but freeing the country from an overshadowing man. In their conception the only thing to be done was to give the reins into new hands. But at last came the author of the Declaration of Independence. What had been cloudy and obscure and seen dimly by others was a clear vision to him. He saw not only what the rights of a citizen were, but how to defend, guard, and protect them; not only what true civil liberty was, but how to acquire and how to preserve it. And thus our Revolution was therefore not a sumple change of government for the people of the thirteen colonies: simple change of government for the people of the thirteen colonies; it was not the case of a dependent territory breaking away from the mother country and enforcing the separation by arms, and then conmother country and enforcing the separation by arms, and then conducting its affairs upon the same old plan; nor was it only the birth of a new nation, of one government more added to those already existing; but with the establishment of this new nation came new theories, practices, and principles. Bills of right and written constitutions declared and defined the duties, powers, and limitations of the government and the rights of the citizens. For the divine right of the government and the rights of the citizens. the government and the rights of the citizens. For the divine right of kings was substituted the sacred right of the people. In place of the service of the serf to the baron was established a well-regulated militia and the right of the people to keep and bear arms. Instead of privileged classes and orders of nobility all men were declared equal under the law. The sword was the governing power in many countries, but here it was made the servant of the civil law. Instead of subsidies levied by governments and collected by force and spent without responsibilities, no citizen here is taxed who is not represented, and no tax is levied except by the representatives of the peowithout responsibilities, no citizen here is taxed who is not represented, and no tax is levied except by the representatives of the people. Instead of blind obedience, ignorance, and the union of church and state, "Congress can make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of griev-

And without undervaluing the great men who lived and acted with Mr. Jefferson, it is no disparagement to them to say that he was the principal actor in the events of that day. His brain originated, his hand executed. The principles he enunciated, so new then, are already In less than a single century they are taking root all over the world, and written constitutions and representatives of the people are now the rule in civilized nations.

Mr. President, I move the adoption of the resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. BECK. I ask that the resolution be read at length.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be again reported.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

Mr. BECK. I desired to have it read for the purpose of asking the Senator from Virginia, when the joint resolution is passed "by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled," and when the Declaration was a Declaration of Independence of the United States of America, and when the Constitution and all our proceedings run in that line, why it is so carestitution and all our proceedings run in that line, why it is so carefully said that this desk is accepted "by the nation" instead of "by the United States," whose representatives we are? Why should that change be made I should like to know.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The resolution comes from the House as it was adopted there. It is just in the form it was adopted there. I suppose adopted there. It is just in the form it was adopted there. I suppose it is right because it is exactly what the fact is.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator from Kentucky object to this desk being accepted?

Mr. BECK. Not at all. I merely asked a question of the Senator from Virginia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution having had three several readings, the question is, Shall it pass?

The joint resolution was passed.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 100) to print extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1879.

The amendment of the House was to strike out all after the word "printing," in line 11, namely:

And 2,500 for sale by the Public Printer, under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereto thereon added.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment. The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS subsequently moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and the motion to reconsider was entered.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 10,500 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1879.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in line 2, to strike out "ten" and to insert "fifteen;" in lines 4 and 5, to strike out "one thousand" and insert "2,500;" in line 6, to strike out "three" and insert in lieu thereof "eight," and in lines 7 and 8, to strike out "6,500" and insert "5,000."

Mr. WHYTE. I ask to have the resolution read as it stands amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring therein,) That 15,500 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1879 be printed; 2,500 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. WHYTE. The division is not in accordance with the usual rule; but there is such a slight difference that I move that the amendments of the House of Representatives be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter of the Chief of Engineers submitting report from Lieutenant-Colonel Q. A. Gillmore, Corps of Engineers, of the result of an examination made in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of June 18, 1878, of the peninsula of Florida with a view to the construction of a ship-canal from Saint Mary's River to the Gulf of Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting letter from the Chief of Engineers covering copies of reports from Captain Charles J. Allen, Corps of Engineers, upon a survey, made in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, of Superior Bay, to determine the best and most economical plan for harbor improvement for the head of Lake Superior; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5523) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. Plumb, in line 154, page 7, after the word "water," to

And including 50 per cent. of the pay of such land-grant railroads as by the decision of the Supreme Court are entitled to payment for transporting troops and supplies, subject to a reasonable deduction for the use of the track of the same.

Mr. WITHERS. That amendment has not been reported from any committee, and I shall have to raise the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is clearly not in order, if objected to. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at line 178, and continued to line 183, as follows:

For hire of quarters for troops, of storehouses for the safe-keeping of military stores, of offices, and of grounds for camp and summer cantonments, and for temporary frontier stations; for the construction of temporary huts and stables; and for repairing public buildings at established posts, $880,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the same as the appropriation of last

The Secretary read lines 184 and 185, as follows:

For construction and repair of hospitals, as reported by the Surgeon-General of the Army, $75,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is also the same as last year.

The Secretary read from line 186 to line 191, as follows:

For purchase and manufacture of clothing and camp and garrison equipage, and for preserving and repacking the stock of clothing and camp and garrison equipage and materials on hand at the Philadelphia, Jeffersonville, and other depots of the Quartermaster's Department, $1,000,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is $100,000 greater than the appropriation of

The Secretary read from line 192 to line 195, as follows:

For all contingent expenses of the Army not provided for by other estimates, and embracing all branches of the military service, to be expended under the immediate orders of the Secretary of War, $40,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the same as the existing provision.

The Secretary read from line 196 to line 200, as follows:

Medical Department:
For purchase of medical and hospital supplies, medical care and treatment of officers and soldiers on detached duty, expenses of purveying depots, advertising, and other miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department, $200,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the same as the appropriation in the last

The Secretary read from line 201 to line 203, as follows:

For the Army Medical Museum, and for medical and other works for the library of the Surgeon-General's Office, $10,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is also the same.

The Secretary read from line 204 to line 208, as follows:

Engineer Department:
For engineer depot at Willet's Point, New York, namely: For purchase of engineering materials to continue the present course of instruction of the engineer battalion in field engineering, $1,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the same.

The Secretary read from line 209 to line 214, as follows:

For incidental expenses of the depot, remodeling ponton-trains, repairing instruments, purchasing fuel, forage, stationery, chemicals, extra-duty pay to seldiers engaged in special skilled labor, such as wheelwright work, printing, photographing and lithographing engineer documents, and ordinary repairs, $4,000.

Mr. WITHERS. The only variation in that is the addition in lines 212 and 213 of the words, "such as wheelwright work, printing, photographing and lithographing engineer documents," which are included in the Book of Estimates.

The Secretary read from line 215 to line 225 as follows:

Ordnance Department:

For the ordnance service, required to defray the current expenses at the arsenals; of receiving stores and issuing arms and other ordnance supplies; of police and office duties; of fuel and lights; of stationery and office furniture; of tools and instruments for use; of public animals, forage, and vehicles; incidental expenses of the ordnance service, including compensation of workmen in the armory and museum building connected with the Ordnance Office and those attending practical trials and tests of ordnance, small-arms, and other ordnance supplies, $110,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the same as the last bill. The Secretary read lines 226 and 227, as follows:

For manufacture of metallic ammunition for small-arms, $80,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is $5,000 more than was appropriated for the same purpose last year.

The Secretary read lines 228 and 229, as follows:

For overhauling, cleaning, and preserving new ordnance stores on hand at the arsenals, $20,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is $5,000 less than the appropriation last

The Secretary read from line 230 to line 237, as follows:

For mounting and dismounting guns and removing the armament from forts being modified or repaired, including heavy carriages returned to arsenals for alteration and repairs, and other necessary expenses of the same character, and for repairing ordnance and ordnance stores in the hands of troops and for issue at the arsenals and depots, and for extra-duty pay for enlisted men detailed for ordnance sarvice. $20,000 service, $30,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is in accordance with the existing provis-

The Secretary read from line 238 to line 240, as follows:

For purchase and manufacture of ordnance stores to fill requisitions of troops, $115,000.

Mr. WITHERS. The same statement applies in regard to that.

The Secretary read from line 241 to line 244, as follows:

For infantry, cavalry, and artillery equipments, consisting of clothing-bags, haversacks, canteens, and great-coat straps, and repairing horse equipments for cavalry troops, $65,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is a reduction of $10,000 on the amount appropriated by the last bill.

The Secretary read from line 245 to line 251, as follows:

For powder depot: For grading grounds, erecting magazines, and other necessary buildings, and all expenses incident thereto, $50,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, expend a sum not exceeding $18,500 of this amount in the purchase of additional land adjoining the present site.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the same as last year. The Secretary read lines 252 and 253, as follows:

For manufacture of arms at national armories, $300,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is $50,000 more than was appropriated by the last bill.

The Secretary read from line 254 to line 263, as follows:

The Secretary read from line 254 to line 256, as follows.

That upon the application of any college, university, or institution of learning incorporated under the laws of any State within the United States, having capacity at the same time to educate not less than one hundred and fifty male students, the President may detail an officer of the Army on the retired list to act as president, superintendent, or professor thereof; and such officer may receive from the institution to which he may be detailed the difference between his retired and full pay, and shall not receive any additional pay or allowance from the United States.

Mr. WITHERS. That is new matter.

The Secretary read from line 264 to line 267, as follows:

United States testing machine:
For earing for, preserving, using, and operating the United States testing-machine at the Watertown arsenal, $5,000.
Mr. WITHERS. That also is new matter.
The Secretary read section 2, as follows:
Sec. 2. That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State: Provided, That nothing in this provision shall be construed to prevent the use of troops to protect against domestic violence in each of the States on application of the Legislature thereof or of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened.

Mr. BLAINE. I move to amend that section by adding as an additional proviso what I send to the Chair.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided further. That any person who shall carry a deadly weapon of any kind, openly or concealed, at the polls at an election for Representatives in Congress, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished with a fine not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, or with imprisonment for a period not less than six months nor more than five years, or with both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. BLAINE. Upon consideration I will move to strike out the section before offering that amendment, but I give notice that I will offer that amendment either as an amendment to this section if it stays in, or as a separate section, if it be in order, in case this section is rejected from the bill. My first amendment is to strike out the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves to strike out the second section of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when Mr. ANTHONY'S name was called.) The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] who is necessarily absent is paired on all political questions with the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Coke.] I believe this to be a political question. If the Senator from Rhode Island were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when Mr. BRUCE'S name was called.) The Senator from Ministry [Mr. BRUCE'S name was called.)

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. Kernan.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAWES, (when his name was called.) Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. Bailey.] I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. HARRIS, (when his name was called.) Upon all political questions I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hoar.] I shall therefore decline to vote. I should vote "nay" if the Senator from Massachusetts were present.

Mr. CARPENTER, (when Mr. McDonald's name was called.) I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. McDonald.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB, (when Mr. McPherson's name was called.) The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPherson's name was called.)

Mr. PADDOCK, (when his name was called.) On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. Jones,] and so

I shall not vote.

I shall not vote.

Mr. PLATT, (when his name was called.) Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. RANSOM.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. McPherson.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE, (when his name was called.) My colleague, [Mr. RANSOM.] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. PLATT.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay." I myself am paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Logan.]

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 20, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—20.

	YE.	AS-20.
Allison, Blaine, Blair, Booth, Burnside,	Cameron of Pa., Conkling, Edmunds, Ferry, Hamlin,	Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Kellogg, Kirkwood, McMillan,	Morrill, Rollins, Saunders, Teller, Windom.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAINE. I now offer the following as an amendment to come in at the end of the second section:

Platt.

Walker.

Provided further, That any person who shall carry a deadly weapon of any kind, openly or concealed, at the polls, (except one acting under the authority of the United States.) at any election for Representatives in Congress, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished with a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, or with imprisonment for a period not less than six months nor more than five years, or with both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. WITHERS. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is not reported by any committee or recommended by the head of any of the Departments.

Mr. BLAINE. It is germane to the bill. It does not appropriate anything. It is a germane amendment to the legislation that is in the bill. I do not think there is anything in that point of order; but I will await the decision of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On what ground does the Senator from Virginia put his objection?

Mr. WITHERS. I have not the rules of order by me; but there is a rule of order which prohibits the introduction of amendments, as I remember it, which have not been recommended by a standing committee nor by a head of a Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not think the amendment is in order, but not upon the ground stated by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator from Virginia yield to me a moment? The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it is general legislation

Mr. BLAINE. No more general than the legislation in the bill, and it is a germane amendment, and was ruled in order last year on precisely the same section and under precisely the same circumstances, in precisely the same language, and by precisely the same presiding

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Not by the present occupant of the Chair.

Mr. BLAINE. Before the Chair announces his decision I beg to say

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will withhold his decision to hear the Senator.

Mr. BLAINE. If it were an independent piece of legislation which I rose as a member of the Senate to propose on an appropriation bill, then the decision of the honorable Vice-President would be strictly in order; but here comes to us in the bill a piece of independent legislation in no wise connected with the appropriations for the Army, a piece of legislation that has no appropriation in it; a general law prescribing what is right and prohibiting what is wrong. Now to that, in exactly the same line, further modifying and enlarging the precise provision which the House has sent to us, I offer the amend-

I beg the attention of the honorable Vice-President to this result of the ruling, if it be the ruling: it will not only take from the Senate the right to move independent legislation, which our rules now forbid, but it will take from the Senate the right to modify in the least de-out it will take from the Senate the right to modify in the least degree any independent legislation sent us by the House. We shall have to take it just as the House sends it, without condition or limitation or change or subtraction, or not take it at all.

I was for a good many years a member of a board of overseers in a New England college, and it had a board of trustees, and the honorable function which the board of overseers had was to say yea or nay to whatever proposition the trustees sent us; we could not a morad it. to whatever proposition the trustees sent us; we could not amend it; we could not send a substitute; we could simply agree to it or not agree to it; and I submit to the honorable Vice-President that if he rules this amendment out of order it is making the Senate of the United States a board of overseers to the trustees who sit at the other end of the Capitol, and that we shall have the privilege on independent legislation on appropriation bills of simply saying yes or saying no, but we cannot modify it nor in any way adapt it to any exigency which in the judgment of the Senate might well arise. I submit to the Vice-President that the decision will go a great ways.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must administer the rules of the Senate as he finds them. The first paragraph of the twenty-ninth

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

This amendment prescribes a new offense, a new punishment, and so the Chair rules that it is general legislation.

Mr. BLAINE. One moment. Before the Chair decides, I should like to have the section read, the section that comes from the House in the words there written.

The Chief Clerk read section 2 of the bill, as follows:

Sec. 2. That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State: Provided, That nothing in this provision shall be construed to prevent the use of troops to protect against domestic violence in each of the States on application of the Legislature thereof or of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened.

Mr. BLAINE. That piece of legislation came from the House last Mr. BLAINE. That piece of legislation came from the House last year and is I believe in totidem verbis in the appropriation bill of last year. This amendment was then offered to it. I had the impression—with all respect, and I desire to stand corrected if I was wrong—that the Vice-President presided. I moved—and the amendment when I moved it was the subject of long discussion in the Senate—I moved the precise amendment which is now before the Senate. But I beg to say to the Vice-President with all due respect for his ruling, from which I shall not appeal and of which I shall not complain more than to differ from it, that the attitude in which he leaves the Senate is that whatever the House may send us in the shape of an independent that whatever the House may send us in the shape of an independent proposition must be accepted and swallowed or else refused to be swallowed. We cannot coat it with sugar, we cannot in any degree alter it, we cannot make it any more palatable, we cannot in any way dull the edge or sharpen it; we must take it just as the House gives it—that is what the honorable Vice-President says to us—or not take it at all.

I have steadily protested that the subject of legislation upon appropriation bills ought to be a matter of joint rule, ought to be a matter of joint and honorable understanding, that the powers of the two Houses should be restricted by precisely the same limitations; otherwise the two Houses are unequal in their power of legislation; but they have never yet been so unequal as the decision of the Vice-President would make them, for it has never yet been ruled that if a piece of legislation came upon an appropriation bill from the House it was not amendable by another piece of legislation, germane and appertaining thereto, in the Senate.

Mr. WITHERS. I dislike to interpose any difficulty in the way of

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator give way a moment that I may make an explanation personal to myself? The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair wishes simply to remark that he leaves the Senate in the attitude in which its rules place it in his judgment.

Mr. COKE. I desire, Mr. President, to withdraw the vote cast by Mr. COKE. I desire, Mr. President, to withdraw the vote cast by me a few minutes ago. I did not remember, at the time, that I was paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] on all political questions. I came in after the roll was called and was asked to vote, and I entered my vote without reflecting.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the withdrawal of the vote of the Senator from Texas, he having voted under a misapprehension. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, assuming that the Chair was right (and I think it was) in its present decision, in conformity with it I offer this amendment which is simply restrictive of the present legislation that is in the bill, merely to narrow and prevent a certain construction of the clause that already stands in the bill. It is to strike out the period after the word "convened" at the end of line 10, of section 2, and insert a semicolon and the words— 10, of section 2, and insert a semicolon and the words-

Nor shall this section be held to apply to any case in which the employment of the military power of the United States is authorized by the Constitution and the laws made in pursuance thereof.

This amendment, I feel quite sure no point of order can be made against, as it is simply restrictive of and limiting the legislation that is already in the bill. Instead therefore of being general legislation added to an appropriation bill, it is to diminish the amount of legislation that is already in it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to this amendment.

amendment.

Mr. WITHERS. I object to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Upon what ground?

Mr. WITHERS. I do not object to the consideration of it; I do not raise a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when Mr. Anthony's name was called.) I will state again, and probably it will not be necessary to repeat it, that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Anthony] is paired on political questions with the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Coke.] If the Senator from Rhode Island were present he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (when his name was called.) I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from New York, [Mr. Kernan.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CARPENTER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. McDonald.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CONKLING, (when his name was called.) The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Eaton] was compelled to leave the Chamber a short time ago, and requested me to pair with him, and I suggested to him that nothing which his party would vote for was so bad that he would not vote with them, and that seemed to be his opinion. Therefore I infer that he would vote with his party even upon this. So as I should vote for the amendment, I will not vote at all.

Mr. HARRIS, (when his name was called.) Upon all political questions I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hoar.] If the Senator from Massachusetts were present, I should vote "nay." Mr. PADDOCK, (when his name was called.) On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. Jones.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT, (when his name was called.) Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. Ransom.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. McPherson.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when Mr. Thurman's name was called.) Through the agency of the colleague of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pendleton] I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] on this question. If he were present, he would vote "nay," and I beg to withdraw my vote, I having already voted. I have a general understanding with the Senator from Ohio, which was out of my mind at the moment, and after consultation with his colleague I withdraw my vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The vote is withdrawn.

Mr. VANCE, (when his name was called.) On all political questions
I am paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.]

I am paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Logan.]
The roll-call was concluded.
Mr. COKE. I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. Anthony.] If he were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."
Mr. EDMUNDS. I will announce once more, which will answer for all the votes on this bill, that the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr.
BRUCE,] who is necessarily absent, is paired on all these political questions with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.] The Senator from Mississippi if here would vote in favor of this amendment.
Mr. DAWES. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. HOAR] is paired on all political questions with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS.] My colleague, if here, would vote "yea."

[Mr. Harris.] My colleague, if here, would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 27; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask permission to withdraw my vote from the previous roll-call. It had entirely escaped my memory that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr Eaton] had asked me to pair with him, and therefore I voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection; and the Senator's vote will be withdrawn from the vote on the previous amend-

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I offer the following amendment, to be added to section 2:

And provided further, That nothing in this provision contained shall be so construed as to prevent the use of troops when necessary to enforce the lawful execution of any law of the United States by the Executive thereof, in any State or Territory, against forcible and violent resistance thereto, or to prevent the use of troops when necessary to protect any civil officer of the United States, while engaged in the lawful performance of his official duty, against forcible and violent attack or resistance, although applications for such use of troops shall not be made by the Legislature or executive of the State.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa

Mr. WITHERS. Does not the point of order apply to the amendment? I ask for a ruling upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator state his objection to the amendment?

Mr. WITHERS. It is in the character of general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is simply explanatory; it is a limitation of the force of section 2. The Chair does not think the point of order lies against it.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, I beg the indulgence of the Senate for a very few moments upon this subject. I had an opportunity ate for a very few moments upon this subject. I had an opportunity during the last session to express my opinion upon the questions involved herein, and do not propose to afflict the Senate with a repetition of them now. I wish to state, however, as briefly and as clearly as I can, the reasons which have led me to offer this amendment and the purposes I have in view in offering it. I do not know whether it expresses clearly the views of other Senators upon this question or not, but I have intended to express mine by it.

Section 2, as it comes to us from the other House, contains two provisions one that which was attached to the Army hill passed at the visions, one that which was attached to the Army bill passed at the last session, which reads thus:

That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polis at any election held within any State.

That, if I am correct, was attached to the Army bill passed at the last session and comes back to us attached to the Army bill at this session.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the existing law.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. At the time the Army appropriation bill passed at the last session differences of opinion prevailed in this body as to what the meaning of that clause was. It was held by some to mean that it merely prevented the President of the United States from converting the troops into police officers, placing them at the polls to do the ordinary duties of sheriffs, constables, or marshals, making, if I may use the term, thief-catchers of them for the time being. Other Senators claimed that that could not be the meaning of it, because that had never been proposed by anybody, and there must be some other meaning different from that. It was urged upon the Senate that it scarcely became the Senate of the United States to pass a law as to the true meaning of which differences of opinion existed among members of the Senate when by a change in its phraseology its meaning might be made clear. But it passed notwithstanding, and since that time, elsewhere than here, the people of the country have differed as to the meaning of that clause just as we differed here. I has been argued in some sections of the country that it meant just what some of us said it ought to mean, that it merely prevented the Army of the United States from being used as police officers; and others contended that it was intended to cover much more than that.

We have now an opportunity again of saying what is the true intent and meaning of this language, and it seems to me it is due to the dignity of the body that we should improve that opportunity and make clear what certainly is not now clear.

In addition to that there comes from the House the proviso attached to the second section, which reads:

That nothing in this provision shall be construed to prevent the use of troops to protect against domestic violence in each of the States on application of the Legislature thereof or of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened.

We all know that in the Constitution of the United States there is a provision that, among other things, declares that the Legislature of a State may, or when it is not in session the governor of a State may, call upon the President of the United States for troops to premay, call upon the Fresident of the United States for troops to preserve the peace of the State against domestic violence. Everybody is content, I suppose, to have that power exercised upon all proper occasions; but that proviso being attached to this section carries with it the implication, it strikes me, that troops can be used in a State to protect against violence only when called into the State by the request of the Legislature, if the Legislature be in session, or by the request of the executive when the Legislature may not be in session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is clearly so.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I understand the constitutional view held by the democratic side of this Chamber to be that troops cannot be carried into a State when violence prevails in that State, it makes no matter what the cause may be, what the effect of the violence may be, what its purpose may be, the troops of the United States cannot be called there to put down the violence unless the Legislature or the be called there to put down the violence unless the Legislature or the governor of the State shall ask that it be done.

Not speaking for any one else than for myself, but speaking very decidedly for myself, I do not believe that to be the meaning of the Constitution; and therefore, in order that the implication that I have suggested may not arise from this proviso, I move the amendment that I have offered, which covers three points, and when I have named them I shall relieve the Senate. My amendment reads:

And provided further, That nothing in this provision contained shall be so construed as to prevent the use of troops when necessary to enforce the lawful execution of any law of the United States by the Executive thereof in any State or Territory against forcible and violent resistance thereto.

That is intended to cover this point: If in any State or Territory of the United States the execution of any law of the United States shall be forcibly and violently resisted, the President of the United States shall not be compelled to wait until the governor of the United States shall not be compelled to wait until the governor of the State chooses to ask, if he at all chooses to ask, for the troops of the United States to put down that violence and see to it that the law be executed. My understanding of the Constitution is that it is the duty, the constitutional duty, the sworn duty, of the President of the United States to see to it that the laws of the United States to see to it that the laws of the United States to see to it that the laws of the United States. fully executed, and that he is commander-in-chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. I deduce from these clauses that when in any State or Territory of the United States violent resistance is made to the execution of a law of the United States, and the civil officers of the United States have not power sufficient to put down omeers of the United States have not power sufficient to put down that resistance, they, and not the governor of the State, the civil officers charged by law with the execution of the law, have the right to call upon the President of the United States for force sufficient to overcome the resistance to the law, and it is his duty to furnish it and see to it that the law is respected throughout every inch of our land.

Again, my amendment provides further that this clause shall not be so construed as to prevent the use of troops when necessary to protect the property of the United States in any State or Territory. Unfortunately we have had in the history of our country experience enough to show that sometimes the property of the United States has not been safe within the States of the Union, and the governors of States would not call upon the President of the United States to furnish troops to protect that property. I do not wish this clause to be so construed in the future that the President will feel himself bound so construed in the future that the President will feel himself bound to stand by and see the property of the United States pass into the hands of those who are unfriendly to the United States without offering any resistance to that result.

The amendment provides further that this section shall not be so construed as to prevent the use of the troops when necessary to protect any civil officer of the United States, while engaged in the lawful performance of his official duty, against forcible and violent attack or resistance, although application for such use of troops shall not be made by the Legislature or executive of the State in either of these cases

Now, what say you, my democratic friends? Shall the execution of the laws of the United States within a State of this Union, when resisted by force and violence, depend upon the will and pleasure of the governor or the Legislature of that State as to whether the laws shall or shall not be executed? When property of the United States is threatened with seizure shall the question whether or not the President of the United States shall use force to preserve it to the United States depend upon the will and pleasure of the governor of the States in which it is located? When a civil officer of the United States, charged with the execution of the laws of the United States, sworn to execute them, is in the lawful performance of that duty resisted and attacked, shall the question whether or not he is to be protected and attacked, shall the question whether or not he is to be protected in the lawful discharge of his duty depend upon the will and pleasure of the governor of the State where the violence and resistance may be? What say you? The people of this country desire to know. The democratic party of this country seeks to get possession of the entire Government, as it has to-day possession of both branches of Congress. In the better days of the democratic party, my friends, the democratic party never was afraid to say what it meant. It ought not to be now. If you mean to-day that the question whether or not the laws of the United States shall be executed in the States shall depend upon the will of the governor when violence resists the execution of the laws, if you mean that the protection of the property of the United States in a State shall depend upon the will of the governor of that State when violence threatens it, and if you mean that ernor of that State when violence threatens it, and if you mean that the safety of officers of the United States in the performance of their lawful duties shall depend upon the will and pleasure of the governor of a State when violence is offered to them, then you ought to have courage to say so; and if you do not mean it you also should have courage enough to say so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KIRK WOOD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment heartily, and wish that my vote could establish it in the bill. Sympathizing entirely with all said by its mover, I take this occasion to say that I have no sympathy whatever for those who voted for or signed the provision of which this is a repetition. If they fell into signed the provision of which this is a repetition. If they fell into error as to its meaning, it comes very near, I fear, one of the instances of which it is said that "none are so blind as those who will not see." I believe there was no republican member of this body misled as to the meaning of this language when it came here originally. I believe the dust which was cast fell short of the eyes of republican Senators, and that no man here indicated by his vote that he was deceived for one moment by the word "police," or that he supposed that soldiers or officers of the United States, civil or military, could ever be lawfully employed to execute and enforce civil law excent as part of lawfully employed to execute and enforce civil law except as part of the police power of the United States.

A memorandum which my friend from Iowa [Mr. Allison] lays before me informs me that I must be specific in stating that to which my remarks allude. They do not allude to this little addendum or codicil which follows the word "provided" in the pending bill, but they allude to this, in my judgment, most vicious provision which stands now on the statute-book, put there in the first instance by a democratic majority and afterward receiving the sanction of the residue of the law-making power:

That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

It is that to which I refer when I disclaim all sympathy with any man, lawyer or layman, who was misled or fooled by the word "police." If such deception, if it occurred, could be laid to the blame of any democrat it could not be laid at the door of the honorable Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON,] now in my eye, for I remember that he had the courage and the candor—he usually has to state his convictions—to speak in the Senate with impatience and with derision, I think, of the idea that because the word "police" had been imion, I think, of the idea that because the word "police" had been imported into this section, therefore it was harmless, and therefore it meant that in case of emergency armed men wearing the national uniform might uphold law and order and maintain peace on election day although they could not do it as a police force.

I ventured then to argue, citing many authorities among which there was no conflict whatever, I remember that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] also argued, that the police function, the faculty of government which finds expression in the word "no the faculty of government which finds expression in the word "police," was and is the only faculty which could be exerted to maintain nee," was and is the only laculty which could be exerted to maintain peace in time of peace by the execution and enforcement of civil law. But, although not here, elsewhere were minds intelligent enough, microscopic enough, gifted with the foresight and inspiration of statesmanship enough to conclude that because the word "police" had been introduced it did not mean that the Army should not be employed on election day to preserve order, but that it meant some harmless thing different and falling short of it.

The benerable Screen from Love [Mr. Kinkwoopel is revised some.

The honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kirkwood] is roused somewhat, very naturally, by an addition of four lines, which, if there was any tattered remnant of disguise too thin to be respectable, has torn off that disguise and reveals the true meaning at the time of this language to have been and now to be that the Government of the United States cannot interpose at all in any conceivable case unless by reason of invasion or by reason of insurrection, something rising to the dignity of insurrection with which State authority cannot cope, the Legislature of the State, or the Legislature not being in session, then the governor of the State, shall call upon the Executive of the nation by a cry for help. That is the case and the only one. That is the tion by a cry for help. That is the case and the only one. That is the meaning of this postscript which we find here now and which makes that so plain that I suppose it will be difficult for anybody any longer to deny it. That seems to have created some righteous indignation and some enthusiasm and emphasis of speech with my honorable friend from Iowa, and although I cannot utter it myself as emphatically or as well as he did, I wish the Senate would consider that I have uttered what the Senator from Iowa did, feeling about it as near as I know how, as he seemed to feel when he uttered it.

what the Senator from lowa did, feeling about it as hear as I know how, as he seemed to feel when he uttered it.

The occasion of that feeling with the Senator from Iowa, in which I share, is this: Here is a provision based upon the idea, and intended to enforce it, that although on three hundred and sixty-four other days including Sundays, holidays, and sacred days—my friend from Connecticut, who smiles, may not understand the nature of those latter days—

Mr. EATON. I am giving attention; I want to know.
Mr. CONKLING. The Senator says he hopes he will learn some time or other what they mean, and I hope he will.
Mr. EATON. From you.
Mr. CONKLING. I will teach him with great pleasure whenever I have nothing else to do. Here is a provision based on the idea that although on those days it is lawful for the United States to execute its laws to maintain order for that purpose, to cope with and quell its laws, to maintain order for that purpose, to cope with and quell resistance for that purpose, yet on a national day, on that day when all the people assemble to record themselves in order that fresh illustration may be given of the cardinal principle that the majority shall rule, the occasion may become a prey to riot, disorder, fraud, defiance; and because of a provision written in the statutes by a democratic majority in the two Houses of Congress, the hand of national authority is helpless, parelyzed or tied acquisesence being given to the intended is helpless, paralyzed, or tied, acquiescence being given to the intended meaning of this enactment. That is the reason why the Senator from Iowa does not like it. I dislike it for the same reason. The Senator from Connecticut, if he were not a democrat, would dislike it for the from Connecticut, if he were not a democrat, would dislike it for the same reason. But the thing which we condemn most emphatically when it is adverse to us finds a certain toleration when in our favor. Therefore the honorable Senator from Connecticut sits here as complacently as that distinguished democrat of Rome whose name was Nero is said to have sat on a memorable occasion.

Mr. EATON. I think he was a republican.

Mr. CONKLING. I am not surprised at that. The honorable Senator for Connecticut pays republically confesses that he thought Nero ator from Connecticut now practically confesses that he thought Nero was a republican.

Mr. EATON. He acted like one.

Mr. CONKLING. I can understand that a man under the other aberrations and hallucinations touching the political history and the political condition of the world should fall even into that error. I should not be at all surprised if the democrats of Connecticut in general half that their falls. eral held that belief.

Mr. EATON. Nero was certainly for a third term. He was an

Mr. CONKLING. My friend grows more certain as he goes on. I presume he believes that too, whereas the history is that Nero was indefatigably and only a one-term man. But then when the Senator is wrong only three to one, the ratio of error is unusually small for him. If he comes within three, certainly there should be no fault found with his efforts as a guesser.

But, Mr. President, anything the Senator from Iowa can say upon this topic will go into history as one of the ornaments of discourse, as was quaintly said on another occasion, because he cannot by arguing confute the multiplication table; and here sit ten or twelve more than half of the Senate to put this provision into the bill and to keep than half of the Senate to put this provision into the bill and to keep than half of the Senate to put this provision into the bill and to keep it there for what it is good for in the next election, and I do not deny that in connection with some bills now on the Calendar, which will doubtless pass by exactly the same vote and majority, it will be worth a great deal, not in ascertaining truly the judgment and will of a majority of the American people, not in insuring a stainless, truthful election, not in obtaining an honest return from that election, for in my belief it stands in derogation of all these things, but it will be useful in that grapple for the mastery in which the political organization engaged in it is headed by these distinguished men. Therefore, it is to be adopted, and for that reason, as well as because I believe it is wrong and vicious. I shall yote against it, and I shall yote fore, it is to be adopted, and for that reason, as well as because I believe it is wrong and vicious, I shall vote against it, and I shall vote against the bill which contains it, and I should vote against it if in addition to the appropriations for the Army it contained also appropriations for other branches of the public service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Kirkwood,] on which the yeas and navs have been ordered.

So the amendment was rejected. Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to add after the word "convened" in line 10 of section 2:

Nor shall this section be held to apply to any case in which the military power of the United States may be employed pursuant to sections 1989, 5298, and 5299 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or either of said sections.

I think the scope of the amendment that I have already offered and which has been voted down, and that offered by the Senator from Iowa and rejected, covers the whole principle of the possible action of the Senate and its evidently determined action to break down the laws of the United States that are intended to secure the rights of people of the United States in elections and in civil pursuits, and in laws of the United States that are intended to secure the rights of people of the United States in elections and in civil pursuits, and in the judicial administration of justice under the Constitution. At the same time I do not intend, if I can help it, that the Senate of the United States shall escape from that responsibility upon any suggestion, which it is true has not yet been made, that the amendments already offered were too vague or too general, and, therefore, I have offered this amendment. These sections are:

It shall be lawful for the President of the United States, or such person as he may empower for that purpose, to employ such part of the land or naval forces of the United States, or of the militia, as may be necessary to aid in the execution of judicial process issued under any of the preceding provisions, or as shall be necessary to prevent the violation and enforce the due execution of the provisions of this title.

SEC. 5298. Whenever, by reason of unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages of persons, or rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall become impracticable, in the judgment of the President to enforce, by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, the laws of the United States within any State or Territory, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth the militia of any or all the States, and to employ such parts of the land and naval forces of the United States as he may deem necessary to enforce the faithful execution of the laws of the United States, or to suppress such rebellion, in whatever State or Territory thereof the laws of the United States may be forcibly opposed, or the execution thereof forcibly obstructed.

SEC. 5299. Whenever insurrection, domestic violence, unlawful combinations, or conspiracies in any State so obstructs or hinders the execution of the laws thereof, and of the United States, as to deprive any portion or class of the people of such State of any of the rights, privileges, or immunities, or protec such cases, or whenever any such insurrection, violence, unlawful combination, or conspiracy, opposes or obstructs the laws of the United States, or the due execution thereof, or impedes or obstructs the due course of justice under the same, it shall be lawful for the President, and it shall be his duty, to take such measures, by the employment of the militia or the land and naval forces of the United States, or of either, or by other means, as he may deem necessary, for the suppression of such insurrection, domestic violence, or combinations.

The title is "Title XXIV, of Civil Rights," and a part of that title is directed against violations not only of the private and civil constitutional rights of citizens of the United States, but of their rights to vote for members of Congress, protecting them in those rights which the Constitution in express terms says Congress may regulate and protect, and denouncing punishments for those who violate them.

Section 1989, to which I have referred, provides that it shall be Section 1989, to which I have referred, provides that it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to exert its military lawful for the Fresident of the United States to exert its military power in aid of the judicial process of the United States for the vio-lation of the elective rights of citizens in voting for members of Con-gress in the way pointed out. The Senate is evidently determined to break that down; and not content with the doubtful phraseology of the practical inhibition of the last Army bill has now added to it what the Senator from New York and the Senator from Iowa have so clearly pointed out, an additional provision that relieves the former provision from whatever difference of opinion might have existed as to its scope. As to what its scope was without this addition, I express no opinion at this time. It is sufficient that the section as it stands, reasonably construed and taken altogether, as we are always stands, reasonably construed and taken altogether, as we are always bound to take such things to get at their meaning, is not merely a section which says that a certain amount of money shall not be paid on a particular occasion, and, which would thus be merely in one sense of the term a failure to appropriate for that occasion, but it is a section which amounts in my judgment in legal effect to an utter destruction of the power of the President of the United States through destruction of the power of the Fresident of the United States through the channels and in the ways already provided by law from exerting the military power of the United States on an election day to enforce the judicial process of the United States anywhere in the neighbor-hood of the election or in respect of any crime, great or small, that is committed in connection with elections. It carefully provides for carrying out the same doctrine that led to what was called secession by one set of people in the United States, and by what is called, if we still have a right to express it in the old-fashioned way, rebellion by another part of the people of the United States, who succeeded in overthrowing it, and that doctrine is that it is the right of the State and of no other power in this country to take possession of all its re-lations with the National Government; and the most vital and inter-esting of those relations is the election of the national House of Representatives as well as of Senators.

resentatives as well as of Senators.

This section, therefore, provides in substance that it shall not be lawful for the President of the United States to exert the military power of the country in executing his duty under the Constitution to take care that the laws shall be faithfully executed, which laws now endeavor to protect the election of members of Congress in the ways provided. That shall be entirely taken away, and the only occasion on which on an election day the President of the United States in executing the laws of the United States under the Constitution can exert the power of the United States to enforce the law in the regular way, as the fathers provided it should be done, shall be when some governor of a State (I leave out the Legislature because it is never in session anywhere, I believe, on election day except for Senators) chooses to call for his interposition. And when the governor of a State calls, if he chooses to do so, for the interposition of the power of the General Government, for what purpose is it to be? I do not know but that our friends on the other side are as little posted in the Constitution as they appear to have been according to the Sen in the Constitution as they appear to have been according to the Senator from New York, in certain other historic questions. But this is

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them— That is the State in its political and separate character-against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, or of the executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic violence.

This clause, you will see, Mr. President, has no reference to the execution of any law of the United States; it only has reference, as its clear language explicitly states, to domestic violence against the authority of the State. Now this act says if, on an election day, there is domestic violence against the authority, which is the law, of the State, the governor may call, but if it be violence against the laws of the United States are Constitution, the President shall be disof the United States or its Constitution the President shall be disarmed. That is what it is, and it is nothing else, and that is what is intended. If it were not these amendments would be gladly adopted.

Now I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment I have offered.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
Mr. ALLISON. Let the amendment be read again.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read again.
The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "convened," in line 10 of sec-

Mr. EDMUNDS. In order to carry out the purpose that I stated of leaving no possible hook for criticism or evasion about this business, I offer this amendment: after the word "convened" in line 10 of section 2 I move to insert:

Nor shall this section be held to apply to any case in which the President of the United States has, under the Constitution and existing laws made in pursuance thereof, the power to employ military force in the faithful execution thereof.

On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

And provided further. That during the existence and operation of the foregoing restrictions upon any United States soldier appearing at the polls to keep the peace, it shall not be lawful for any other person to carry a deadly weapon, open or concealed, at the polls at any election for Representatives in Congress, under penalty of a fine not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, or imprisonment for a period not less than six months nor more than five years, or both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. BLAINE. I offer the following amendment:

Mr. WITHERS. I raise the point of order on that as being obnoxious to the same objection as the first amendment of the Senator from Maine was

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the Senator from Maine, if he desires to speak on the point of order.

Mr. BLAINE. I have changed the amendment as originally offered, so that, instead of its being general, it runs pari passu with the section to which it is a restriction, a further proviso. It lasts just as long as the section and goes just with it. It is intended to convey as far as I can—if I can get it in under the parliamentary ruling of the honorable Vice-President—the idea that so long as the troops of the United States under the authority of the President can under no circumstances be allowed to be present at the polls to preserve the peace, there shall not be permitted an utterly unlawful arming of men to break the peace; and that while we are warning off the soldiers of the United States, who never in the history of the Republic deprived a legal voter of his suffrage, we shall not throw the door wide open for the entrance of those who trample upon law and who entirely disregard the rights of those who trample upon law and who entirely disregard the rights of those to whom they are opposed in suffrage.

There is no use, Mr. President, in affecting any disguise about it. The trouble and all the trouble about the whole question of elections in the South comes down to the one point of violence at the polls, of there not being a peaceable, lawful, protected ballot. That is the whole of it. The republican party in its administration has attempted to protect that ballot by the use of the authority of the United States when members of the Congress of the United States were being elected. Now this section of the bill says that the President of the United States shall not do that, and that under no circumstances shall there be any use of Federal authority to preserve order and peace and se-be any use of Federal authority to preserve order and peace and secure protection when members of Congress are being elected.

I hope the same Congress that makes that declaration will also say that when no United States weapon, carried openly in pursuance of law, under all the restrictions of military discipline, shall be anywhere around when a member of Congress is being elected, mobs shall not be there armed; that they will also say that under no circumstances shall a man with a concealed weapon be present; that they will on that day make it an offense that any citizen of the United States shall go to the polls prepared to intimidate, to threaten, to wound, or to kill any other citizen of the United States who has an equal right with himself. himself.

I think the amendment as it now is worded, running exactly in point of time with the restriction in the section, is not subject to the point of order which was raised before. I think it has no application to the amendment in its present form.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Before ruling upon this point of order, the Chair desires to correct the Senator from Maine in a statement made by him upon the offering of his first amendment. He said that it was offered last year while the present incumbent occupied the chair, and that when it was so offered a point of order was made upon it and it was admitted. Upon an inspection of the Journal, it appears that the Army bill was considered on the 20th of June last. The Chair had been absent from the city almost two months at that time, and the amendment seems to have been admitted without any point of order lang raised.

point of order being raised.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Vice-President has not quite exhausted the record. This amendment was first offered by me on the 14th day of April, 1879, as the Vice-President will find by referring to volume 9, part 1 of the RECORD, and the Vice-President being in the chair then said:

Does the Senator from Maine regard his amendment as pending to the sixth section \dagger

The amendment which I offered then was not in exactly the same words, because I subsequently, before the 20th of June, changed it to conform to some objections which were made by Senators on this side of the Chamber, and I will state the difference. My first amendment was

And any military, naval, or civil officer, or any other person, who shall, except for the purposes herein named, appear armed with a deadly weapon of any description, either concealed or displayed, within a mile of any polling place where a general or special election for Representative to Congress is being held, shall, on conviction, be punished with a fine not less than five hundred nor more than five thousand dollars, or with imprisonment for a period not less than six months nor more than five years, or with both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court

The only essential difference between the two amendments is that some Senators on this side of the Chamber, for whose legal opinion some Senators on this side of the Chamber, for whose legal opinion. I had respect, thought that it was exceeding the power of Congress to say that a citizen of the United States should not carry a weapon within a mile of the polls, that it might interfere with the guaranteed right of the people to bear arms, and therefore I changed it. But even with that provision in, the honorable Vice-President admitted the amendment without question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Was the Army appropriation bill then under consideration?

Mr. BLAINE. The Army appropriation bill was then under consideration, and this was moved as an amendment. I will give the history of it. That was the first Army bill. Then subsequently, when the Vice-President took his leave of the Senate, and the Senate. tor from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] became the presiding officer, the same amendment was offered by myself, exactly, and the Senator from Ohio, then acting as presiding officer of the Senate, admitted it also. Then in the form in which it was offered to-day—for it was copied by my secretary this morning before I came to the Senate Chamber from that bill to which the Vice-President has referred—it was offered to the second Army bill of last summer.

Thus it appears that the amendment was offered in three distinct forms last year and never excepted to. But I have been willing to conform to, and desire not to have any controversy with the presiding officer, and, therefore, I have changed the scope of the amendment, and instead of making it a permanent law I am content to get an order for one year if I cannot get it for all time. And, as my friend from Connecticut, [Mr. Earon,] who smiles approvingly upon this effort of mine, has been instrumental in merely warning off the Army for a year, we will claim quits and call it a fair and square game by ruling off the others for a year.

Mr. EATON. You might have a great deal of power in regard to what should be done at elections in the State of Maine in future years. You had better go to your own State of Maine for legislation on such

Mr. BLAINE. The State of Maine is a loyal State and it recognizes the right of the Congress of the United States to prescribe the time, place, and manner of holding elections for Representatives in Congress; and that is what my amendment alludes to; and the Supreme Court has recognized this right in the Federal Government. I am quite aware of the extent of the amendment I am offering, I will income my fixed from Congression and I have that his States.

will inform my friend from Connecticut, and I know that his State recognizes the same right, and I know that every loyal State in this Union—and I do not use that term in the old sense; I mean every State that intends to be loyal to the Constitution of the United States is well aware that here in these two bodies rests the right to order the time, and the place, and the manner of holding elections for Representatives in Congress. My amendment prescribes the manner and restricts any violence or outrage being exercised at the polls.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order for the reason stated by him before, that the second section of this bill respects simply the use of the Army of the United States at the polls, and the amendment of the Senator from Maine creates a new offense and a new punishment on the part of citizens. He thinks that is general legislation.

Mr. WITHERS. Then I understand the Chair to sustain the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the honorable Vice-President will do me the credit to say that he did not take this view a year ago.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair, on inspection of the Journal, has no recollection whatever of the circumstance alluded to by the Senator from Maine. It appears from the Journal before the Chair

Senator from Maine. It appears from the Journal before the Chair that the Army bill came from the House on the 12th day of June.

Mr. BLAINE. That was the second Army bill, after the President had vetoed the one on which the honorable Vice-President ruled in my amendment. I read to him from the RECORD—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Maine point the Chair to the RECORD that shows when any point of order was made upon the amendment?

mr. BLAINE. Nor was the point of order made to-day, except by the Chair, on which my proposition was ruled out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order was made by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.]

Mr. BLAINE. No; not at all. I have the Reporter's manuscript here. The Vice-President asked:

On what ground does the Senator from Virginia put his objection? Then:

Mr. Withers. I have not the rules of order by me; but there is a rule of order which prohibits the introduction of amendments, as I remember it, which have not been recommended by a standing committee nor by a head of a Department.

The Vice-President. The Chair does not think the amendment is in order, but not upon the ground stated by the Senator from Virginia.

And then the Chair for himself states the ground. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair holds it to be his duty when a point of order is made to enforce the rules as far as they should be applicable to the point of order, whether the Senator alleges the particular ground or not.

Mr. BLAINE. There was some dispute the other day when a point was up where I differed from a former occupant of the chair as to the propriety of the Chair suggesting such matters. Evidently the Vice-President sides with me that it was not his duty to suggest the objection last year, as he might have done if he deemed the amendment out of order.

I can only express my regret that on a matter of so great significance, and on a matter involving, as I think, so much that is important in the history of the legislation of the country on this point, the Senate should be deprived of the opportunity of expressing its views by a new ruling of the Vice-President upon a point that has hitherto gone three times into the record as being in order.

Mr. WITHERS. I have this to say: my first objection when I first raised the point of order was, in general terms, that the amendment was out of order, and when called upon by the presiding officer to state what rule of order was violated, I stated that I had not the rules by me, but quoted from memory a rule which in my opinion excluded it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was the fact. Are there further amendments?

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to a third reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill having had three readings, the

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate—
Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator will allow me to say that I gave notice that immediately upon the passage of the Army appropriation bill I should ask the Senate to take up the resolutions reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that being a privileged question, in reference to the Senatorship from Louisiana.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I had risen to move to proceed to the considera-tion of the bill to settle private land claims, but I admit the propri-ety of disposing of these questions of privilege, and I yield the floor to my friend from Delaware for the purpose of making the motion he

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that we now take up the resolutions of which I gave notice.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. As this is a privileged question I do not suppose that the Senator from Delaware desires to go on with the consideration of it this evening. Therefore I see no necessity for bringing it up to-night in order that it may have the right of way to-morrow morning. Being privileged the motion can be made to-morrow morning, and if the Senate desires to take it up it can do so at that time.

Mr. SAULSBURY Like not desire to detain the Senate desires to the senate desires to the senate desires to the senate desire the senate desires to the senate desire desire desire des

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not desire to detain the Senate this evening at all. I simply wish to get the resolutions before the Senate so that they may be the unfinished business for to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections March 22, 1880, as follows:

Resolved, That, according to the evidence now known to the Senate, WILLIAM P. KELLOGG was not chosen by the Legislature of Louisiana to the seat in the Senate for the term beginning on the 4th day of March, 1877, and is not entitled to Schale for the term beginning on the same.

2. Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford was chosen by the Legislature of Louisiana to the seat in the Senate for the term beginning on the 4th of March, 1877, and that he be admitted to the same on taking the oath prescribed by law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no, let us take the resolutions up first.
Mr. HARRIS. I thought they were before the Senate.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] to proceed to the consideration of the resolutions just read.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions are before the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRIS. If my colleague will yield to me, I will now make the motion that I suggested a moment since.

Mr. BAILEY. I yield for that purpose, reserving the right to the floor to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at five o'clock and eight minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 22, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY LANG-FORD, of Weston, West Virginia.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

POETICAL ADDRESS OF HON. S. W. DOWNEY. Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a question which I presume should be regarded as a question of privilege. I call the attention of the House to the RECORD of this morning, and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Rules with instructions to report whether the first fifteen pages of to-day's publication shall go into the permanent Congressional Record. I make this motion with the utmost respect GRESIONAL RECORD. I make this motion with the utmost respect for the gentleman [Mr. Downey] who has published in the Record the poem to which my motion refers. I suppose that members of the House are entirely at liberty to speak in verse or in prose, as they may choose; but I raise the question whether a gentleman has the right to file, under the privilege of printing a speech in the RECORD, a copyrighted book, which as appears from the heading here this is. It appears to be a poetical work which has been copyrighted, "all rights reserved;" and whether under the privilege granted by the House to print a speech on any given subject a man may file a manrights reserved;" and whether under the privilege granted by the House to print a speech on any given subject a man may file a manuscript copyrighted book and print it as a part of the permanent records of the House is a question worthy of consideration. Upon this question I doubt somewhat; and I move that the first fifteen pages of the Record of this morning be referred to the Committee on Rules with instructions to report to the House whether the poem there published shell heave a referred to the Committee on the polynomial of the state of the second of man from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] I will state that what I have done has been done after mature consideration. In relation to the point suggested by the gentleman as to the copyright, I will say that I have consulted the best authority perhaps in this country upon that question—the Librarian of Congress, Mr. Spofford; and he told me there was no question under the law that I had the right to copyright an argument which would appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I will add that I have no objection to the motion made by the gentleman from Ohio. Indeed I would be glad to see this question referred to a committee if there is any doubt whatever on the mind of any of the Representatives who are here to-day and who listen to What I say.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I have not the honor of the acquaintance of the gentleman from Wyoming, [Mr. Downey;] and I want to say to him and the House that I cast no reflection whatever upon him. I do not doubt his good faith in this matter at all. His performance may be, for anything I know, of a very high character of merit. I have not read it. But I think it important for us to know how far the privilege granted a Member or a Delegate to print remarks in the Congressional Record extends. I recollect that some years ago there came very near being printed, under this privilege to print, a British volume on some economical question, which it was proposed to publish entire in the records of this House so as to it was proposed to publish entire in the records of this House so as to give it circulation. Of course it is possible that the privilege of the House may be abused by persons getting leave to print and publishing volumes which the House might have no desire to see printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to state that he was not consulted by the Government Printer as to this publication. The gentleman from Ohio moves to refer to the Committee on Rules the first fifteen pages of to-day's RECORD, with instructions to report as to their admissibility into the permanent RECORD.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to make a remark on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio. Unless it is charged that this is some English book or some other book copied by the Delegate from Wyoming and gentieman from Onio. Unless it is charged that this is some English book or some other book copied by the Delegate from Wyoming and inserted improperly in the RECORD, it seems to me the motion of the gentleman from Ohio should not be adopted. Although the literary character of the speeches published, pages long, in the RECORD is, as we all know, very high—although the whole of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the Congressional Globe since the speeches of members of either House have been reported must also the conditions of the congression of of either House have been reported must show to the man of literary taste that there has hardly ever been anything thus published except of that high, sublime character which commands the admiration of the world; yet unless there is some charge here that these remarks of the gentleman from Wyoming are unworthy of a place among the class of literature which the rest of us have published in the RECORD class of literature which the rest of us have published in the RECORD heretofore, there is no reason for singling out this publication and sending it to a committee. I had the pleasure of looking over it for five or ten minutes this morning—the little time I had to devote to it; and I saw nothing in it [laughter] that would not compare very favorably with many other speeches published in the RECORD, in its application to the bill which the gentleman from Wyoming has presented. If in this House of poets there is a rivalry—if "wrath can dwell in celestial minds" when a rival exceeds them all in the brilliancy of the poetical effusions which he presents here let those who iancy of the poetical effusions which he presents here, let those who hancy of the poetical enusions which he presents here, let those who feel aggrieved make the objection; it certainly cannot come from the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter.]

Why should these remarks be singled out among all the thousand speeches that have been published including poetry and prose—prose of the highest order, and poetry approaching it as closely as poetry can? [Laughter.] And that, too, when this production comes from my young friend from Wyoming, a gentleman who, so far as I know, has never heretofore occupied a page of the Congressional Record has never heretofore occupied a page of the Congressional Record either in poetry or in prose.

Let us wait, Mr. Speaker, until the press of this country, until the literary minds of the country have given an indication of their appreciation of this effort, before we forestall their judgment and condemn it. Sir, I venture to say (it is wandering a little from the subject) that the Christian people of the United States, when they read the bill introduced by the gentleman requiring us to throw aside the old pagan divinities, the heroes and the myths that occupied the imaginations of people of the olden time, will wonder why in a Christian nation, among a Christian people, there should not be in this Capitol some recognition of the grand Biblical scenes which are fresh in our recollection from the readings of our youth [laughter] even if we have neglected to refer to them in these modern days of political we have neglected to refer to them in these modern days of political warfare in this House. Find me a Scotch Presbyterian in the United States who will not hail with delight this returning sense of justice and of propriety in the minds of a Christian people, suggested by the gentleman's bill, as he introduced it the other day and supported as he has supported it, in the glimpse I have had of his argument, in this beautiful argumentative poem presented to members here in the columns of the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, let these gentlemen lay aside their envy for a day, [laughter;] let them lay aside their jealousy of this rising poet for an hour, [renewed laughter;] let them give him fair play, which both Englishmen and Americans demand even from their fellows and their rivals. Let this go over for a few days. Let gentlemen read this poem before we are called upon to act in reference to it. I shall ask, sir, that it shall be read to this House. [Long-continued laugh-

I am told that is a threat. Well, if it is a threat and has the tendency to defeat this motion, I make it and shall insist upon it. [Laughter.] I should have had it read before this time; but I know the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMahon] demands action on the bill pending in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to relieve our whalers, who are now floating wildly about in the Arctic Ocean on the ice, chilled by the cool winds from the north, as I know; and from no report which he can have are there any genial, warm breezes melting that ice and relieving those whalers. [Great laughter.] I say I will not make the demand now for the reading of this poem; because I desire the gentleman from Ohio to bring forward his relief bill the first moment it is possible to have it considered ward his relief bill the first moment it is possible to have it considered and acted on in the committee and in the House.

The question was put on Mr. GARFIELD's motion; and the Speaker declared that by the sound the noes had it.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word before the vote is taken. If a gentleman getting the privilege to print on any subject can deliver a poem, I can get up and reply under the privilege to print, and print the whole of the Æneid or the whole of Horace as my view of the pagan side of this question. I can print all the literature of antiquity under the cover of a privilege to print. The question is whether I am entitled, whether the Delegate from Utah is entitled to have the Mormon bible printed whenever he says he wants to defend anything, under a privilege to print—whether anybody and fend anything, under a privilege to print—whether anybody and everybody in this House can fill our RECORD with whatever they choose, copyrighted or not-put a book to print whenever they choose.

choose, copyrighted of the Privilege to print, publish in the Record an entire theological disquisition.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not think the resolution should be defeated by any pleasantry. I call for a division of the House, and demand by any pleasantry. I call for a division of t the previous question.

Mr. ATKINS. I demand the regular order.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered. Mr. BELFORD. I ask for the reading of the matter to which the resolution refers

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been seconded and the main question ordered upon the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio.

main question ordered upon the resolution of the gentleman from Onio.

Mr. BELFORD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BELFORD. The RECORD shows that some days ago the gentleman from Wyoming introduced a joint resolution with reference to certain pictures to be painted on the walls of the Capitol. In support of that resolution he has made a speech. I want to know if there is any rule of this House which requires a member when he subits an argument on any question to have it in prose instead of poetry? I know of no such rule. I know of no rule which compels a member to put his speech in any particular form. He has a right to submit his argument, under the rules, either in prose or poetry. Who is to say how much poetry and how much prose is to enter into a speech. If you exclude poetry, what is to become of the obituary speeches made in this House? What is the Committee on Rules to do with this exercities? this question? Is that committee expected to establish a scale and declare "here insert poetical quotation of three lines," and then members will indulge in twenty lines of prose?

Mr. HUTCHINS. That is not the question.

Mr. BELFORD. There is no charge that the gentleman from Wyoming is not the author of this production.

Mr. DOWNEY. I want to call the attention of gentleman to this fact before they vote.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been called. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The gentleman from Wyoming desires to say a word.

Mr. DOWNEY. It will be found on examination of this work—
Mr. ATKINS. I object.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.
Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir; I object.
The SPEAKER. Then the question is on the resolution moved by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]
Mr. STEVENSON. I think the Delegate should be permitted to be heard.

The SPEAKER. There is objection, and the rule is imperative.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I think the House is voting under a misapprehension. The opinion prevails this is the work of some other author.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of debate.
Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am told the Delegate from Wyoming is the author of the production.
The question recurred on Mr. Garfield's motion.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 98, noes 81.
Mr. PAGE demanded the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 119, nays 105, not voting 68; as follows:

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

PRESENTATION OF THOMAS JEFFERSON'S WRITING-DESK.

Mr. CRAPO. I ask unanimous consent of the House that there be taken from the Speaker's table the message of the President of the United States in reference to a memorial of Thomas Jefferson donated to the Government by its present owners, and ask that the same be read.

The message was read, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have the honor to inform Congress that Mr. J. Randolph Coolidge, Dr. Algernon Coolidge, Mr. Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, and Mrs. Ellen Dwight, of Massachusetts, the heirs of the late Joseph Coolidge, jr., desire to present to the United States the desk on which the Declaration of Independence was written.

It bears the following inscription in the handwriting of Thomas Jefferson:

"Thomas Jefferson gives this writing-desk to Joseph Coolidge, jr., as a memorial of his affection. It was made from a drawing of his own by Ben. Randall, cabinet-maker, of Philadelphia, with whom he first lodged on his arrival in that city, in May, 1776, and is the identical one on which he wrote the Declaration of Inde-

The desk was placed in my possession by Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, and is herewith transmitted to Congress, with the letter of Mr. Winthrop expressing the wish of the donors "to offer it to the United States, that it may hereafter have a place in the Department of State in connection with the immortal instrument which was written upon it in 1776."

I respectfully recommend that such action may be taken by Congress as may be deemed appropriate with reference to a gift to the nation so precious in its history and for the memorable associations which belong to it.

BUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 22, 1880.

Mr. CRAPO. I now ask that the letter of Mr. Winthrop be read. The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 14, 1880.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 14, 1880.

MY DEAR SIR: I have been privileged to bring with me from Boston, as a present to the United States, a very precious historical relic. It is the little desk on which Mr. Jefferson wrote the original draught of the Declaration of Independence.

This desk was given by Mr. Jefferson himself to my friend the late Joseph Coolidge, of Boston, at the time of his marriage to Jefferson's granddaughter, Miss Randolph; and it bears an autograph inscription, of singular interest, written by the illustrious author of the Declaration in the very last year of his life.

On the recent death of Mr. Coollidge, whose wife had died a year or two previously, the desk became the property of their children—Mr. J. Randolph Coolidge, Dr. Algernon Coolidge, Mr. Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, and Mrs. Ellen Dwight—who now desire to offer it to the United States, so that it may henceforth have a place in the Department of State, in connection with the immortal instrument which was written upon it in 1776.

In the Department of State, in connection with the immortal instrument which was written upon it in 1776.

They have done me the honor to make me the medium of this distinguished gift, and I ask permission to place it in the hands of the Chief Magistrate of the nation in their name and at their request.

Believe me, dear Mr. President, with the highest respect, very faithfully, your obedient servant,

ROBT. C. WINTHROP.

His Excellency RUTHERFORD B. HAYES,

President of the United States.

Mr. CRAPO. Mr. Speaker, I now offer the following joint resolu-

Joint resolution No. 290.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the thanks of this Congress be presented to J. Randolph Coolidge, Dr. Algernon Coolidge, Mr. Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, and Mrs. Ellen Dwight, citizens of Massachusetts, for the patriotic gift of the writing-desk presented by Thomas Jefferson to their father, the late Joseph Coolidge, upon which the Declaration of Independence was written.

And be it further resolved. That this precious relic is hereby accepted in the name of the nation, and that the same be deposited for safe-keeping in the Department of State of the United States.

And be it further resolved. That a copy of these resolutions, signed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, be transmitted to the donors.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time.

Mr. CRAPO. Mr. Speaker, the message of the President and the letter of Mr. Winthrop, which have just been read, give the historical sketch of the relic, which by the munificent generosity of the family of the late Joseph Coolidge, of Boston, is now presented to Congress. The genuineness of this relic has been authenticated by the autograph inscription upon it by Jefferson himself, which states that this writ-inscription upon it by Jefferson himself, which states that this writing-desk, from drawings of his own, was made by Ben. Randall, cabinet-maker, of Philadelphia, with whom he lodged on his arrival in that city in May, 1776, and is the identical one on which he wrote the Declaration of Independence.

The resolutions which I have offered propose that this desk be deposited for safe-keeping in the Department of State. A similar resolution was adopted by Congress in 1843, upon the occasion of the presentation to the United States by a citizen of Virginia of the sword of Washington and the staff of Franklin. There is now confided to the keeping of the nation, with the sword of Washington and the cape of Franklin, the desk of Jefferson.

cane of Franklin, the desk of Jefferson.

What memories crowd upon us with the mention of these names. Washington, the soldier, whose sword was drawn for the independence of his country; Franklin, the philosopher, the benefactor of his ence of his country; Frankin, the philosopher, the beneractor of his race, who with simple maxims pointed out the road to wealth and who disarmed the lightning and the thunderbolt; Jefferson, the accomplished and enthusiastic scholar, whose marvelous genius and masterly pen gave form to that immortal paper which proclaimed liberty to all mankind. These are names never to be forgotten. These men were the founders of the Republic. Their name and fame are secure, and in the centuries which are to follow will be treasured by a grateful and loving people among their choicest possessions.

Mr. Speaker, the nation gladly accepts and will sacredly keep this invaluable relic. The article itself may be inconsiderable, but with this simple desk we associate a grand achievement. Upon it was written the great charter of civil liberty, the Declaration of American Independence. We pay to the heroic hand who signed that wager of battle the honors which are paid to the heroes of the battle-field. It was not valor alone which secured to us self-government. The leaders in the revolt against the tyranny and the established institutions of the Old World had courage of opinion and were full of mature wisdom and incorruptible patriotism. The men who signed the paper pledging their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor in support of the Declaration, and who made their fearless appeal to God and the world in behalf of the rights of mankind, were both lion-hearted and noble-minded.

Upon this desk was written in words as pure and true as the word of inspiration that document which opened up "a new era in the history of the civilized world." Its fit resting place is with the nation's choicest treasures. It is a precious memorial of Jefferson, more eloquent and suggestive than any statue of marble or bronze which may commemorate his deeds. In accepting it in the name of the nation we recognize the elevated private character, the eminent virtue, the profound knowledge, the lofty statesmanship, and the sincere patriotism of Jefferson, and we honor him as the father of popular government and as the great apostle of liberty.

To the pledge of safe custody with which we accept this gift we join the solemn promise that with still greater fidelity we will guard the inheritance of free institutions which has come to us through the valor of Washington and the wisdom of Jefferson, and that we will faithfully transmit, undimmed and unbroken, their richest legacies

Liberty and the Union. [Great applause.]
Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I most cordially second the resolution offered by the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Crapo.]
It is an interesting fact that citizens of Massachusetts, who are also descendants of the author of the Declaration of Independence, thus mingling in their veins the blood of the two most ancient Commonwealths of the Union, should present to the United States to-day this precious memento of that great paper which was written by a son of Virginia, and was supported by the powerful and fervid eloquence of an illustrious son of Massachusetts.

How wonderful and curious is the power of the imagination to inthe the immortality of human thought into this unconscious desk that felt the impress of that pen which vindicated the already existent fact of the freedom and independence of the thirteen American States! We have long had the original paper among our archives, and now we have the desk on which it was written. How vividly these recall the head and heart and hand of Jefferson, the writer; of Adams, the advocate; and of each of those other representatives of the original thirteen States whose signatures to the paper have given them an immortal fame!

The office of the true statesman is akin to that of the poet. The statesman must interpret and embody in words or deeds the latent thoughts, interests, purposes, and destiny of his people. In a great crisis, it is his to manifest to them, and to declare to the world, in well digested forms, the causes of present action, and to forecast the future policy of his country. Under the inspiration of such a statesman, a people becomes conscious of its appointed work, and labors intelligently to achieve by the wisest methods the highest objects of

national ambition.

In this sense, there was nothing new in the Declaration of Independence. The rough jewels of a people's thought were gathered, polished, and set in this splendid coronet, placed upon the brow of a virgin continent, by the genius of Jefferson. From the teeming soil of his fertile and comprehensive mind sprang fruit-bearing thoughts for the generations following; and he uttered them in an age and to men of simple tastes and habits, whose heroic natures preferred conflict to indolent submission to wrong, if by a brave struggle freedom and independence could be won. Their appetite for liberty had not been perverted by the taste of luxury, nor their passion for independence corrupted by self-indulgence. War was needed to win liberty and independence. Luxury could have won neither; but let us not forget it may, as it has done, cause the loss of both after they have been gained by patient endurance and heroic courage.

It must be remembered that the English-speaking people of the Col-been gained by patient endurance and heroic courage.

It must be remembered that the English-speaking people of the Colonies were inheritors of the muniments of Anglo-Saxon liberty, ascertained and established in the thirteenth century by Magna Charta, the written constitution of England, which itself declared everything to be void that was contrary thereto; that the English revolution of the seventeenth century was our own; that in 1623, before James I, the Pedrat King died Virginia dealward by statute what was confirmed. the Pedant King died, Virginia declared by statute what was confirmed as fundamental law by treaty in 1651 with the commonwealth of England that the people of Virginia could not be taxed but by the consent of her own house of burgesses; that Massachusetts in 1636, and other Colonies subsequently, approved the same vital principle; that Samuel Adams in May, 1764, in Faneuil Hall, and Patrick Henry in May, 1765, in the house of burgesses of Virginia, in solemn and defiant tones, denounced taxation by any other means as tyrannical and against law; that a congress of nine Colonies in October, 1765, proclaimed the same doctrine; that on the 14th of October, 1774, the first Congress having met September 5, 1774 weging compressions. Continental Congress, having met September 5, 1774, nemine contra-dicente, declared that the inhabitants of the English Colonies, by the laws of nature, the principles of the English constitution, and their several charters or compacts were "entitled to the free and exclusive power of legislation" in all cases of "taxation and internal polity" in their "several provincial legislatures," as they were not and could not be properly represented in the British Parliament; that representation and describe most on the state of the state o not be properly represented in the British Parliament; that represent-ation and taxation must go together; that jury trial was their "great and inestimable privilege;" that the keeping a standing army in any Colony in time of peace, without the consent of its legislature, was against law; and that they claimed all of these as "their indubita-ble rights and liberties," and insisted they could not be altered or abridged without their own consent "in their several provincial legislatures.

And it is interesting to state further, that Mr. Jefferson had already written the preamble to the constitution of Virginia, (drawn by the master hand of George Mason, of Gunsten Hall,) which had been adopted on the 29th of June, 1776, in which preamble are recited the charges against the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain, with little difference of phraseology from that used in the great Declaration itself. Nor do I doubt that both were written on this mahogany desk in the city of Philadelphia. It is obvious, therefore, that the ideas embodied in the Declaration had been floating more or less distinctly embodied in the Declaration had been floating more or less distinctly in the minds of our revolutionary fathers for years before Mr. Jefferson put his hand to that formal statement of a people's thoughts.

Nor must it be forgotten that in 1775 the Colonies in Congress assembled, as well as in their respective legislatures, had taken up arms for the defense of their liberties, while disclaiming any purpose to sever their political relations to Great Britain. Lexington, Concord, and Bunker Hill, Crown Point and Ticonderoga, Great Bridge, Moore's Creek and Fort Moultrie, and other fields were stained with the blood of men fighting for their liberties against the government whose legitimate authority they still acknowledged.

But the time had come for rebellion against their government to cease and for a revolution of their government to begin. Rebellion had sought to alter the course and policy of administration, and had failed. Revolution was needed to "alter and abolish" the existing governments and to institute new governments, securing the rights and respecting the liberties of the people. Accordingly we find that Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Rhode Island, North and South Carolina early in 1776 took steps to establish new governments for their respective people. In April, 1776, Massachusetts directed all of her writs to issue in the name of "the people and government all of her writs to issue in the name of "the people and government of Massachusetts," and not in the name of the king. On the 15th of May, 1776, the convention of the people of Virginia met in Williamsburgh, and on that day declared for a "total separation from the Crown and government of Great Britain," and on the same day instructed her delegates in Congress to propose to Congress "to declare the united colonies free and independent states, absolved from all allegiance to or dependence upon the Crown or Parliament of Great The convention on the 12th of June, 1776, adopted a declaration of rights, and on the 29th of June, 1776, a constitution, by both of which Virginia declared her complete independence.

We are thus prepared to understand why John Adams, in the debate in Congress on the resolution for a declaration of independence, offered by Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, on the 7th of June, 1776, argued that "the question was not whether by a declaration of independence we should make ourselves what we are not, but whether we should declare a fact which already exists;" and hence the Declaration itself affirmed that "these united colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown; and that all political connection between them and the state of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved."

Let us now endeavor to present a brief summary of the primordial principles of American polity, formulated by the comprehensive genius of Jefferson, the true impersonation of the new era of free thought, free conscience, free commerce, free men, and a free continent.

First. Mark its denunciation of standing armies in time of peace without legislative consent, its declaration for the supremacy of the civil over the military power, for an independent judiciary, for impartial jury trial, for the bond indissoluble between representation and taxation, and for free government by and under law.

Second. Mark its clear assertion of the equality of the individual right of every man to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness as endowments of the Creator, not an assertion of an equality in the endowments themselves, but in the right of each to that with which his Creator has endowed him, inalienable by himself, because it would be a breach of his duty thus to relinquish the trust reposed in him, and inalienable by all others, because a violation of the right divinely vested in him.

This is the foundation-stone of all individual liberty under all forms of political institutions.

Third. Note the germ of local self-government as an essential to liberty resulting from the demonstrated impracticability of good government for any people when it is controlled by another people. The power which governs must not be alien to but must be in sympathy with the interests of the Government, or tyranny will be the result. It was not the tea tax or the stamp act which caused the Revolution. They were the occasions of it. They only demonstrated that it was an intolerable evil to any people where there was a want of sympathy between those who laid and those who paid taxes. In the language of Burke, in his speech on American taxation, when speaking of John Hampden and ship mone w"The payment of half twenty shillings on the principle it was demanded, would have made him a slave." The tax was small; the principle was great.

Rightly to be great
Is not to stir without great argument;
But greatly to find quarrel in a straw
When honor's at the stake!
Submission was slavery!
Resistence was liberty!

Fourth. The declaration of the right of revolution when existing governments wholly fail to be administered for the protection of the rights of the people, the right of every people to mold the form and control the administration of its government according to their will thus basing all government on the consent of the governed; the excellence of popular government of a representative democracy—these were all clearly indicated in this paper. And Mr. Jefferson by his subsequent advocacy of the freedom of the land from the fetters of primogeniture and entails and by his act for religious freedom, as well as by his whole life, vindicated the consistency of his devotion to the liberty of the people, under a government of law, restrained and wilded by themselves.

guided by themselves.

Fifth. But it is impossible not to see that in the minds of Jefferson and his contemporaries there was a larger view, looking to the continental questions of international importance connected with this new era of free thought, free conscience, free commerce, and the new institutions of democratic republics.

In 1823, Mr. Jefferson wrote a letter to President Monroe upon the promulgation of the doctrine bearing the name of the latter, in which

Our first and fundamental maxim should be, never to entangle ourselves in the broils of Europe. Our second, never to suffer Europe to meddle with our cisat-lantic affairs.

In the debate upon the Declaration of Independence, furnished by Mr. Jefferson to Mr. Madison, and published in the first volume of the Madison Papers, there is a reference to our prospective relations with Europe which shows that the doctrine of continental independence was in the minds and hearts of the men of 1776, and as a corollary from their great Declaration it became a fixed canon of our for-eign policy in 1823.

Such, Mr. Speaker, as I understand them, are some of the most im-portant principles recalled by the presence among us to-day of this unconscious witness of the work of that remarkable man, whose pen embodied the idea and purpose of the people of these States for the security of their liberty and for the independence of the American continent. Upon his tomb he left to be inscribed this, as the chief of his triple claims to the remembrance of mankind—in these words:

Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of American Independence, of the statute of Virginia for religious freedom, and father of the University of Virginia.

Adams and Jefferson; sons of Massachusetts and Virginia; co-workers in the adoption of this grand charter of freedom; twin brothers of the revolution; rival representatives of the two types of political opinion in America; after the strifes of a long political career, they passed together, in friendly reunion, into the land which is concealed from human vision, crowned with the benedictions of the people, to whose liberty, independence, and welfare their lives had been patriotically consecrated.

otherwise the consecution of the pledge of "Lives and fortunes and sacred honor," to the perpetuation of our free institutions and to the promotion of the glory of our common country, by a faithful adherence to that great Constitution, which was ordained and established to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity?

[Prolonged applause.]
The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed by a unanimous vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be conveyed to the Senate the desk, together with the resolution passed by the House.

STAMPS ON BANK-CHECKS

Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5897) repealing section 3418 of the Revised Statutes, in reference to stamps on bank-checks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the morning hour be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. Hooker in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Mr. MILLS. I suggest that the desk, which gentlemen all wish to see, be taken into the room in the rear of the Speaker's chair, that gentlemen may see it without interfering with the public business.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the Committee of the Whole now proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 5626) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask that by unanimous consent the first and formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.
Mr. CONGER. Has the bill been printed?
Mr. ATKINS. It has.

There being no objection, the first reading of the bill was dispensed

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to make a brief explanation of this bill, and I promise the Committee of the Whole House to be very concise in the explanation I shall submit as to some of its details. I will not occupy probably more than ten or fifteen minutes. If my colleagues upon the sub-committee should desire to submit any remarks I trust the Committee of the Whole will extend to them the same courtesy that I now ask at its hands. I have not asked in the House to limit the general discussion upon the bill because I deemed it entirely unnecessary, for very little time will be consumed in that manner I am sure. I wish to state to the committee that there are no political riders upon the bill. There are no riders upon it of any kind. It is a plain, simple, business transaction about which we are to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Mr. ATKINS. It is very difficult, I know, to preserve order after the interesting proceedings in which we have been engaged this morning. To have listened to such eloquent speeches, reviving such grand historical memories, and then to proceed immediately afterward to the dry details of an appropriation bill, is very like having the dessert beforehand and bacon and cabbage afterward. But I trust as we are voting away the people's money, the gentlemen in the House who do care anything about it will give a little attention while I give an explanation of some of the details of the bill. This appropriation bill admits of no declamation, no flowers, nothing but plain facts and figures; and the only point about them is to be correct and

The estimates, Mr. Chairman, for this bill in the Book of Estimates The estimates, Mr. Chairman, for this bill in the Book of Estimates and in the manuscript estimates together amount to $14,603,820.45. The total sum recommended by this bill is $14,385,797.70. The bill is less than the estimates by $218,022.75. The last appropriation act for the naval service appropriated $14,029,968.95. This bill exceeds, I advise the House, the last appropriation act by $355,828.75. The items of increase amount to $486,844.25; but then there are items of decrease which amount to $131,015.50; leaving a net increase of

In order that the committee may see that the Committee on Appropriations have in this bill held the service to something like the same standard for several years past which has gauged the naval appropriations, I submit the following table:

Estimates and appropriations on account of the naval service for the fiscal years 1878, 1879, 1880, and 1881.

Years.	Estimates.	Appropriations.
1878	$19, 430, 012 69 16, 233, 234 40 14, 187, 381 45 14, 603, 819 45	$13, 541, 024 40 14, 152, 603 70 14, 029, 968 95

The items of increase in this bill consist in the first place of $106.725 for the pay of the Navy. And I desire to state that the honorable gen-tleman who had charge of this bill, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Iteman who had charge of this bill, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] not now in his seat, cut down the appropriation in the last appropriation act for the pay of the Navy $106,725 less than was absolutely required; and there is to-day a deficiency of that amount for the pay of the Navy for this current year. That appropriation, however, the Committee on Appropriations did not consider should go into the naval appropriation bill of this year, but should be put into the general deficiency bill, of which we will hear something hereafter. But as there was an actual deficiency of that amount this year it was necessary that that amount should be put into this bill for this year in order to prevent a like occurrence for the coming year.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the chairman of the committee yield to me for a question?

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask my friend, the chairman of the committee, if that deficiency did not arise not from the failure to appromite of the committee.

mittee, it that denotency did not arise not from the failure to appropriate enough during the past year as required for the service of the year, but from deficiencies which had arisen before, and from the fact that the pay of the Navy is a continuing pay, and therefore the money appropriated last year went to pay deficiencies of previous years?

Mr. ATKINS. That is true. It occurred just in that way. But the naked fact I stated is nevertheless true. I desire, however, to avoid going into the questions which the gentleman from Georgia has suggested, because they have been discussed before this House time and time again, and I do not desire to trace the history of that deficiency. time again, and I do not desire to trace the history of that deficiency, because it is not necessary that I should do so in the conducting of this bill. The gentleman, however, is correct in what he states.

Then, sir, there are $90,000 additional for the pay of seven hundred and fifty boys who have been received into the Navy by the act of 12th March, 1879. They are upon the training ships of the Navy preparing to make sailors and seamen, coxswains, gunners, &c.

There is also an increase of $50,000 over the ordinary appropriation for torpedo purposes. The Secretary of the Navy asked this increase, and the Committee on Naval Affairs—and I am glad to see my friend, the chairman of that committee, in his seat—concurred in this item of $50,000 additional for experiments in torpedoes.

The object of this appropriation is to experiment in aggressive torpedoes. There are several kind of torpedoes. It is not necessary for me to go into any explanation in regard to them, but they are all for aggressive warfare. The object of them is the better to defend our coast and our cities in the event of an attack by any hostile maritime power, until the Government can be better prepared to defend itself by approved heavy ordnance, which we have not now in position and mounted. It is believed by the Secretary of the Navy and by military men that these torpedoes would be a successful expedient in the absence of approved ordnance, which we do not now have in suffiabsence of approved ordinance, which we do not now have in sumcient quantity upon our coasts.

The next large item of increase is $175,000 for provisioning the Navy; $82,000 of which is for the provisioning of these seven hundred and fifty boys, and the balance is on account of estimated increase in the price of provisions. For the present fiscal year only $1,025,000 was appropriated for the provisioning of the Navy. It is deemed necessary to appropriate $1,200,000 for the next fiscal year; but as I have already soid readly appropriate $1,200,000 for the fiscal year; but as I have already said nearly a hundred thousand dollars of that out as I have already said hearly a nandred thousand donars of that is for the provisioning of seven hundred and fifty boys.

There are a great many other items, and if any gentleman upon the floor desires to have me explain them I will do so. If no gentlemen desires it I will pass them over, because I do not consider it a matter of very great importance that I should enter into these details now. Still, if it is necessary to do so I am prepared to do so year. now. If any gentleman desires to ask me any question in regard to other details of this bill, I will be glad to answer. They relate to hydrographical work, the Naval Observatory, marine stores, &c.

I desire to state that the item of $100,000 that was appropriated last year for naval stores, and which is a continuing or self-sustaining fund, is not included in this bill, for the simple reason that it is not necessary, it not being exhausted. Therefore, the actual increase in the provisioning of the Navy amounts only to $75,000, instead of $175,000; and that is on account of not reappropriating the sum of $100,000 for naval small stores.

There is one other point to which I wish to call attention. In reading the report of the Secretary of the Navy gentlemen will find upon the fifth page the statement that $1,418,235.37 was appropriated for the fiscal year 1879-'80 more than was expended for that year. Now, I wish to make a little explanation in regard to that, for I do not think a cursory reading of the report of the Secretary of the Navy would enable one to distinctly understand it.

the Navy would enable one to distinctly understand it.

In fact there was not appropriated for the fiscal year 1879–'80 any more money than was absolutely expended. On the contrary, I am now informed that every dollar has been expended that was appropriated for the present fiscal year. But at the time of writing the report of the Secretary of the Navy the vouchers had not come in from our paymasters on foreign waters, and disbursements had been made which were not settled on the books. As there was actually the amount of $1,418,317.79 which was not balanced upon the books and not accounted for it appears that there was that much less of and not accounted for, it appears that there was that much less of and not accounted for, it appears that there was that much less or expenditure than of appropriation. But when the Secretary of the Navy had got in all the accounts of the paymasters, &c., it was found that there was not a dollar appropriated for the year 1879–'80 that had not been legitimately expended by the Navy. Therefore there is no surplus of appropriation for this year.

Under the act of 1870 the appropriations for the pay of the Navy are made continuous. That act required all unexpended balances, at are made continuous. That act required all unexpended balances, at the end of two years, to be paid into the surplus fund; but the pay of the Navy and the pay of the Marine Corps were made exceptions. Hence the pay of the Navy and the pay of the Marine Corps constitute a continuing fund from year to year; and the unexpended balances that exist in the fund for the pay of the Navy and Marine Corps are not required by the act of 1870 to be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

tion?

Mr. ATKINS. Certainly.
Mr. CHALMERS. It is not, then, true, as stated in the papers, that the Secretary of the Navy has saved a large amount of money?
Mr. ATKINS. Not a word of that is true, as I explained a few moments ago. When the Secretary wrote his report vouchers for $1,418,317.79 had not come in. Since that time they have come in, and have absorbed the whole appropriation for the present fiscal year.

Mr. MORSE. Such statements have been made.
Mr. ATKINS. I know they have been made; and I am aware that a very distinguished Senator on the floor of the Senate made that statement; and it has gone to the country. But it is not true, as I have already shown.

I am the last man in the world to do injustice to the present Secretary of the Navy. I have known him personally for nearly twenty-five years; and I have never known a man in this country who has maintained a fairer reputation or who is more entitled to the confidence of the country than Secretary Thompson. I believe he has administered his office as honestly, as faithfully, and as intelligently as any man could have done, let him be who he may.

Having made that explanation with regard to that little matter, I wish to say one or two words more. I am glad that to-day the American Navy is looking up. I state here in my place on the floor of this House that the representatives of the people and the people themselves are beginning to look to the question of improving our Navy. In the last fifteen years, since 1865, there has been a very large amount In the last fifteen years, since 1865, there has been a very large amount of money expended upon our Navy. It amounts, including the approor money expended upon our Navy. It amounts, including the appropriation for the present fiscal year, to $339,034,105.79—a very large amount of money. It is not for me to inquire whether that money has been properly expended or not—I do not deal with questions of that kind—but it has been expended. Such is the progress in the armament and construction of ships that I do not know whether it is very material how that money has been expended so far as the future of the Navy is concerned. I wish the lafair. of the Navy is concerned. I wish to be fair. I am no naval man; but I believe the idea prevails now that steel guns and steel ships are to I believe the idea prevails now that steel guns and steel snips are to take the place of all other kinds of guns and all other kinds of ships as men-of-war. If so, even if this large amount of money has been expended improperly, yet in the course of a very few years, with the progress in the construction and armament of ships, the old ships and the old ordnance would be supplanted by new.

The commerce of the United States is yearly expanding and increasing, and its protection is of the first importance to the people; and while I would not favor an increase in our Navy to such an extent as some other maritime powers possess, I nevertheless think that tent as some other maritime powers possess, I nevertheless think that our Government should see to it that in the future we should be particular to adopt the most approved modern pattern for construction of vessels and to equip them with armaments equal to any that police American commerce and American honor demand that much; and less will not satisfy the people or meet the demands of

The naval expenditures for the years 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876 were $78,387,944.20, an average of $19,596,986.05 for each year. (See table marked D.)

Of ships in commission during the years 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876 there were 229. During the years 1877, 1878, 1879, and 1880 there have been 228. There are to-day 93 war vessels of all descriptions ready and fit for service, according to the report of the Secretary of the Navy. There are 45 ships in commission to-day, whereas last year there were only 37. I have also a table showing the amount of labor and materials for the different naval bureaus. Perhaps I might as well refer to this a little in detail. For the Bureau of Construcas well refer to this a little in detail. For the Bureau of Construction and Repairs, $1,200,000 was appropriated for labor alone for the present fiscal year, and $300,000 for materials, fuel, freight, &c., making $1,500,000 for this bureau. For the Bureau of Steam-Engineering $475,000 was appropriated for labor, and $325,000 for materials, fuel, and freight. For the Bureau of Ordnance, $150,000 for labor, $77,970 for materials, fuel, and freight. For the Bureau of Yards and Docks, $305,156.25 for labor, and $134,843.75 for materials, fuel, &c., making in round numbers $440,000 in all. For the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, $350,000 for labor, $450,000 for materials, fuel, &c. rials, fuel, &c.

I have also here a table showing appropriations on account of construction and repair and steam-engineering of the Navy for the fiscal years from 1869 to 1880, both inclusive:

It seems from this table that during the years 1869, 1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876, the mere items appropriated for construction and repair amounted to $27,792,900; whereas for the years 1877, 1878, 1879, and 1880, the amount appropriated for the same objects was only $6,540,105.75. In other words, the amount appropriated for the Bureaus of Steam-Engineering and Construction and Repair during the first-named years was over 200 per cent. greater than for the last four years. If I desired to pay a compliment I might offer one in this connection to the present Secretary of the Navy. But I am not here to pay compliments or to make criticisms.

Mr. Chairman I promised to be very brief. I know that feets and not here to pay compliments or to make criticisms.

Mr. Chairman, I promised to be very brief. I know that facts and figures are very unentertaining. If any gentleman desires to ask me any question in regard to the details of this bill, I shall be pleased to answer if I can. If not, I yield the floor to any gentleman who may wish to continue the discussion; otherwise I ask that we proceed with the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I desire to say that the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House have had before them the pending appropriation bill. As the result of our examination, I will state that, believing in the first place that the present Secretary of the Navy has administered his Department with very great economy and with marked fidelity to the public interests and trusts committed to his hands; believing that his purpose was first to promote the public service, and, secondly, to do so with strict economy; believing that he is in and, secondly, to do so with strict economy; believing that he is in this respect in accord with the Committee on Appropriations, as well as the Committee on Naval Affairs, the latter committee have determined, while having before them other matters possibly of administrative reform, to lend their aid to the Committee on Appropriations in securing the speedy passage of this bill, not embarrassing it by proposing any amendments whatever.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to weary the Committee of the Whole with remarks upon this bill. But in view of the fact that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. ATKINS] seems to have thought it necessary to convince us that no more money was appropriated by the last Congress for the fiscal year of 1880 than was necessary for the support of the Navy Department, I desire to add my testimony on that question to his. The Committee on Appropriations has not, either in this Congress or in the last, given any more than it ought to have given to the support of this Department of the Government. I am inclined to go a little further and say in reference to the economical administration of the Secretary of the S tary of the Navy, if it may be called economical administration, that it is rather due to the Committee on Appropriations and to Congress It is rather due to the Committee on Appropriations and to Congress than to him. In saying this I have as high respect for that gentleman, for his honesty and integrity, as has the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations; but I say this because I believe that more money ought to be appropriated for the support of his Department than has been by the pending bill; that during the four years to which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has called attention more money could have been spent by this Department. attention more money could have been spent by this Department properly and for the best interests of the Government than was. And I am much inclined to think—and I am going to pay the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a compliment before I get through—I am very much inclined to think that all sub-committees of the Committee on Appropriations, which have heretofore had to deal with this question, have run a race with each other to see which one could put the Navy on the shortest possible allowance. The present chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—and here comes in my compli-ment—has been the only one who has dared to raise this appropriation a couple of hundred thousand dollars and provide for the necessities of the Navy Department.

Take this item of $106,000, referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Atkins.] As I understand it, it was a striking down of the estimate of the Department that amount arbitrarily. When it was done, the committee were well aware there must be a deficit, that money sufficient to pay that branch of this Department had not been appropriated, and that a deficiency would have to be provided for;

but the gentleman who had charge of the bill was bound to bring it down to the same figures maintained by his predecessor, and in this race for economy the estimate of the Secretary of the Navy was arbitrarily reduced. This Congress is compelled—and I congratulate the chairman of the committee that he has had the bravery to leadto allow the amount which was asked for the Department, and as Congress at the last session failed to make an ample appropriation, this Congress will be compelled to provide for a deficiency. I say the credit for the small amount of money expended by the Navy Department is due to Congress and due to the Appropriations Commit-

Mr. BLOUNT. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. HISCOCK. With pleasure.
Mr. BLOUNT. Does my friend say the deficiency in the pay of the Navy grew out of a failure to make sufficient appropriations in the leat Navy appropriation bill?

Navy grew out of a failure to make sufficient appropriations in the last Navy appropriation bill?

Mr. HISCOCK. What item does that occur in?

Mr. BLOUNT. It occurs in this way, if my friend will allow me—

Mr. HISCOCK. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT. It occurred in this way: For a long time there came over from the war a large sum of money, and we appropriated $5,400,000, and sometimes $5,600,000, and so on, until after awhile that fund became exhausted, when an estimate was carefully made from the registrar showing the pay of officers and men of the Navy, and that amount was appropriated, every dollar of it. Then a deficiency was asked, and that was appropriated. We appropriated for this fiscal year every single dollar which the registrar showed was wanted for that purpose. But these officers are off sometimes one, two, and three years; they do not come in; and out of that fund for the pay of the Navy they are paid.

The appropriation for this year is used for the payment not only of officers of this year's service, but of last year's, and perhaps of the year before. It is not like a deficiency in any other branch of the service. A statement of expenditures for this purpose does not disclose the year in which it has occurred. Therefore it does not follow because there is a deficiency in the pay of the Navy it grows out of insufficient appropriation for the service of this year and from a deficit, insufficient appropriation for the service of this year and from a deficit, as it may have grown out of failure to pay in another year.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, the amount of money necessary to pay the men employed in the Navy can be arrived at by a mathematical calculation. Congress has been accustomed for years previous to this fiscal year to arrive at it mathematically, as I understand, and each year to make appropriation of a sufficient amount to pay the Navy for that year.

Mr. BLOUNT. If my friend will allow me to interrupt him again.

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend will see, if he will take up the naval appropriation bills for several years past, say for eight or ten years past even, the appropriation for the pay of the Navy has not been made in the manner stated. For instance, for the years 1874, 1875, 1876, and so on, he will find when we had a larger number of men in 1876, and so on, he will find when we had a larger number of men in the Navy than we have now by one thousand, and so with reference to the number of officers, the appropriation was from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 less, growing out of the fact we then had a large fund to the credit of the pay of the Navy coming over from the war. He will find for a period of eight or ten years the appropriation was far below what we are now making, and that it is only within the last two or three years we have come to the point we must estimate exactly what it does cost, because that old fund of the Navy is exhausted.

My friend will allow me to say further that, in this identical bill and the bill for the previous year, for the first time the method he says has been the method in relation to the pay of the Navy has come into use, and we have appropriated exactly what the Secretary wanted from that list as it came from his office and agreed to as correct by the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Appropriations,

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I have not had the experience on the Committee on Appropriations of the gentleman from Georgia, the Committee on Appropriations of the gentleman from Georgia, and perhaps I have been wrong in assuming that Congress did what it should have done, and when there was a certain sum of money to be due the Navy for a year's service, that it made the appropriation to pay it. If I am wrong in stating what has been done, no one will challenge the statement as to what Congress should have done. This is sure, that, for the current year in which the deficiency arises, the estimate of the Department was for a given sum to pay in full the officers and men of the Navy; that it was not appropriated upon the supposititions case; that possibly the men in the service of the Government might not present their vouchers and make demands for their money as it grew due, but I am willing Mr. Chairman, to act their money as it grew due, but I am willing, Mr. Chairman, to accept as the reason for this deficiency the fact that Congress failed to make the proper appropriations, trusting the creditors, officers and seamen, would not call for their pay. Yet, sir, I say in all frankness that I have been inclined to believe, and I fancy the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] has been inclined to believe that the policy which animated the sub-committee in striking down the estimated the sub-committee in striking down the mate for last year was that they might present to the House a more economical bill than had been presented by their predecessors. Certain it is, and it has been demonstrated at the present time, that it is necessary to make the appropriation asked for here to pay the Navy, it was necessary to have made it last year for that purpose; and the Committee on Appropriations this year have adopted the policy of not trusting to the non-presentation of the vouchers of the officers and men serving in this branch of the Government for their pay, but have made the appropriation to pay them.

Now, I said some little time ago before I was interrupted that I gave full credit for the meager amount of money spent by this Department entirely to Congress, entirely to the Appropriations Committee rather than to the Secretary, and I am one of those who are entirely willing it should rest there and rest there forever, for I do not believe years; neither is there a sufficient amount appropriated in the present bill.

And I desire in this connection very briefly to call the attention of the committee to the items of this appropriation bill. Take the item of "construction and repairs." For that an appropriation has been made in this bill of $1,500,000, $300,000 of which amount is to be expended for material. I think the appropriation is the same for the current year, and it is the same amount that was appropriated for that bureau last year.

This item for construction and repairs, is for keeping the property of the Government in order, maintaining it, keeping it from running down, in effect to prevent it from being utterly lost and destroyed down, in effect to prevent it from being utterly lost and destroyed by its use and natural decay.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one thing is evident, either last year we appropriated too much for this purpose, or this year we do not appropriate enough. The estimates are the same as they were last year. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if that is not so?

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir; the same.

Mr. HISCOCK. The estimates are the same as they were last year.

Then, that being the case, we appropriated too much last year, or this year we appropriate too little, and for this reason—

Mr. ATKINS. Will my friend permit me to say just here that we have given all that has been estimated for the Bureau of Construction and Repairs?

Mr. HISCOCK. I admit that.

Mr. ATKINS. Then, would you have us to exceed the estimates?

Mr. HISCOCK. My answer to that, Mr. Chairman, is this: I believe the Secretary of the Navy has accepted the situation. He does not believe that it would be possible at this time, just preceding a presidential election, to induce the majority in this House to vote a larger sum for his Department than has been done in years past. That being the case, he did not ask as much as is believed to be really necessary for the support of this Department, and I am not here going to move to increase the amount. Such is not my purpose; but it is my purpose to give the credit for this stringent economy that will result in the destruction of our News and of the whole was least his house. in the destruction of our Navy and of the whole naval establishment to that branch of the Government to which, I think, it properly belongs, and that is to Congress and to the Committee on Appropria-

Now, Mr. Chairman, I repeat, that either last year we appropriated too much for that bureau or this year we do not give enough. Three hundred thousand dollars will not go as far in the purchase of material this year as it did last; the prices have advanced from 25 to 40 per cent., and from 25 to 40 per cent. of the necessary repairs therefore for the next current year will not be made. I will not dwell further upon this item. I will take that for steam-engineering, which I believe is the same this year as it was last. Three hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars is here provided for the purchase of material, and again I call attention to the advance in price of material.

Take the item of yards and docks. The amount appropriated for the purchase of material in that bureau is $134,843.75. The material used in this bureau like that used in the others has advanced in cost, but there has been no corresponding increase in the appropriation made for it.

I come now to item $450,000, for the purpose of equipment and recruiting, the equipment of our vessels to send them abroad and furnish the necessary supplies for their voyages. Four hundred and fifty thousand dollars is the amount appropriated for material, and I believe this also is the same amount which was allowed last year no increase in the amount of appropriation to meet the advance in

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that it will be absolutely imperative that a portion of our fleet shall be tied up before the year is ended; that ships must be taken out of the service, or else there will be a deficiency in the appropriations. I believe, sir, that this economy with ciency in the appropriations. I believe, sir, that this economy with reference to the appropriations for repairing docks, yards, and ships, and for steam-engineering, is to depreciate the property of the Government, and instead of its being in the direction of economy it is in the direction of destruction, and in the end it will prove to be the most expensive policy that could be pursued. Sir, for the purpose of making limited appropriations we are starving the Navy Department, allowing the docks, yards, and ships to get out of repair; are not keeping up the establishment, but are suffering it to be destroyed by use and decay; and in the end it will be far more expensive to repair the destruction or rebuild. That must be the inevitable consequence. It will cost far less to keep the Navy in repair than to sequence. It will cost far less to keep the Navy in repair than to build it up after it is allowed to run down.

Now, sir, I have already occupied the attention of the committee a much longer time than I had intended in this discussion, and I say again, in conclusion, that my whole purpose in this matter has been to give my honorable friend on the Committee on Appropriations rather than to the Secretary of the Navy the whole credit for economy in the expenditures in the Navy Department. I believe that in the future it will be better for the fame and the reputation of the Secretary of the Navy that the Committee on Appropriations and Congress have the credit for it than that it should be laid at his door.

Mr. ATKINS. If no other gentleman desires to take part in the general debate I will ask that we now proceed with the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule.

There was no objection, and the Clerk proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment. The following paragraph was read:

For contingent expenses of the Navy, namely: For rent and furniture of buildings and offices not in navy-yards; expenses of courts-martial and courts of inquiry, boards of investigation, examining boards, with clerks' and witnesses' fees, and traveling expenses and costs; stationery and recording; expenses fees, and traveling expenses and costs; stationery, and incidental expenses; newspapers and advertising; foreign postage; telegraphing, foreign and domestic; copying; mail and express wagons and livery and express fees and costs of suits; commissions, warrants, diplomas, and discharges; relief of vessels in distress and pilotage; recovery of valuables from shipwrecks; quarantine expenses; care and transportation of the dead; reports, professional investigation, and information from abroad; and all other emergencies, and extraordinary expenses arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, $89,000.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to amend by striking out "$80,000" and inserting "$100,000."

Formerly the contingent fund for the Navy was $100,000. During the last few years it has been cut down. But upon investigation of the items of that fund and the necessity for it, we have become satisfied that it has really been scant, and the Committee on Appropriations after investigating the matter and looking into the objects for tions after investigating the matter and looking into the objects for which the fund is expended, have come to the conclusion that it was necessary to increase the amount to $100,000.

There are a great many records and journals to-day in the office of the Secretary of the Navy that need indexing. These contain valuable information that members of Congress desire and that the people desire and that the officers of the Navy desire, and which cannot be arrived at without great clerical labor unless these records are indexed. It is necessary, in the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations, to increase the amount to $100,000 in order that these records may be indexed and that there should not be a deficiency for the objects to which the contingent fund is applied generally. for the objects to which the contingent fund is applied generally.

The amendment was agreed to. The following paragraph was read:

For the completion of the torpedo-boat experiments on the Alarm, $20,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. With the approval of the chairman of the committee I suggest an amendment to add at the end of line 209 the words:

The same to be immediately available.

So that it will read:

For the completion of the torpedo-boat experiments on the Alarm, $20,000, the me to be immediately available.

I am informed the contracts for this purpose have been made, and that the torpedo corps are ready to go on with these experiments immediately if they could be allowed to use this money.

Mr. ATKINS. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF PROVISIONS AND CLOTHING.

For provisions for the seamen and marines; commuted rations for officers, seamen, and marines; expenses of the handling and transportation of provisions; of inspections and storehouses; and for purchase of water for ships, and for provisions and commutation of rations for seven hundred and fifty boys, $1,200,000.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as 1010Ws:

After the word "dollars," in line 316, insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may substitute for the ration of two ounces of desiccated potatoes, six ounces of desiccated tomatoes, if he shall believe such substitution to be conducive to the health and comfort of the Navy, and not to be more expensive to the Government than the present ration, provided the same shall be acceptable to the men. In the event the Secretary of the Navy orders such substitution, he is authorized to have sold at public auction any desiccated potatoes on hand, the proceeds of which sale shall be used in the purchase of desiccated tomatoes for the use of the Navy.

Mr. ATKINS. That amendment makes a change in the rations. Is it offered with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy?
Mr. WHITTHORNE. Yesterday I received from the Secretary of the Navy a letter requesting this to be done. The Committee on Naval Affairs has not formally been in session; but so many of the Mayal Affairs has not formally been in session; but so many of the members as I have seen approved of the amendment. It simply allows this to be within the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, not to add anything to the cost of the rations, and provided further it is acceptable to the men. By turning to section 1580 of the Revised Statutes my friend the chairman of the Appropriations Committee will see that two ounces of desiccated potatoes form a part of the Navy ration. And by turning to section 1581 he will see the cases where the Secretary of the Navy has authority to substitute one article for another. In my amendment I have employed the precise language of that section.

cise language of that section.

Mr. ATKINS. The amendment is a change of the law fixing the ration, but I see no objection to it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not hear the whole of the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Whitthorne,] and I wish to ask whether his amendment dispenses with the use of desiccated potatoes as a part of the ration or whether it allows a choice?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The amendment leaves it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy to make a change provided it is acceptable to the men.

able to the men.

I append to my remarks a letter from the Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 17, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a communication from Paymaster-General Cutter, and fully indorse his suggestion in regard to the proposed change in the Navy ration. The law, as appears by the inclosed circular, authorizes the issue of desiccated vegetables or dried potatoes, but does not authorize the substitution of towatees.

I think the alteration in the ration would give great satisfaction in the Navy.

Very respectfully,

R. W. THOMPSON, Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. W. C. WHITTHORNE, Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs.

NAVY DEPARTMENT BUREAU OF PROVISIONS AND CLOTHING, Washington, D. C., April 17, 1880.

Washington, D. C., April 17, 1880.

Sin: I would most respectfully suggest that a request be made to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives to introduce a bill to so amend the Navy ration as to substitute six ounces of canned tomatoes, twice each week, in lieu of the two ounces of desiccated potatoes, twice each week, now authorized by law.

There is on hand at the different storehouses a quantity of desiccated potato unfit for use, and even when it was of good quality was not a favorite with the men of the Navy, and was seldom issued. The potato requires soaking before it can be made palatable, and there are no conveniences on board ships for doing this, and from representations made to me, and from my own experience, I am satisfied that the proposed change in the Navy ration would be most satisfactory and beneficial to the crews of our men-of-war.

I would also suggest that the stock of desiccated potato on hand be disposed of at public auction, as opportunity offers, and the amount realized be used in the purchase of tomatoes.

Respectfully,

Respectfully,

GEO. I. CUTTER, Paymaster-General U. S. Navy.

Hon. R. W. THOMPSON, Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment of Mr. WHITTHORNE was agreed to. The last paragraph of the bill was read, as follows:

For contingencies, namely: Freight; ferriage; toll; cartage; per diem for constant labor; burial of deceased marines; stationery; telegraphing; apprehension of deserters; oil, candles, gas; repairs of gas and water fixtures; water rent; barrack furniture; furniture for officers' quarters; bedsacks; packing-boxes, wrapping-paper; oil-cloth; crash; rope; twine; spades; shovels; axes; picks; carpenter's tools; repairs to fire-engines; purchase of fire-extinguishers; purchase and repair of engine-hose; repairs to public carryall; purchase of lumber for benches, mess-tables, bunks; purchase and repair of harness; purchase and repair of hand-carts and wheelbarrows; purchase and repair of galleys, cooking-stoves, ranges, stoves where there are no grates; gravel for parade-grounds; repair of pumps; brushes; brooms; buckets; paving; and for other purposes, $20,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. I offer a pro forma amendment and move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling attention to the pleasant unity with which we have gone through this bill and are about to pass it. I am happy to say it contains no general political legislation. It is devoted to the legitimate business of an appropriation bill, making appropriations for the vital interests of the nation in this Depart-

Now, sir, we have had considerable controversy during this week upon an immediate deficiency bill which contains some items of press-ing importance. The chairman of our committee when the bill now under consideration came up did not seek even to limit general debate, but courteously left the floor open to any gentleman who desired to participate in that debate. There was a brief debate, and we have gone through the bill amicably. I think we could do so nearly as well with all the appropriation bills.

I do not propose now to open a general discussion on that subject, but merely to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee—I took no part in the other controversy except so far as voting is concerned—to suggest to the gentlemen on the other side that if they will allow the hour and a half or two hours' debate asked for on this side, the immediate deficiency will can be considered at each state. mediate deficiency bill can be considered at any time without any difficulty.

I regret as a citizen—I drop partisanship for the moment and say sincerely that I regret as a citizen—that we should engage in any of these unseemly disputes upon matters of vital interest. I wish the Committee on Appropriations would now call up the immediate deficiency bill and permit a reasonable opportunity for debate on the part of the minority of the House, and thus dispose of an important

Mr. ATKINS. I will say to my friend from Connecticut [Mr. Haw-LEY] that the deficieny bill has no sort of connection with this bill. I hope the House may proceed to its legitimate business and go on with this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I withdraw my amendment. My object is gained by submitting a temperate request that we should go on with other necessary and important business.

Mr. ATKINS. I now move that the committee rise and report this bill, with the amendments, to the House. The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Hooker reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 5626) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. ATKINS. I call the previous question upon the bill and amend-

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This being an appropriation bill the rule requires that the yeas and nays shall be taken upon its passage.

Mr. ATKINS. In order to save time, I would suggest that by unanimous consent the vote by yeas and nays be waived.

Mr. HAWLEY and others. Agreed.

Mr. BURROWS. Can that be done under the rule?
Mr. BLOUNT. No.
Mr. ATKINS. Very well; I do not ask it for myself.
The question was taken; and there were—yeas 208, nay 1, not voting 83; as follows:

BUSINESS OF THE SESSION TO-NIGHT.

Pending the question on the passage of the naval appropriation bill,

Mr. GARFIELD said: Before the roll-call is commenced, I wish to withdraw the objection I made the other day to any business being considered at to-night's session except one bill from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The House has made an order upon that subject, and to change the order will require the action of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the order will be changed.

Mr. ATKINS. What is the proposition of the gentleman?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is with regard to to-night's session. The other day when the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] asked to have a session to night for the consideration of matters reported from the session to-night for the consideration of matters reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I objected to any business being considered to-night except what is known as the immigration bill. I did not then know what the gentleman had in view. So far as I can do so, I desire to withdraw all objection to the consideration to-night do so, I desire to withdraw all objection to the consideration to-might of other business from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. DUNNELL. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. Cox] is not now present. I know he is very anxious to bring forward the immigration bill.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the eall of the roll on the passage of the naval appropriation bill.

The roll was called, with the result above stated.

DR. FRANCIS L. GALT, OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask, by unanimous consent, to report from the Committee on the Judiciary a bill to remove the political disabilities of Francis L. Galt.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, when the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

 $\overset{}{B^}$ it enacted, &c., (two-thirds of each House concurring therein,) That all political disabilities imposed upon Francis L. Galt, of Virginia, by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States be, and the same are hereby, removed.

Mr. CONGER. Let the accompanying petition be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

UPPERVILLE, FAUQUIER COUNTY, VIRGINIA, March 15, 1880.

The honorable the Senate and House of Representatives:

In March, 1861, I resigned my position of passed assistant surgeon in the Navy of the United States, which resignation was accepted by the Government thereof, and afterward received the appointment of surgeon in the navy of the Confederate States, which position I held until the close of the recent war. I now ask for relief from whatever disabilities may attach to the above record, in accordance with the amendment to the Constitution providing for such cases.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

FRANCIS L. GALT.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the introduction of that bill. I desire

Mr. CONGER. I have the right to give reason—

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CONGER. Does the Chair decide I have not the right?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to object; and if objection is made the bill is not before the House; and if not before the House it cannot be debated.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair decides it is not the privilege, then, of a member to state why he objects.

Mr. McMAHON. If he could do that he might take a whole hour to give his reasons.

Mr. CONGER. Most certainly I shall after this exhibition of willingness to hear me.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am not responsible for the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is responsible. He knows the rules of the House and executes them.

Mr. McMAHON. And the Chair is very right about it.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. BAKER. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 2787, making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, with the recommendation that the first amendment be non-concurred in and the second concurred in.

The first amendment was read, as follows:

On page 1, line 1, after the words "one hundred" and before "thousand," insert "and lifty; "so as to make the paragraph read:
"That the sum of $150,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications and other works of defense, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

Mr. BAKER. The Committee on Appropriations recommend that amendment be non-concurred in, as we desire to know what is the reason for the increase.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The second amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Page 1, lines 12 and 13, after the word "rifles," strike out "two hundred and twenty-five" and insert "and the manufacture of four improved breech-loading twelve-inch rifled guns, four hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For the armament of sea-coast fortifications, including heavy guns and howitzers for flank defense, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, and implements, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, and for machine guns, including the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles, and the manufacture of four improved breech-loading twelve-inch rifled guns, $400,000.

Mr. BAKER. The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BAKER moved to reconsider the votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If the House should decide not to consider the contested-election case, and if the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to go into Committee of the Whole should prevail, the order of business in the Committee of the Whole would be determined by the rules

The SPEAKER. The question is, will the House proceed to the consideration of the contested-election case which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] desires to call up?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 56, noes 90.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the House decided not to consider the contested-election case.

Mr. SPRINGER. I give notice that I shall call up this case to-morrow, immediately after the morning hour, and shall endeavor to have its consideration continued from day to day.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, giving notice that my object is to have considered the bill to which I have just referred.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Members are asking information, and I hope the Chair will allow me to state what the bill is.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There are several other bills—Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. But as members are asking me for information I hope the Chair will allow me to give the title of the bill. It is a bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and settle the accounts of certain States and the city of Baltimore growing out of moneys expended by said States and the city of Baltimore for military purposes during the war of 1812. I am aware that when we get into Committee of the Whole the order of proceeding will be governed by the rules of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman made his statement, but will not allow me to make mine. I desire the considera-

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Virginia is in order.

Mr. COX.

Mr. COX. Is unanimous consent asked for ?
The SPEAKER. Debate can only proceed by unanimous consent, but the motion is in order.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Two bills touching trade-marks were referred to the Judiciary Committee on the 17th of December last, and permission was given to report upon the subject at any time. I, as the organ of the committee, am ready to report whenever the House will hear me. I desire to inquire whether the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to go into Committee of the Whole can be antagonized by a motion to take up the report I have indicated.

to go into Committee of the Whole can be antagonized by a motion to take up the report I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. The object of the gentleman can be accomplished by voting down the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I hope it will be voted down.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I call for tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 93, noes 56.

Mr. BREWER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion of Mr. Harris, of Virginia, was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. STEVENSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The title of the first bill on the Calendar will be read be read.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the consideration of the unfinished business before the committee.

ness before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the first bill by its title.

Mr. CONGER. What bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The first bill on the Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the unfinished business under the rules may be disposed of.

The Clerk read as follows:

House bill No. 4924, making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, in a conversation which I had with some gentlemen on the other side to-day I stated that I would not call up the deficiency bill this afternoon after the naval bill, if it was late; and unless it be laid aside informally—

Mr. CONGER. It comes up in the regular order of business.

Mr. McMAHON. I understand that; but unless it be laid aside informally I shall move that the committee rise for the purpose of th making such arrangements as the House may determine in reference to its consideration

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. As I understand, the rules provide that bills are to be taken up and proceeded with in the order in which they appear on the Calendar; and the bill to which I refer is on the Calendar previous to the bill making appropriations to supply deficiencies to which my friend from Ohio refers. Therefore, I apprehend that his motion would not be in order at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the fourth clause of Rule

XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

4. In Committees of the Whole House, business on their calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence, and when objection is made to the consideration of any bill or proposition, the committee shall thereupon rise and report such objection to the House, which shall decide, without debate, whether such bill or proposition shall be considered or laid aside for the present; whereupon the committee shall resume its sitting without further order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to laying aside this bill informally?

*Mr. BAKER. I object.
Mr. ATKINS. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that we go on with this bill now if gentlemen intend to consider it at all. I shall object to laying it aside, and I hope it will be proceeded with at once if it is in-

mr. WARNER. Let us have a vote upon it.

Mr. KEIFER. It is open to debate now.

Mr. McMAHON. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana as objecting to the consideration of the bill f

Mr. BAKER. No, sir; my objection was to laying aside the bill

Mr. BAKER. No, sir; my objection was to laying aside the bill informally.

Mr. McMAHON. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. If the gentleman in charge of this bill is willing to state that the committee can come to a vote upon it without consuming any time, I shall not object to its being considered; but if it is to be argued and discussed in the committee, then I shall ask that the rule be proceeded with.

Mr. BLOUNT. The rule to which the gentleman refers gives the appropriation bill preference.

Mr. HUNTON. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that there was an agreement informally it is true, entered into between the manager of this bill

ment, informally it is true, entered into between the manager of this bill on this side of the House and gentlemen upon the other side that the bill should not be taken up in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to-day. [Cries of "Oh, no!" on the republican

Mr. BAKER. There was no such agreement that I am aware of.
Mr. HUNTON. The gentleman in charge of the bill, as I understand, has so stated to the committee, and therefore I ask that this bill be laid aside informally, in accordance with that agreement.
Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HOOKER. My point of order is that we have gone into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills upon the General Calendar, and when we go into the committee for that purpose I insist that you must take up the first bill on the Calendar and subsequent bills in their order, of course giving appropriation bills the preference. The first bill on the Calendar giving appropriation bills the preference. The first bill on the Cal-endar that would come up for consideration at this time is one that I had the honor of reporting myself to the House; and I see no reason why we should take up a bill the gentleman from Virginia may desire to have taken up, or that any other gentleman may want to have considered, when this bill to which I refer has precedence under the rule, except, as I have stated, the appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this bill has the preference, being an appropriation bill and coming up as unfinished bus-iness, and will therefore be first considered unless it is the determination of the committee to lay it aside.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to be recognized, Mr. Chairman, and suppose that I am now recognized. I now yield the floor to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. McMAHON. I have charge of this bill and have not yielded the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio in charge of the bill.

Mr. McMAHON. I desire to know from gentlemen on the other side how long

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I do not yield, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Ohio. Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I want to have this matter distinctly understood-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I did not yield the floor.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio in charge of the bill

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Onio in charge of the bill is recognized.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. But the Chairman recognized me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois, supposing that he had risen to a question of order, not for the purpose of making a motion in reference to the pending question.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rose to discuss the bill.

Mr. McMAHON. I have been on the floor ever since the committee was formed, knowing that this would be the unfinished business. was formed, knowing that this would be the uninished business. Now I want to ask gentlemen on the other side whether they will be willing to accept this proposition, that one hour be allowed them for discussion and twenty minutes to this side?

Mr. CONGER. We cannot fix the time in the committee.

Mr. BAKER. I think we will accept the hour on this side.

Mr. MCMAHON. I move, then, that the committee rise for the purpose of making that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Stevenson, chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and having reached the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to Senate concurrent resolution to print 10,500 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution.

Also, that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. R. No. 290) accepting the gift of the desk used by Thomas Jefferson in writing the Declaration of Independence.

Also, that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. No. 100) to print extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1879.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. No. 3992) for the relief of Cyrus B. Ingham and others; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

IMMEDIATE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. McMAHON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and pending that motion I move that all general debate be limited to one hour and twenty minutes.

Mr. BAKER. With the understanding that one hour be allowed to this side of the House.

Mr. McMAHON. Yes; one hour of the time to be allowed to that side of the House.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

Mr. McMAHON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. McMAHON. Of course the understanding is there will be no vote this evening.

Mr. REED. I do not agree to that. Let us finish the bill to-night. Mr. BLOUNT. We have an evening session.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. Whitthorne in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. REED. I understand we rise at half past four. In that case I should not be able to finish at this time the remarks I desire to address to the committee. Under such circumstances I am ready to give way to a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. McMAHON. I hope the committee will not rise. It is not yet four o'clock.

Mr. PAGE. Is there not an order of the House, made several days ago, that at half past four to-day the House will take a recess?

Mr. REED. I prefer to go on.

Mr. McMAHON. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Maine,

[Mr. REED. Mr. REED. I take the hour in my own right.

Nobody regrets any more than I do the emphasis which has been placed on this situation by the persistent refusal of the other side to allow us a short time for discussion. I do not rise here for the purpose of giving utterance to a set speech. I only desire to put on record certain observations which are pertinent to this bill; and although I wish now to call attention to the scant courtesy which has been allowed two words this public I was now to do it in a manufactured to the scant courtesy which has been allowed two words this public I was now to do it in a manufactured to the scant courtesy which has been allowed to we wonthis which I was now to do it in a manufactured to the scant courtesy which has been allowed to we wonthis which I was now to do it in a manufactured to the scant courtesy which has been allowed to we wonthis which I was now to call attention to the scant courtesy which has been allowed to we wonthis which is the scant courtesy which has been allowed to the scant courtesy wh lowed to us upon this subject I propose to do it in a manner which shows that I have breadth and catholicity of spirit enough to appreciate the situation on the democratic side. And I ask you gentlemen on our side to put yourselves for a moment in the place of the gentlemen on the other side and see what you would have done under the like circumstances.

Suppose that you had begun this Congress with an avowed declaration and determination that you would override and overthrow the legitimate constitutional power of the Executive; and suppose that after one hundred and six days you had gone, beaten out of these halls, had gone, thus baffled and defeated, to the people and had by them been rebuked from all quarters of the compass, do you suppose that you would dare to come here and discuss any question again? Suppose you yourselves had found your opponents upon the other side divided and distracted by internal dissensions, and suppose that by your actions and your words you had left them united all over the land and victorious from one end to the other, do you suppose that you would repeat the operation at the regular session of Congress? Of course you would not. Suppose seven-and-seventy of you had stood up in your places and with solemn countenances, never so much as smiling at each other, declared that while the Constitution said that we could make and alter election laws, nevertheless we could not do either; and suppose that at the very next term the ultimate tribunal, the Supreme Court of the United States, had shown that all you had said was nonsense, and that seven-and-seventy of you had only shown your ears where you thought you were showing your minds, what sort of courage would you be able to bring to the discussion of constitutional principles? And I say that our brethren Suppose you yourselves had found your opponents upon the other on the democratic side are amply justified in the struggle they have made to prevent utterance of their own sentiments especially, and of our sentiments too.

So successful have they been in gagging their own side at this session of Congress that they have actually undertaken the business of gagging ours too. [Applause.] Suppose, for another thing, you belonged to a party which was made out of odds and ends, a party that had no principle which ran through it, a party that could not command a score of votes upon any particular principle, would you expose them to discussion and to the utterance of their honest sentiments? Suppose you had a party that had met at Saint Louis and declared themselves in favor of a reformed tariff, and suppose that, day after day, every Pennsylvania democrat, every Connecticut democrat, and almost every New York democrat, had gone up and proclaimed himself in favor of the protection of the best kind, or the worst, just as you please to call it. Certainly you and I would be desirous under such circumstances of suppressing discussion.

And when you come to questions of individuals, suppose you had men on your side who had contributed to that manifestations.

men on your side who had contributed to that magnificent improvement of the African race which has been designated by radical malignity as the massacre and butchery of Fort Pillow; and suppose you knew that at any moment they were liable to get up and pronounce a discourse on the doctrine and duty of conciliation! How would you like to let loose such men as those? Suppose you had anwould you like to let loose such men as those? Suppose you had another man in your ranks who wanted to call in all the silver in America and all in Europe to be coined into silver dollars, would you care to go into a discussion of the financial question under such circumstances? Certainly not. And suppose that very recently you had tried even the silence law and were not quite able to carry that out, but had felt the necessity of taking the benefit of the last hour and putting forward the ablest and at the same time the most experienced man that had been in the last election to make a discourse on the subject. And suppose that that gentleman, after he had got over the fervor of the democratic applause with which his effort was greeted and had examined his own speech carefully, had not been able to get it into shape so as to place it before the public in the RECORD for more than eight days and has not got it there yet. And suppose another gentleman had got up and proclaimed republican wickedness and infamy in regard to the public printing and the paper contracts and suppose when he found that those paper contracts had been under the sole charge, had been approved and ratified by the democratic committee on printing he had been unable to prepare his speech so as to print it up to this time. [Laughter.]

If you had met with all these misfortunes, would you not think that a mouth of that size ought to be closed right straight along? [Laughter.] ject. And suppose that that gentleman, after he had got over the

[Laughter.]

Now I hope I have shown you that I am capable, inasmuch as they have given themselves only twenty minutes and have given us an hour, of doing them justice before I start out in my speech. I wanted to make this as a prelude to the entirely non-partisan speech that I purpose to make here this afternoon.

I have alluded to the asymment of the cartings of the start out in the start

I have alluded to the argument of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Ewing,] and I purpose to say a few words in reply to it; not in the nature of a reply exactly, but simply because it clears my way for the argument, or rather for the suggestions—for perhaps they do not rise to the dignity of an argument—which I wish to offer to this House on this bill.

The gentleman from Ohio, forgetting all about the beautiful and interesting discussion that we had during the one hundred and six days we were here in the extra session, actually brings forward as a statement of our objections to such bills as this, the assertion that these provisions are objected to merely because they are legislation on appropriation bills. On that point I want to set him right. No party has ever made a stand against legislation on appropriation bills as such solely. Individuals have made that objection, but no party.

We take our stand upon a proposition more substantial than that, a proposition which is not gainsaid by our history and is continually gainsaid by their history. It is the proposition that no House of Representatives or Senate has any right to put on appropriation bills legislation which is objectionable to another branch of the Government, for the purpose of coercing that branch of the Government to approve a bill which would not otherwise have its approval, by withholding appropriations for the support of the Government unless such agreement was had. There is the proposition for which we contend, and there is the basis upon which we can stand. Yet the gentleman from Ohio with all his experience has not apparently found that out

Now let me refer to the two examples which he gives. In the first place, he says that we attempted to coerce Andrew Johnson. His sympathy with Andrew Johnson is natural, for both of them used to be with us. Why did we do that? It was because we had the power, in the case he vetoed that bill, to pass it by a two-thirds vote. We therefore did not expect to coerce him, but expected to pass legislation which we believed to be right in a proper, constitutional way. And he did not dare, notwithstanding all the vetoes that he had made, to provoke the fury of a decent people by objecting to such a bill.

Then the gentleman brings up against us a fact which during all the one hundred and six days of the extra session was carefully kept concealed. No gentleman on the other side ever alluded to that other instance to which he refers; that is, that in 1856 we attempted by this means to coerce the Senate. We did. But it took us just ten days, three hours, and twenty minutes to back out of that foolishness; and it took them one hundred and six days and five hours to do ness; and it took them one hundred and six days and five hours to do a like thing. And that is just the measure of difference between the sense of the two parties.

That is the only instance where we are really obnoxious to the charge which we make against them. I think the wisdom of our past life and history ought to be allowed to go in mitigation even of that, especially when we consider the extreme provocation which we received at the time. And I have no doubt that the gentleman from Ohio himself sympathized with us then.

I desire now to address to this House a few observations upon the particular amendment which is presented here for our consideration. I do not purpose to discuss any part of the immediate deficiency bill, except the single clause in relation to the election laws. That clause will be found on pages 11 and 12 of the bill as it is now printed with the Senate amendments. It provides—the Senate amendments. It provides—

That hereafter special deputy marshals of elections, for performing any duties in reference to any election, shall receive the sum of $5 per day in full for their compensation; and that all appointments of such special deputy marshals shall be made by the circuit court of the United States for the district in which such marshals are to perform their duties; but should there be no session of the circuit courts in the States or districts where such marshals are to be appointed, then and in that case the district judges are hereby authorized to convene their courts for the aforesaid purpose; said special deputies to be appointed in equal numbers from the different political parties. And the persons so appointed shall be persons of good moral character, and shall be well-known residents of the voting precinct in which their duties are to be performed.

The first objection I have to this appointment of special deputy marshals arises from the fact that the appointment is to be made by the courts. I believe such an appointment is contrary to the spirit and intent of the Constitution of the United States. In every republic and in every republican system of government there is a division of powers, which is not a division made by empirics, made by theoretical men; but which is the practical result of the sound sense of mankind ever since the republican form of government was first established. That division of the powers of the government is into legislative, executive, and judicial.

I might stand up here and quote to you by the hour the opinions of wise men and of sages on this subject. But it would be a waste of your time, for I presume there is no man here who is not sufficiently versed in the groundwork of our system of government to be well versed in the groundwork of our system of government to be well aware of all that I can say on this subject. I desire merely to call your attention to the several clauses of the Constitution in which this doctrine is enunciated for us. In the first section of the first article of the Constitution it is delared that—

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Then in the very first section of the next article of the Constitution it is declared that

The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of

And in the first section of the next article it is declared that-

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and es-

This principle has been thought to be so important that in very many This principle has been thought to be so important that in very many of the constitutions of the various States there is an express declaration that no one of these branches of government shall exercise the powers belonging to another; that the executive shall not exercise judicial or legislative functions, or the judicial legislative or executive functions, and so on. This principle is as completely a part of the spirit and genius of our national Constitution as if that instrument contained a provision similar to that embraced in the constitution of my own. State of Messachusetts of Norw York of Torpresses tion of my own State of Massachusetts, of New York, of Tennessee, and I do not know how many others.

I am aware, however, of another provision of the Constitution, to be found in the second section of the second article:

Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

I am not sufficiently posted in constitutional law to argue as some gentlemen on the other side did in reference to the provision authorizing Congress to make or alter regulations respecting the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators or Representatives. Upon that provision it was argued that because Congress is authorized to do this therefore it cannot do it. I am inclined to admit that Congress has the power, under the Constitution, to provide for the appointment of inferior officers as they shall deem fit; but this discretion is a judicial discretion in a certain sense; it is a discretion which Congress is bound to exercise under and by virtue of the Constitution of the United States and in conformity to its principles. I am sustained in this by the opinion of the court in the case of Exparte Hennen, which will be found in 13 Peters's Reports. It is there declared, (page 258:)

The appointing power here designated-

Referring to what I have been talking about-in the latter part of the section was no doubt intended to be exercised by the Department of the Government to which the officer to be appointed most appropriately belonged.

While the Supreme Court, in the case of Ex parte Seebold, recently decided, leave it to be inferred that Congress has the power of determination, nevertheless the rule of constitutional construction requires that Congress shall vest the appointment of inferior officers in that branch of the Government to which the power of appointment fairly belongs. While it may be maintained that the appointment of supervisors, who are somewhat in the nature of judges of elections, may be made by the courts, the appointment of deputy marshals by the courts is violative of sound constitutional principles and ought not to be permitted in this bill. What can belong more plainly to executive power than the action of the marshal on the day of election his business being to see that the laws of the country.

plainly to executive power than the action of the marshal on the day of election, his business being to see that the laws of the country are executed and that peace is kept at the polls? It seems to me there can be no question with regard to this matter and no question as to the duty of Congress in connection with it.

In addition to what I have said, I wish to submit a few considerations arising from the nature of the case, to which I think it is fair that Congress should give heed. It is provided in this bill that the appointment of deputy marshals is to be made from each party—not irrespective of party politics, to which we might perhaps agree; but one man is to be appointed because he belongs to one party, another because he belongs to another party, and a third because he belongs to a third party. Such a state of things, in my judgment, would be destructive of all responsibility, would be ruinous to the authority of the marshals; for it will be understood that the power of appointment by law carries with it the power of removal, so that no authority short of the circuit court could remove one of these deputy marshals, whatever might be his behavior. He would have a right to be there, irrespective of the orders of the man who ought to be the executive officer of the Government, to preserve the peace at the polls.

spective of the orders of the man who ought to be the executive officer of the Government, to preserve the peace at the polls.

Apart from that, I affirm further that the provisions of this bill are such as to neutralize the execution of the law. This measure does not join on to the election law anywhere. There is no provision for application to the court; there is no setting out of methods of procedure. It is utterly impossible to tell what this amendment is going to mean in practice. Then I think there is another "catch" in it; I will not say that this is intentional, but I think it is going to be difficult for courts of law to interpret what is meant by the words:

Should there be no session of the circuit courts in the States or districts where such marshals are to be appointed, then and in that case the district judges are hereby authorized to convene their courts for the aforesaid purpose.

Why, there is not a State in the Union where there is not a circuit court held. Therefore, it seems to me that it is going to be a nullity. What condition of affairs, then, are we to face? We must face the fact that in half the States of this Union there will not be any circuit court within months of the day of the election; and everybody knows that it is not possible to determine in June whether there is likely to be any necessity for keeping the peace at the polls in September or November. So that the whole tendency and effect of this amendment is to neutralize the election law. We have solemnly determined by a fight lasting over one hundred and six days that so far as we are concerned we will not submit to any amendment of the election law which does not increase its efficiency. If we took that ground upon this subject at the last session of Congress, we are doubly fortified now, because we have not only the support of the judgment of the Executive, but also the support of the judgment of the judicial branch of this Government. Thus we stand not only panoplied in our own opinions on the subject, but fortified by those of both the other branches of the Corporate. branches of the Government. Is this a time for us to yield; is this a time for us to give up laws in which we believe, the efficacy of which has been demonstrated to the satisfaction not only of our own party but all parties in the country?

but all parties in the country?

I have one other objection; and I hesitate somewhat to name it, because it is possible I may differ from gentlemen for whose opinions I have the highest respect. But the only right way for a man to act in a deliberative body when he does talk is to give it the benefit of his real views, wise or unwise. I come to speak at this point of a very taking feature in this amendment—that is the proposition to appoint a regular proportion of these officers from each of the political parties of the country. All this sounds non-partisan; it sounds fair; it sounds reasonable; but unless I am mistaken about the principles upon which republics are formed, there is no such thing as a non-partisan republic, and the moment you get a non-partisan republic that republic is tottering to its fall. Parties are created for some decent and respectable purpose; they grow out of the necessities and needs of mankind; and our system of Government is founded on the idea of ascertaining which party should be uppermost. That is the very of mankind; and our system of Government is founded on the idea of ascertaining which party should be uppermost. That is the very basis upon which we go through elections, and by virtue of which we exist. It is not our object, as my friend [Mr. Hawley] just now suggests to me, to produce twins. [Laughter.] The object is to have one party dominant, and, accompanying that, one party responsible.

If election matters go wrong, who is to be responsible under this proposed system? Why, nobody in the world.

Mr. HUTCHINS. The electoral commission.

Mr. REED. I will refer to the electoral commission by and by.

When you come to real facts, Mr. Chairman, it will be found that the expedients of non-partisanship have never worked practically in this Government. The best system is to have one party govern and the other party watch; and on general principles I think it would be better for us to govern and for the democrats to watch. [Laughter.] I appeal to the experience of gentlemen on all sides whether they ever knew any instance of municipal corruption which did not result from a non-partisan government. Tweed could not have perpetrated his robberies if there had not been Hank Smith and that class of fellows in his interest to ward off the fire of republican newsclass of fellows in his interest to ward off the fire of republican newspapers from him. I can conceive of no combination calculated to lead to more wrong than some of this boasted non-partisanship legislation and performance. While I think there is something in the objection suggested by my friend from Ohio [Mr. HURD] in some remarks which got into the newspapers, in which he said that if we were wrongly disposed something might be done with the appointment of democratic deputy marshals, I presume we are too good to indulge in that; but if we are bad enough not to enforce the election laws when we have the responsibility, surely a good deal of temptalaws when we have the responsibility, surely a good deal of temptation is being thrown in our path in the way the gentleman from Ohio has suggested. Mr. Chairman, these suggestions, it seems to me, are worth the while of this House to consider.

Another thing I object to, is the dragging the courts of this country into this kind of business. Courts are established to decide the rights of individuals and only incidentally to decide political questions. Wherever they are dragged into politics, such is the fierce nature of political discussion, such is its scathing, unsparing, merciless nature, that nobody can escape its reproaches and its attacks.

political discussion, such is its scathing, unsparing, merciless nature, that nobody can escape its reproaches and its attacks.

Why, have we not had instances enough? There was the electoral commission, a commission which my friend [Mr. Hutchins] has alluded to, which decided the only rule on which such a matter could have been decided, and which will meet the support of history when its decision comes to be considered by candid men. That body has received the opprobrium of gentlemen on the other side without stint, and probably if it had decided the other way, it might have had a little bit from us. For I recollect in the early stages of our conflict with the democratic party, it was spread all over the land that Chief-Justice Taney had decided that the negro had "no rights which any white man was bound to respect;" and yet, when you come to look at the Dred Scott decision, this chief-justice was only making an historical statement relating to past time alone, and I do not believe anybody on our side has ever taken the pains to correct it to this day. Here are recent instances which you have right before you. The Supreme Court at this very term decided that the election laws were constitutional, and hardly had they so decided when gentlemen bustled up here in their haste to denounce it as a partisan tribunal. In my own State, where the constitution required the supreme court to decide upon political matters, where they could not escape it, where they did their duty, and where the democrat on the supreme bench was as cordial in his agreement with the opinion as the others, and where they put down the most infamous crime that ever was attempted a crime that could only have been here of a union of and where they put down the most infamous crime that ever was attempted, a crime that could only have been bern of a union of greenbackism and democracy, they meet to-day nothing but opprobrium from the democratic party and from the people who were concerned in that crime.

Now, I say to you gentlemen that if the circuit court is dragged into the political arena, it is going to meet, no matter how just it is, no matter how considerate and righteous it is, it is going to meet the same unsparing, fierce, and merciless attacks. And for my part I do not want anything to be done which can have the effect of setting any portion of our people against the other. I believe it to be unwise. Another example: In the Tweed days in New York people looking on said: "These fellows are not managing these affairs right; now, what shall we do? Why, go to the court; let us use injunctions; let us take the power of the court, and use injunctions and stop the rascality of these men." What did it result in? It resulted in having Cardozo, McCunn, and George Barnard upon the bench. I tell you that you appeal to history in vain—

Mr. LAPHAM. And it resulted last fall in disgracing judicial officers in the city of New York.

Mr. REED. Yes; it resulted there in disgracing judicial officers. I say, Mr. Chairman, that while our system of government requires

Mr. REED. Yes; it resulted there in disgracing judicial officers. I say, Mr. Chairman, that while our system of government requires the courts to consider and decide upon points of constitutional law—that being an essential element in our Government—the exercise of which duty tends to draw down upon the judiciary the sweeping opprobrium of political factions, we should endeavor to restrict and not enlarge the exposure. This would be our course if we cared for our courts and for the high character of our judicial system. I appeal, therefore, to you upon two grounds: First, if this proposed legislation is fairly executed it will cause trouble at elections; and if it be unfairly executed it injurges the election laws and we are all agreed that is fairly executed it will cause trouble at elections; and if it be unfairly executed it injures the election laws, and we are all agreed that the election laws are right and just, and I say they are founded upon a wise statesmanship; they are founded upon statesmanship that will bear examination; they are the reproduction of all that is best and all that is effective to that end, and they have met the approval of the citizens of the various States. Under these circumstances our duty upon this subject is very plain and clear.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman from Maine will permit me to interrupt him now I will move that the committee rise, as the hour has arrived for the House to take a recess.

Mr. REED. With the understanding that I retain the floor I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. COX. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Whitthorne, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee of the Whole having, according to the order of the House, had under consideration the bill of the House (H. R. No. 4924) known as the immediate deficiency bill, with certain Senate amendments thereto, had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 5623) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to repair and extend the public building owned by the Government to repair and extend the public building owned by the dovernment at Cleveland, Ohio; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 189) legalizing the health ordinances and regulations for the District of Columbia.

Mr. KENNA, from the same committee, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (S. R. No. 91) to print the eulogies delivered in the Senate and House of Representatives upon the late Georga S. Houston, a Senator from the State of Alabama; when the Speaker signed the same.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. Wait, for one week from Friday next, on account of impor-

To Mr. Kelley, till Monday next;
To Mr. Phelps, for ten days from Monday, on account of sickness in his family;

To Mr. Finley, for four days, on account of important business;
To Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family;

To Mr. Hubbell, until Monday;
To Mr. Huscock, for one week;
To Mr. Covert, for five days, on account of important business;
To Mr. Hawley, for three days, on account of important business;

To Mr. HUMPHREY, for this evening.

EDWARD K. WINSHIP.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that the bill (H. R. No. 91) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of Acting Assistant Paymaster Edward K. Winship, United States Navy, on the Private Calendar, be passed by on private bill day, during his absence, and retain its place on the Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS AT EVENING SESSION.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio in reference to the business from the Committee on Foreign Affairs to be considered at the evening session.

The SPEAKER. The business for this evening has been fixed by order of the House.

Mr. COX. I hope there will be no objection to allowing the committee to take up other business. I will state to gentlemen that there is no intention of calling up the Irish relief bill this evening.

Several Members objected.

The SPEAKER. The hour of four o'clock and thirty minutes have the committee of the co ing arrived, the House will now take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the order directing this evening's session. The Clerk read as follows:

Thursday, April 15, 1880, on motion of Mr. Cox, by unanimous consent, "Ordered, That at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., on Thursday, April 22, the House take a recess until seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.; said evening session to be for the consideration of the bill of the House No. 2408, to regulate immigration."

Mr. COX. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. No. 2408) to regulate immigration, reported on the 7th day of January last from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX. I move to limit general debate to one hour.

The SPEAKER. The House having practically gone into Committee of the Whole, that motion would not be in order at this time.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SIMONTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole committee for the purpose of considering a bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2408) to regulate immigration.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, this measure has increased interest to our country because of the increasing immigration. It is of especial interest because of the absolute necessity of Federal action, growing out of the decision of the Supreme Court. Mr. Justice Miller, delivering the opinion of the court, says in regard to the legislation of New York State under consideration:

We are of opinion that this whole subject has been confided to Congress by the Constitution; that Congress can more appropriately and with more acceptance exercise it than any other body known to our law, State or national; that by providing a system of laws in these matters, applicable to all ports and to all vessels, a seriors question, which has long been matter of contest and complaint, may be effectually and satisfactorily settled.

The report which I presented here with the bill on the 9th of December last contains a full statement of the great necessities for this legislation.

Inasmuch as the head-money cannot any longer be levied by the State and as the duty is laid on the Federal Government to provide for this real emergency, we ask for $250,000 as the fund out of which the immigration, not to New York only but to the United States, the immigration, not to New York only but to the United States, shall be cared for and supported.

Look at these photographs of Castle Garden, Ward's Island, and the picturesque group on the dock of Castle Garden! You will see at a glance the splendid arrangements heretofore made and which ought to be continued.

What does this system accomplish? The immigrants are received on arrival by the commissioners; are disembarked under their care; are protected from overcharge and imposition; are supplied with interpreters and information; are put in communication with friends in this country, and afforded facilities for corresponding with their friends at home; are furnished with labor till they can find employment for themselves; are aided to that employment through an employment horsest the statement of themselves. ment for themselves; are aided to that employment through an employment bureau; are forwarded to their destination if going beyond New York, having a choice of routes, and are, so far as practicable, protected and cared for en route; are sent to the hospital if ill, and are generally taken care of there, or for some time afterward, if found in the State, requiring care.

The bill is practical. It has a provision for a labor bureau. In 1870 it recorded for the state, results a provision for a labor bureau.

1879 it provided for the employment of 15,235 persons, 10,124 males, 5,111 females. Of these, 794 had professions and skilled labor, the rest were agricultural. Most of the females were domestics. They brought here, not merely their moneys, but earned from $9 to $12 a month, which entered into our wealth.

month, which entered into our wealth.

It matters not what causes bring this mass of humanity to our shores; whether it be our general prosperity and our institutions, our rich soil, our free land tenure, or the big standing armies and despotic rule of foreign governments, they are coming in great strength. The decrease of 1873 is being made up. Three steamships day before yesterday brought fifteen hundred; the aggregate for the week was fifty-four hundred and fifty-six. The cable reports as leaving last week a fleet of thirteen steamships laden with this precious human freight for the port of New York. Shipping offices over the sea are crowded with anxious emigrants. They are mostly made up of the tough Teutonic stock, whose language never syllabled slavery. Since tough Teutonic stock, whose language never syllabled slavery. Since the 1st of January, 1880, to the 20th of this month the immigration foots up 56,404. This exceeds by 38,844 the number last year for the same period. Look at these figures and observe the increasing magnitude of this marvelous movement of mankind.

Of these new arrivals there come from Germany, 9,884; Ireland, 7,143; England, 4,537; Sweden, 3,003; Norway, 307; Denmark, 481; Netherlands, 565; Belgium, 304; Switzerland, 1,479; France, 508; Italy, 1,770; Greece, 138; Russia, 718; Luxembourg, 161; Bohemia, 300; various other countries, 193.

The year 1854 was a grand year for immigration. This year promises an excess of two hundred thousand over 1854, or the enormous number of half a million. They come in groups, families, tribes—I was about to say nations! Young, healthy, vigorous, and with ambitions and hopes for content, liberty and honors. More than half—60 per cent.—go West and South at once under the admirable and honest system at Castle Garden. The wealth they bring is not altogether in their brawn and brain. It rates $60 a head in cash. This year they will add $40,000,000 to our wealth, not counting their labor after being here.

will add $40,000,000 to our wealth, not counting their labor after being here.

Who would deny to such an army of workers hospitality and relief, too, from sharks, as well as protection, until they find their destination? Since Congress must do this, why object to the provisions of this bill? It is indorsed East, South, and West by boards of health, charities, trade and commerce, and by Legislatures and city councils.

They ask, and properly ask, to guard against the influx of pauperism, crime, idiocy, and the burdensome immigration thrown upon us by designing governments abroad. The bill does this by all adequate by designing governments abroad. The bill does this by all adequate ways and penalties.

There is nothing of verity in the written history of mankind equal to the magnetism of this our land. It draws to itself by an attractive force millions of our kind who would seek the betterment of their condition and the noblest inspirations of liberty.

whether De Quincy wrote fact or fancy in his wonderful and elaberate essay on the "Flight of a Tartar tribe," whether his picture was born of the fumes of opium or from the recondite and fictitious screed of some learned Mongolian, certainly never did literature contain such a weird description of an exodus! No anabasis or expedition, either in profane or sacred history, compares with it. A nation fled over boundless Asiatic steppes, pursued to the borders of paganism by the ferocity of a Christian nation, under the rule of the great irate Greek Czar! Vengeance and privations in every form, of arms, hunger, thirst, and cold, tracked in blood and death footsteps of two hundred thousand Kelmucks with their families and herds, bound in one great thousand Kalmucks with their families and herds, bound in one great thousand Kalmucks with their families and herds, bound in one great league of misery, until foes met in a terrific agony, to lap in common in their maddening thirst the waters of a lake outside the great wall of China, which became incarnadined in a death grapple of mutual frenzy. And there the startling and memorable horror ended!

On the margin of the steppes this national exodus was memorized by a monument of granite and brass. It celebrated the pursuit over thousands of pathless, treeless, waterless miles, until these wandering sheep were gathered into the fold of the shepherd after infinite sorow!

Here is the inscription upon the monument erected to those who departed to the rest of Paradise from the afflictions of the desert:

By the will of God,

Here upon the brink of these deserts,
Which from this point begin and stretch away,
Pathless, treeless, waterless,
For thousands of miles, and along the margins of many mighty nations,
Rested from their labors and from great afflictions
Under the shadow of the Chinese wall,
And by the favor of Kien Lang, God's lieutenant upon earth,
The ancient children of the Wilderness—the Torgate Tartars—
Flying before the wrath of the Grecian Czar, Wandering sheep who had strayed away from the Celestial Empire in the year 1616,
But are now mercifully gathered again, after infinite sorrow,
Into the fold of their forgiving Shepherd.
Hallowed be the spot forever,
And
Hallowed be the day—September 8, 1771!
Amen.

What a contrast to this wild and calamitous movement of a nation over the Asiatic desert is this grand exodus of our time from the transatlantic to the cisatlantic shores. No hunger or thirst pursues; no baleful foe hunts and kills; no treeless, pathless, waterless desert adds its agony to the pursuit of a vengeful enemy. They come in thousands, borne hither by the energy of steam; and silently, quietly, and by all friendly offices are welcomed to our fresh continent, under conditions that guarantee wages, support, and honors; life, liberty, and happiness; blessings untold and ineffable; unlike any movement for the hearefaction of our reas since it left its prince any movement. for the benefaction of our race since it left its primeval home in the garden of God.

If indulgence in imagination were allowed upon such a practical theme and scheme, might there not be erected at the gateway of our metropolis, in some island in our imperial harbor, as a companion to the splendid effigy of the Goddess of Liberty of the gifted Frenchman about to be placed there, and upon such a monument more durable than granite and more eternal than brass, this inscription to celebrate the grandeur of our asylum to the peoples of our earth:

By the will of God

Here, upon the brink of the new and fruitful world,
Which from this point begins and stretches away
Innumerable railways of iron and ways of water—
For thousands of miles inland and through the heart of mighty States—
Rested from the wearisome demands of despotism and armies,
Under the shadow of the American Constitution,
And by the favor of a generous American Congress,
The children of the Old World,
Flying to the land of freedom,
Whose brain and muscle, perpetuated in their offspring,
Are mercifully permitted in the centennial years
Of American Independence and peace
To be gathered within the fold of our Union!
Hallowed be the spot forever,
And
Hallowed be the day which under Federal care Gave to mankind such Inestimable blessings!
Amen!

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Chairman, the bill now under consideration reported by the chairman, my distinguished colleague on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, was also introduced during the Forty-fifth Congress, approved by the entire New York delegation in the House in that Congress, and by every member of the Board of Commissioners of Emigration of New York. Its features are not new. Similar provisions have been tried for more than thirty years in the State of visions have been tried for more than thirty years in the State of New York and have worked successfully.

This bill provides for a report of the name, place of birth, last legal residence, age, and occupation of every immigrant upon arrival. It also provides for a specific report of all paupers, convicts, lunatics, idiots, and deaf and dumb, blind, maimed, and infirm persons, and of all immigrants who are unable to support themselves. It prohibits the landing of those who have within six months previous to their arrival bean immate of lunatic swilling or poor, house, vious to their arrival been inmates of lunatic asylums or poor-houses, and provides for their return at the expense of the ship that brought them. It guards against the introduction of persons charged with crime, who shall be pardoned upon condition of their coming to the United States, and to illustrate the necessity for this provision I ask the Clerk to read a few extracts from letters of the Secretary of State and the president of the Board of Commissioners of Emigration of the State of New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE. Washington, August 7, 1879.

To the Commissioners of Immigration, Castle Garden, New York:

To the Commissioners of Immigration, Castle Garden, New York:

GENTLEMEN: This Department is in receipt of a dispatch from the chargé d'affaires of the United States at Berne, dated 24th July ultimo, stating that he has been informed that the poor-house authorities at Basle contemplated sending to the United States an inmate of that institution, one Daniel Stenn, who is sixty-one years of age, and is described as having passed several years in the house of correction for crime. It is further represented that this man has never earned an honest living and has even refused to perform the duties assigned to him in the poor-house. The information received by Mr. Fish is more than verified by an investigation which he caused to be instituted. The investigation disclosed the fact that the authorities of Basle intended to ship this man by the French steamer Amerique, sailing Angust 2 from Havre. Mr. Fish learned, however, before mailing his dispatch, that the Amerique was announced to sail on the 26th of July and the Pereire on the 2d of August. This conflicting information renders it uncertain which of these two vessels he (Senn) will arrive by.

I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant,

WM. M. EVARTS.

Office of the Commissioners of Emigration of the State of New York, Castle Garden, New York, November 12, 1879.

New York, November 12, 1879.

Sir: I have he honor, on behalf of this board, to transmit to you herewith, for such action as you may think proper, the affidavit of Theodore Meyer, a deformed paper, who having become a public charge was sent to the United States at the expense of the poor authorities of Barschwil, Switzerland. The commissioners also desire to inform you that a number of deformed adults and destitute children are from time to time landed here from Italy, many of whom are brought by "padrones" and subjected to a species of servitude during a specified term, usually four years. The following cases have occurred recently: On the 2d instant Giovanni Ancarola, who had previously resided in the United States, landed at Castle Garden from the steamship Elysia, having with him seven boys, natives of Calvello, Italy, whose names and ages are: Giosine Guerrion, 11 years; Guiseppe Bettele, 13 years; Michete Bettetle, 10 years; Michele Quirino, 12 years; Pietro Querino, 10 years; Luigi Cosigliani, 10 years; and Francisco Lebonato, 10 years.

On the 6th instant a deformed cripple named Vito Muzio, with his alleged wife and two children, were landed here from the steamship Vaderland, from Antwerp. Both of this man's hands were deformed, not a single finger being in a natural condition. One of his lower limbs was paralyzed and one foot much shorter than the other; he could not stand upright and could move only by crawling on his hands and knees. This helpless person acknowledged that with the aid of the oldest child he intended to support himself and family by begging. The commissioners were, however, satisfied that he was brought here by a "padrone," although unable to obtain proof thereof. The Italian authorities do not appear to have granted this man a passport to emigrate, the passport found in his possession, which I inclose, being applicable only to the interior. Vito Muzio and family were yesterday returned to Europe by the same steamer that brought them to New York, but Theodore Meier, heretofore referred to, is still a charge on the commission, as he declines to return to Switzerland. The law as now in force does not give power to compel the return of any pauper, lunatic, or criminal that may be brought to this country, and the commissioners respectfully invite your attention to section 3 of a proposed law contained in their last report, (pages 24 and 19,) a copy of which is sent herewith, and which if enacted would meet this difficulty.

The bill, although presented at the last session of Congress, did not become a law, but it is the intention of the commissioners to again presentit when Congress reassembles, and they respectfully request your valuable co-operation in the matter.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

matter.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

GEORGE J. FORREST. President.

Hon. WM. M. EVARTS, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

Mr. MORTON. The bill, Mr. Chairman, authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to resort to institutions and hospitals scattered over the country for the care of the immigrants, and provides the proper penalties for the enforcement of these provisions.

alties for the enforcement of these provisions.

Until 1876 it was confidently assumed that the States possessed the general power of passing all laws necessary and proper for protecting themselves against the introduction of foreign paupers, lunatics, convicts, and others unable to live without being a public burden.

The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in that year virtually deprived the States of the power which had been assumed, by holding that the only practicable exercise of it conflicts with the rights and powers of the General Government. In this decision the Supreme Court declares that—

We are of opinion that this whole subject has been confided to Congress by the

We are of opinion that this whole subject has been confided to Congress by the Constitution; that Congress can more appropriately and with more acceptance exercise it than any other body known to our law, State or national; that by providing a system of laws in these matters applicable to all ports and to all vessels, a serious question, which has long been a matter of contest and complaint, may be effectually and satisfactorily settled.

The unprecedented prosperity of the American Republic brilliantly illustrates the advantages to the country of immigration in the past. Its importance in the development of our vast unoccupied domain, in recruiting our industries, and its bearing upon American civilization and American institutions in the future cannot be overestimated.

With the establishment of the Pacific railways and the opening of unoccupied sections in the South, Southwest, and West, the tide of immigration will continue to increase.

The State of Texas alone, six times the size of the State of New York, would, if as thickly populated as Massachusetts, contain a population of fifty millions.

The great benefit of encouraging and protecting immigration inures not to the Atlantic States, not to New York only, but mainly to the Western and Southern States; but, while encouraging immigration, Western and Southern States; but, while encouraging immigration, we must guard against spoliation upon the immigrant and the landing of paupers, destitutes, and criminals upon our soil.

It is impossible fully to appreciate the value of immigration to this country without recalling to some extent the number of immigrants who have served to swell our population, and the skill, energy, and genius which they have added to the body-politic.

Authorities differ as to the wealth which immigration has brought to our shores. Mr. Edward Young, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, in his report dated March 17, 1871, estimates the increase from this source for the fifty years preceding, to be more than $6,243,880,800, and for 1870 at $285,000,000. But even this is based upon an estimate of the mere physical, uncultivated powers of the immigrant. the mere physical, uncultivated powers of the immigrant.

How shall we determine the measure of value to our country and its institutions of the rare intellects, the skilled artisans, and the creative geniuses who have poured in upon us from foreign lands? In all the walks of public and private life they have appeared and left their impress—in the avenues of commerce, in the workshop, and in the delicate functions of government.

What estimate can be placed upon the value to the country of that what estimate can be placed upon the value to the country of the skilled artisan and creative genius, Captain John Ericsson, the inventor of the Monitor, the Swedish emigrant who landed in New York in 1839—of the value of that almost invisible object, the creation of his brain, which under the command of that heroic sailor, Captain (now Admiral) Worden, proved on the 9th of March, 1862, such a glorious bulwark to American commerce and American ports?

Mr. Chairman, what estimate can we place upon the value to the country of the millions of Irishmen and Germans to whom we largely owe the existence of the great arteries of commerce extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and the results of that industry and skill which have so largely contributed to the wealth and prosperity of the

From 1776 to 1820 about 250,000 immigrants landed in this country From 1820 to 1875 about eight millions arrived, and of these eight millions, six millions entered the country at the port of New York.

The number of immigrants that have arrived during the past eight years is as follows:

1872 1873 1874 1875	149, 762	1878	79, 801
------------------------------	----------	------	---------

The arrivals in 1879 were nearly sixty thousand in excess of the previous year, and more than any year since 1874.

On the 19th of the present month 2,392 immigrants arrived at Castle Garden, and 2,916 on the 12th.

The arrivals on these two days alone exceed the total population of Chicago forty years ago.

I hold in my hand a telegram from Henry A. Hurlbut, esq., president of the Board of Commissioners of Emigration, with the surprising announcement of the arrival of 4,200 immigrants at Castle Garden

The number of immigrants landed at Castle Garden, New York, from January 1, 1880, to April 15, 1880, is 49,566 against 12,339 for the same period in 1876, 10,381 in 1877, 11,119 in 1878, and 15,716 in 1879. The nationality of the emigrant passengers landed at New York from January 1, 1880, to March 31, 1880, is as follows:

Germany 9.884	Belgium 304
Ireland 7, 143	Switzerland 1, 479
	France 508
	Italy 1, 770
Austria 558	Greece
Hungary 1, 407	Russia 718
Sweden 3, 003	Luxembourg 161
Norway 307	Bohemia 516
Denmark 481	Various countries 193
Netherlands 565

The time has now arrived, however, when the magnitude of the subject and the inability of the States longer to establish regulations makes interference by Congress a duty which cannot be evaded. It can no longer be safely left to take care of itself.

The condition of Europe to-day is such as to render it reasonably certain that, with the new era of prosperity upon which this country has entered, the number of immigrants will continue to increase largely. It remains for the National Government to do its part, alike for its own protection and that of the immigrant.

Immigration has not flourished without attendant evils. At a comparatively early date some of the States passed laws to meet and counteract them. It was soon perceived that on the one hand there were teract them. It was soon perceived that on the one hand there were foisted upon our communities numbers of paupers, lunatics, and criminals, and on the other hand there grew up in our ports of immigration a class of men that preyed upon the poor and ignorant, crippling and oftentimes so completely stripping them as to make them charges upon the public bounty. These evils grew to such an alarming extent and filled the public with such abhorrence, that the Legislature of New York was prevailed upon to investigate the subject and to devise for these evils. for these evils a more comprehensive remedy.

The efforts of philanthropic and public-spirited citizens of New York finally resulted in the establishment of an institution, which, for the motives of those who inspired it, the character of those who managed it, and the helplessness of those who came within its fostering care, stood among the most benign and efficient in our land. I refer to the "Board of Commissioners of Emigration of New York." Through the exertions of Thurlow Weed, Archbishop Hughes, Moses H. Grinnell, Charles O'Conor, Robert B. Minturn, and other eminent citizens of New York, the passage of a bill to organize this board was secured in 1847.

The personnel of the first board was fixed by the statute itself. The personnel of the first board was fixed by the statute itself. Especial care was taken to select public-spirited citizens of high intelligence and stern integrity, and resulted in the designation of Gulian C. Verplanck, James Boorman, Jacob Harvey, Robert B. Minturn, William F. Havemeyer, and David C. Colden, eminent, philanthropic, and distinguished citizens of New York, together with the mayors of New York and Brooklyn, the president of the Irish Emigrant Society, and the president of the German society, who were made members of the board by virtue of their offices. The board of commissioners is now appointed by the governor, subject to the confirmation of the senate. firmation of the senate.

firmation of the senate.

The operations of this board extend throughout the State, and embrace in the city two great establishments: One at Ward's Island, opposite the city, the site of the State Emigrant Rafuge and Hospital, in the district which I have the honor to represent. The other—Castle Garden—is an extensive inclosure at the foot of the city under the exclusive control of the board of commissioners, where all the immigrants who arrive at the port of New York are landed, and which thus receives three-fourths of all the immigrants that arrive in the United States. It took eight years for this energetic board to so far thus receives three-fourths of all the immigrants that arrive in the United States. It took eight years for this energetic board to so far overcome the prejudices of the public and the fierce apposition of the organized band of plunderers and thieves as to be able to secure this place, which was done in 1855.

It is enough to say that here the immigrants are protected from the corruption and depredations of panderers, plunderers, and thieves; that they here receive counsel, care, and assistance; that their property is protected, their friends discovered, their purposes ascertained, and the way to their destination pointed out. What a mother is to her child, this board and its servants are to helpless, ignorant strangers, many of whom do not understand the English language.

After nearly thirty years the powers of this board were paralyzed by the decision of the Supreme Court to which I have referred, and the whole subject was by that tribunal recommended to the consideration and control of Congress. The court does not, it is true, declare that the board is unconstitutional or illegal; but it does declare that the exacting of bonds from masters, owners, or consignees of vesthat the exacting of bonds from masters, owners, or consignees of vessels to indemnify the State, as provided by her laws, is unconstitutional.

Mr. Chairman, the duty of Congress in this matter is threefold: To protect the community from foreign paupers, lunatics, and criminals; to shield the worthy immigrants from the rapacity and corruption to which they are exposed, and at the same time to achieve these re-

Now, this bill has all these objects in view, and it contemplates effecting them by the appropriation of a general fund in lieu of the old and unconstitutional "head-money," which really came out of the immigrants, although ostensibly paid by the steamship companies. There is no mode since the Supreme Court decision, except by Federal law, by which to guard immigrants against those who would prey upon them and protect our people from the refuse of foreign prisons and poor-houses.

The bill, Mr. Chairman, appropriates $250,000 for the purposes therein mentioned, and I shall propose to amend it as it was reported by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs so that it will authorize the governors of the States, together with the Secretary of the Treasury, to select the institutions which may take charge of im-migrants requiring their care or maintenance, and will, furthermore, enable the Secretary of the Treasury to inquire into the management of these institutions and the mode and manner of the treatment of immigrants therein.

The necessity of securing the landing of immigrants at Castle Garden, was so apparent that the passage of a special act of the Legislature was secured by the board of commissioners in 1855 authorizing them to compel their landing at Castle Garden, which alone enabled the commissioners to effectually guard and protect the immigrants.

Prior to this, as early as 1847, the Legislature appointed a committee in reference to this very subject.

This is the report they made. I will read such portions as are ma-

Your committee must confess that they had no conception of, nor would they have believed, the extent to which these frauds and outrages have been practiced, until they came to investigate them. As soon as a ship loaded with these emigrants reaches our shores, it is boarded by a class of men called runners either in the employment of boarding-house keepers or forwarding establishments, soliciting customs for their employers. If they cannot succeed in any other way in gotting possession and control over the objects of their prey, they proceed to take charge of their luggage, and take it to some boarding-house for safe-keeping, generally under the assurance that they will charge nothing for carriage hire or storage.

The keepers of these houses induce these people to stay a few days, and when they come to leave usually charge them three or four times as much as they agreed or expected to pay, and exorbitant prices for storing their luggage; and in case of their inability to pay their luggage is detained as security, &c.

Your committee have been shocked to find that a large portion of the frauds committed upon these innocent and in many cases ignorant foreigners are committed by their own countrymen who have come here before them; for we find the German preying upon the German, the Irish upon the Irish, &c.

In brief, Mr. Chairman, this is the importance of such a place as Castle Garden, as stated by one of the board of commissioners, Mr. Kapp, in his able work on immigration:

This act (authorizing the purchase and occupation of Castle Garden) was as important as the one creating the board of commissioners, for it first gave the power to afford really efficient protection to the emigrant.

In view of these facts, legislation such as this bill provides becomes imperative. It would secure to the Government more exact statistics of immigration and would enable it to invoke the aid of foreign states and the services of its own ministers and consuls in promoting states and the services of its own ministers and consuls in promoting such immigration. But there are other and more urgent ends to be accomplished by the bill. If immigration to these shores is to be encouraged, there must be some legal method of protecting ourselves from the influx of the most degraded and burdensome classes of foreign populations. If, on the other hand, the immigration of those who will advance our prosperity is to continue and increase, there must be such legal provisions as will protect the inexperienced stranger who lands for the first time upon our shores from becoming the prey of every harpy who may choose to take advantage of his ignorance and belylessness

I will repeat, Mr. Chairman, that the protection of the immigrant from the rapacity of extortioners and thieves is demanded as a duty of the Government if it is to continue to foster immigration. It is demanded by a common humanity. The States are virtually denied the power to protect the immigrant, and that power is declared to rest with Congress

Our present national disregard of the interests of those who seek a home in our land, is a discredit to humanity and to the honor of the

Mr. WILSON. I desire to ask my colleague on the Committee on Foreign Affairs if I was correct in understanding him to say that he received a dispatch from New York stating that some four thousand immigrants had arrived there to-day, or whether the dispatch stated that they had arrived during the month?

Mr. MORTON. My statement was that I had received a dispatch that four thousand two hundred immigrants had arrived at Castle Garden this day. And I would like to read another telegram which I have received. I sent a dispatch to-day to the president of the board of commissioners asking the amount which had been appropriated by the State of New York since the decision of the Supreme Court in 1876; and I have this reply:

The amount appropriated by the State of New York for the expenses of the commissioners of emigration and expended for support of emigrants for the year ending May, 1877, $200,000; for the year ending May, 1879, $150,000; for the year ending May, 1879, $150,000; and for the year ending May next, $170,000; making a total of $670,000.

Mr. WILSON. Those are very valuable figures, and I am glad the gentleman from New York has given us this information.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a ques-

Mr. MORTON. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. I would like to inquire whether the gentleman is able to state the value of the property that was on hand in possession of the Commissioners of Emigration of New York when the decision of the Supreme Court was made; I mean the value of the property which had been derived and paid for by head-money received from the immigrants?

Mr. MORTON. I do not know that I can state the exact figures. Perhaps my colleague from New York can give the information de-

Mr. COX. It is over a million of dollars. I can get the exact amount by looking at my report, which shows it, but it was over a million of dollars. We propose now to devote that same property to general use under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CONGER. Then, I would like to ask another question: whether either of the gentlemen from New York can state the aggregate amount of head-money derived from immigrants from the year 1855 up to the date of the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. COX. It is estimated at from five to seven millions of dollars, and the steamship companies have brought suit against the city and State of New York to get it back. I can give the gentleman from Michigan the exact figures.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman from New York can furnish me with these statistics I should like to have them.

Mr. COX. I will look them up before we get through. I now yield ten minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE.]

Mr. RICE. I suppose I have the right as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to speak in my own time.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but not until the hour of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has expired.

Mr. COX. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty minutes of his time remaining. Mr. COX. It is estimated at from five to seven millions of dollars,

Mr. COX. If that will satisfy my colleague I will yield those twenty minutes to him.

Mr. RICE. I do not want to take the time of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. Then I will give it to my colleague from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN.]

Mr. RICE. As two gentlemen have spoken in favor of the bill, I should like to speak against it in my own time.

Mr. COX. I am willing to give the rest of my time to my colleague Mr. COX. I am willing to give the rest of my time to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Rice,] if he desires it. I have no objection to having full debate; only I desire that we should pass the bill to-night if we can.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I think this difficulty can be easily enough solved. All my colleague from New York [Mr. Cox] has to do is to yield the floor and then the gentleman from Massachusetts can take it.

Mr. COX. In that case he will have an hour.

Mr. COX. In that case he will have an hour.

Mr. RICE. I shall be happy to agree that my colleague on the committee shall reserve his time, to be used hereafter if he thinks proper; but I desire to occupy my own time.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Massachusetts belongs to the Committee of the co mittee on Foreign Affairs, and has a right to discuss this matter. But he is opposed to the bill, and after having been absent for two weeks he now comes here and proposes to speak an hour and kill the bill.

Mr. RICE. I have been in my seat during this session as much as the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WILSON. Gentlemen—

Let love through all your actions run, And all your words be mild.

[Laughter.]
Mr. CONGER. I rise to a question of order. The House resolved to-day that poetry shall not go into the RECORD. [Laughter.]
Mr. COX. If the gentleman from Massachusetts does not desire to

Mr. COX. If the gentleman from Massachusetts does not desire to take the remainder of my time I yield it to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITENDEN.]

Mr. WILSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to know under what arrangement this debate is now proceeding?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] is entitled to one hour; and there yet remains seventeen minutes of his time undisposed of. time undisposed of.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The debate is unlimited thus far. Mr. COX. Yes; there has been no limitation put upon the debate at all. I understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHIT-TENDEN] is ready to proceed.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. It is due to myself and to the great subject that I say at the outset that I come here entirely without any preparation to speak upon this bill; that I am very sorry to speak prior to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE;] and that the few words I have to say will have no other authority than attaches to them as having occurred to me at the moment of utterance.

In the first place I will say I happened last October to be in company with some gentlemen who were estimating the extent in the future of the currents of emigration to these American States, and they, to my surprise, concluded that there would be at least a population of a new city of a thousand inhabitants imported into the United States for every day of the year 1880. I understand that during the first three months of the year, January, February, and March, the total number of immigrants arriving was from thirty-five thousand to forty thousand. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Morton] has stated here to-night that four thousand have arrived to-day, and I was told a week ago that a reasonable estimate for May was fifty thousand.

I refer to these figures and to these conversations in order to point one remark which I have to make upon this bill. Prior to that I will one remark which I have to make upon this bill. Prior to that I win say a word about the New York system. It began in 1847; it terminated in 1876. For twenty-nine years it supported itself. That is to say, the per capita tax upon the arrivals supported the system. It permitted the employment of clerks to protect immigrants from robbery on their arrival and of physicians to cure the sick; and it enabled the building of habitations and of hospitals for the feeble; and under it arrangements were need which resulted as all intelligent and under it arrangements were made which resulted, as all intelligent members of Congress and all intelligent men know, in the taking, without cost to the country, of the best possible care of the immigrants. Those that wandered far away and came back weak to New York were protected or cured or sent back to their homes. That system, by the Supreme Court, was destroyed, obliterated, after twenty-nine years of successful practice, without scandal or any opportunity for scandal, by the Empire State.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, as I take up this bill here to-night I happen to open it at section 4, which if I understand it—if I do not understand it of course it will be explained—but which, if I understand it, opens the broadest kind of a door for scandals and extravagant expenditure of all kinds. In view of the largeness of the question and in view of the very large number of the immigrants now coming and to come to our country it becomes us to consider the meaning of this. I will take it up in the middle of the bill, as my speech has begun in the middle and may perhaps end there:

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, quarter-yearly, commencing the first quarter after the approval of this act, to request the governor of each State of the United States to transmit to him within thirty days a statement of the amount which his State or any local officers or board thereof may have incurred, paid out, or expended, according to law, for the care of the emi-grants on their arrival, and for the support and maintenance of any such of the immigrants as designated above within one year from arrival.

Now, if I understand those words, if the words in that section which I have quoted are plain English according to the dictionary, then I say it is the largest bid for the largest grab upon the United States Treasury that I have ever seen here save one. Thirty-eight governors with quarter-yearly bills at the doors of the Treasury compared with the system of making the commander of immigrant ships give bonds, and to commute those bonds by the payment of $1.50 and $2.50 a head—it is the difference between safety and insecurity! In view of the four thousand immigrants who arrived in the city of New York to-day, the two thousand who arrived yesterday, the two thousand who arrived the day before, and the twenty-five hundred a day who will arrive during the next thirty or sixty days, I cannot for my life see why the governor of New York should be intrusted under legal authority with so large a business, and empowered to bring to the Secretary of the Treasury quarter-yearly his bills to be reimbursed for the amount of money expended. It were much better to give New York even $1 per capita. I say this, although I am myself from New York, and know personally Mr. Hurlbut, whose name is attached to the dispatch which was read by my colleague, as a gentleman to be trusted with millions.

Mr. MORTON. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him a moa head-it is the difference between safety and insecurity!

Mr. MORTON. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him a mo-

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MORTON. The amendments to which I referred in my remarks I think will meet the objections which my friend has raised.
Mr. CHITTENDEN. Read those amendments, please.
Mr. MORTON. The first amendment is to insert after the word "establishments," in line 28 of section 4, the words, "which have been duly authorized by the governors respectively aforesaid, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to take charge of such immigrants." And my second amendment is to insert in line 39 of the same section, after the words "legitimate and reasonable," the words "and to cause at such times as he shall think fit an examination to be made of the institutions or establishments aforesaid, and of the mode and manner of treatment of immigrants therein."

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Well, sir, I am very sorry not to agree on the instant with any amendment suggested by my colleague. But if I am right in regard to the point I have attempted to make, his amendments do not touch it. The Secretary of the Treasury has business enough without looking after the four thousand immigrants arriving in New York daily. They must be taken care of by other authority with more time and care than the Secretary of the Treasury can spare for such a purpose. Moreover, this business has become so vast in fact, as the gentleman himself has proved here to-night to the aston-ishment of us all, and it is so vast in prospect, that I appeal to every member of the House of Representatives not to act hastily in regard to the matter.

I believe it is of the utmost importance that we do something, and provide money in some way. If I had the power I would press home the urgency of the case to the intelligent conscience of every member of this body. Just consider it a moment. The arrival of a city of four thousand people into our country to-day! What does it mean? We all know that this is the most prosperous country in the world. We are a spectacle to the whole world as a people surpassing all others with our native resources, with our aggressive enterprise, with our intelligence, and with our future power in the world. And here our intelligence, and with our future power in the world. And here is one of the grand items making up that power.

I have felt for months that this item of immigration from the distressed and overtaxed nations of the earth was to be a new revelation to our people. But I little dreamed when I came here to-night that I would hear it confirmed as it has been. I press that as an argument why gentlemen should not turn away from this subject as one possibly bringing profit to New York. Every immigrant that lands in New York brings profit to the whole country. There must have a center of commerce and there immigration will center. Within be a center of commerce, and there immigration will center. Within a few years eight millions of immigrants from foreign nations have been landed in this country, and six millions of them have been landed in New York.

Undoubtedly while we send two or three steamships each day from Undoubtedly while we send two or three steamsnips each day from the city of New York, and two or three arrive there daily the great majority of immigrants to this country will be landed there. There is no means by which this business can be diverted from New York. But I say let every seaport in the country have equal rights. Let some system be agreed upon that shall be practicable, without opening a door for making indefinite, illegitimate, and improper demands ing a door for making indefinite, illegitimate, and improper demands for money from the Treasury.

Mr. WILSON. What do you want to do?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I want the per capita tax system, and not a round sum of money appropriated with thirty-eight open doors. The report suggests the new plan because immigration has diminished. The report is dated December 9, 1879, and is behind the times. I believe that because immigration is now increasing the per capita system is the only sefe one. is the only safe one.

I beg pardon of the House, and especially of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE,] for having occupied so much time.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the discussion on this bill comes on during an evening session, because I have noticed that at evening sessions those members who are most interested in the passage of the bill under consideration are more likely to attend than those who are not. I regret also that the bill has not been read from the desk, so that all gentlemen present might be informed of its provisions, and thus be able to vote more intelligently upon it. I regret still more that the chairman of the committee, having occupied his time in speaking in favor of the bill, should have sought to prevent still more that the chairman of the committee, having occupied his time in speaking in favor of the bill, should have sought to prevent me from opposing it. I regret that in so doing he should have taunted me with following his example in sometimes being absent from the House. That he can well do when I occupy the floor one hour to his ten; and I will venture to say that although I may have been absent from the House somewhat, I have been present in it more hours when I have not been speaking than has the gentleman from New York when he has not been speaking.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to this bill. I pronounce it unconstitutional; I pronounce it incomplete; I pronounce it a scheme to support State institutions, run by State officials at the expense of the national Treasury. There have been eloquent remarks made by the gentlemen from New York on the one side and on the other side of this House. This is a subject that somewhat inspires eloquence, involving as it does these great movements of oppressed people out of darkness into light. I agree with all that has been said by the gentlemen on either hand in this regard.

This bill is stated in the report which accompanies it to be a bill which encourages immigration. The gentleman from New York says that it is a bill to protect ourselves against the immigration of those who are "criminal, pauper, or imbecile;" to shield the immigrant when he comes here, and to do this without retarding or preventing the progress of immigration. The report accompanying the bill states—and so argues my friend from New York—that this measure is made necessary by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States preventing the operation of laws of the State of New York under which heretofore immigration has proceeded.

Mr. Chairman, there is not a provision in the bill, with possibly which heretofore immigration has proceeded.

Mr. Chairman, there is not a provision in the bill, with possibly one single exception, which is not contained in the statutes of the State of New York and which is not constitutional under those statutes. The State of New York may protect its borders against the intrusion of the "criminal, the pauper, or the imbecile." In the decision to which the gentleman refers the Supreme Court of the United States declared the New York statute in a similar country this. States declared the New York statutes in a single respect unconstitutional in this: that those statutes undertook to impose a tax of $2.50 a head on every immigrant. This provision the Supreme Court of the United States declared unconstitutional in a State law, because it was a tax upon immigration, because it was an attempt to regulate commerce by State legislation. No provision of that kind is in this bill. The only provision of the New York statutes pronounced to be unconstitutional is omitted in the bill. All the other provisto be unconstitutional is omitted in the bill. All the other provisions, declared constitutional in a case away back in 1849 and never yet overruled, are left in the statutes of the State of New York as operative and efficient as they have ever been.

This bill provides in the first section that shipmasters shall make reports in regard to those whom they bring into this country, stating whence they came, with their age and other particulars. This is copied from the New York statute. The second section appropriates $250,000 annually out of the Treasury of the United States for the purposes of this bill; and this, as has been said by the gentleman from New York at my left, [Mr. Chittenden,] is but the beginning of what will be necessary to meet the outlays which are to be made under the bill if it becomes a law.

And that, Mr. Chairman, is the sole reason and incentive of this bill.

And that, Mr. Chairman, is the sole reason and incentive of this bill. Its object is not to protect immigration, to protect the borders of the State against the introduction of vice and pauperism, but to obtain $250,000 a year to begin with—to be spent how? By United States officials under United States laws? Not at all; by State officials under State laws. To be spent where? In institutions erected by the United States Government and under its care and direction? Not at onited States Government and under its care and direction? Not at all; in institutions erected not even by the State governments, but by private individuals perchance; any institutions whatsoever within a State which may be designated by the governor thereof. There is not an immigrant boarding-house, certainly not one upon a large scale, in the city of New York which, under the provisions of this bill, might not come in to claim a share of this national bounty, if only it could

This, sir, is the nature of the bill; not to provide regulations for the voyage of the immigrant across the Atlantic, as has been done in a bill introduced by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BARBER;] not even to provide for national protection and support of the immigrants after they get here; but to pay the bills incurred by State officials, to meet expenditures in State or private institutions in the city of New York and in other similar places. city of New York and in other similar places

I say in the first place that the State has the authority to do this. It comes under the police power which the States have never surrendered. The State may guard its borders against the incoming of the criminal, the pauper, the imbecile, and thus do all that the bill attempts to do in that respect. The State may prohibit the captain of the vessel from allowing an immigrant of this description to be landed within the State. It may oblige the captain to retain him upon shipboard until he can be returned to the country whence he came. There is nothing in this bill which is not within the reserved power of the State.

I am one who believes in the rights of the States. I am one who believes in retaining within the States the exercise of all the powers which they have reserved; and I believe in refraining in Congress from the exercise of doubtful powers or those which conflict with the powers reserved to the States.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him by a question ? Mr. RICE.

Mr. RICE. Yes, sir. Mr. BLOUNT. Before the gentleman gets away from this $250,000 appropriation in section 2, I want to ask him upon what informa-tion the committee acted in fixing that sum for this expenditure; and further why this appropriation is made not for a single year, but indefinitely, thereby taking from Congress the right to examine from year to year the expenditures with the view of making appropriations, as is done in all other matters?

mriations, as is done in all other matters?

Mr. RICE. I take note of the question made by the gentleman from Georgia. I should be better able to answer it had I been present at the meeting of the committee when this bill was discussed, but by the politeness of the chairman of the committee the House is already aware I was not present at that meeting. I have, however, as nearly as I can calculate in the matter, discovered that the city of New York has made about that amount of money out of the headmoney heretofore exacted from immigrants to protect immigration, which the Supreme Court has decided unconstitutional. That was which the Supreme Court has decided unconstitutional. That was two dollars and a half a head. Last year, as my friend from New York [Mr. MORTON] has said, 138,000 immigrants entered the port of New York. Multiply 138,000 by 2½, and you get fully $250,000; and I fancy whoever drew this bill wanted to make up about that amount out of the National Transmission of the National Transmission. ont of the National Treasury, which heretofore they got out of the pockets of the immigrants. That is how the sum happened to be fixed.

Mr. BLOUNT. Why should the appropriation of $250,000 be per-

Mr. WILSON. Congress always has the power to revise it.
Mr. BLOUNT. There is no occasion for this permanent appropria-

It is unusual.

Mr. MORTON. I wish to inform the gentleman from Massachusetts that this bill was prepared by the board of commissioners of immigration, among the most distinguished and respectable gentlemen of New York, a non-partisan board in every respect.

Mr. RICE. I am sure it could be prepared by no gentlemen more eminent and every way worthy of confidence than those my friend

I was stating, Mr. Chairman, all this bill does may be done by the laws of the State, and I should be unwilling, were I representing the State, to ask the National Government to intrude into the sphere of State legislation; and I am equally unwilling, as a member of the state legislation; and I am equally unwilling, as a member of the sphere of the state of the sphere of the sp body, to vote or act in any way by which Congress shall assume to itself authority which I regard of doubtful constitutionality. And I say, in order that my point may be fully understood, that all this bill does may be done under the police powers of the States, and that it is better it should be done by the States than by the nation.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is a point further to which I desire to call the attention of the committee, in which, as it seems to me, there can be no question of the unconstitutionality of this bill; and that is this: It follows these immigrants into the country for a year, and their wants may be supplied out of this fund; that is, for one year after an immigrant comes into this country, wherever he may go, he may apply for aid and support out of this fund drawn from the national Treasury.

The opinion of the court in what are known as the Liquor Cases in which the Supreme Court decided that a State, in the exercise of its which the Supreme Court decided that a State, in the exercise of its police power under a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor, could not exclude from its borders liquor imported in the original packages, does not go so far as this bill goes. The imported liquor could only be covered by the national authority while it was in the original packages. After it had gotten into the State and become merged in local property of the State, the national authority could not cover it. But this bill follows the immigrant from New York to Chicago, to Kansas, anywhere, and for one year after he has left the ship and become merged in the population of the country he may draw aid and support from the Treasury of the United States. This, sir, I say is unconstitutional, and I challenge the gentleman from New York or any member of the House to find any authority for it in any decision of the Supreme Court.

If gentlemen of the committee will bear with me a moment longer, I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, this bill prohibits the introduction of criminals, of paupers, and imbeciles into this country. It imposes penalties upon the ship-owners who bring them here. Then it propenalties upon the ship-owners who bring them here.
vides $250,000 a year to pay their bills after they get in.
Mr. BLOUNT. May be more.

Mr. RICE. And may be more. It is offering a bounty for the vio-lation of law and encouraging the immigration of the very persons against whose introduction it pretends to seek to provide. What else it provides is that unconstitutional provision to which I have referred that for a year after they have come in they may be taken care of out of the Treasury of the United States in whatever section of the coun-of the freasury of the Chited States. It try they may go.

If the bill were properly drawn, Mr. Chairman, if it were a bill to regulate immigration and nothing else, I might give to it my support, but it is a bill to support the institutions of the city of New York under State or local authority, which have been built up out of the $15,000,000 of head-money exacted from the immigrants by an unconstitutional law.

And I ask the chairman of the committee whose is the property which has been built in the city of New York by this illegally exacted head-money? Is that to be made over to the United States Government? What assurance have we that the owners of that property will not charge the United States for its use in housing and aiding the immigrants whom we now generously seek to take under our care and protection? Is the city of New York or the corporations who now own this vast property to retain the ownership of it? Are they to receive compensation for the use of it? Nothing in this bill prevents it.

Mr. Chairman, let the gentleman from New York reflect but a mo-ment before he presses this bill further. Whatever authority Conment before he presses this bill further. Whatever authority Congress has to regulate immigration from a foreign port it has to regulate immigration between the States. If it can watch the port of New York and provide for the poor who enter there from abroad, it can also watch the depots of the great lines of railway that cross the boundaries of States, and protect the poor and sick who cross those lines. I am surprised that the gentleman from New York has not included within the bill some provision for the homeless and destitute who pass from one State into another, that they may be protected and provided for as they stand naked and shivering, poor, destitute, and in want upon river banks, at steamboat landings, and at railroad depots on their weary way from the places of their birth into other States to seek freer and happier homes. If the principle of this bill is correct, we may provide for them with equal pertinency, and with equal propriety, as for those whom it is here sought to make provision. But this, it seems to me, is the duty of the State and not of the General Government. It is the State that derives the benefit from immigration, and with the benefit it should assume the responsibilities.

It has been said by my friend from New York [Mr. Morron] that these immigrants pass through the State into other States. So many of them do; but they leave the money they bring with them, or much of it, in the State where they first land. The waters of the Nile do not leave a richer sediment on the plains of Egypt over which they pass on their course from the mountain to the sea than do the waves of immigration in the city of New York on their way from the sea to the interior of the country. Let, then, the State that is receiving the immigrants, and deriving the benefits from them, provide for their wants when they do come. Let the States into which they go, and where they endeavor to make a home, provide for them in their sickness and want until they are able to provide for themselves.

ness and want until they are able to provide for themselves.

I do not believe, sir, that the interior States which are not benefited, as is the State of the gentleman from New York, by this immigration, should be taxed to pay the bills of the State of New York. It is owing to this immigration that the great city of New York stands with its marble palaces fronting the sea, the home of a commerce and trade greater and richer than floated into the harbors of Tyre, Carthage, or Venice. Let the State and the city which reap the benefits of this mighty immigration assume the responsibilities which devolve upon them in receiving that benefit and pay the bills for which provision is here sought to be made, and not seek to draw the money to meet them by an unconstitutional measure from the Treas-money to meet them by an unconstitutional measure from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirty minutes remaining. Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a short time. Mr. RICE. Mr. Chairman, as I understand ample time for discussion will be given, I shall be happy to divide my time. The gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] asked me first to yield to him.

Mr. PAGE. I am entitled to recognition in my own right and therefore I yield for the present to allow the gentleman from Massachusetts to give his time to somebody else.

Mr. RICE. Then I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] and ten minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. EINSTEIN,] and will retain the remainder for myself.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I would like to inquire who has the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has the floor for ten minutes.

ten minute

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I must be very hurried in my remarks, and I hope they may be made without interruption, as I have only ten minutes allowed to me. I consider this bill in many important particulars defective, improper, and unconstitutional. I cannot of course dwell upon these points at any great length in the short time I have, and I shall not attempt it now, but if another opportunity presents itself I may recur to the subject again.

First, I regret very much that the Committee on Foreign Affairs in their report have not given any statistics upon which gentlemen here may found an opinion upon the necessity or the propriety for any such bill as this. No statistics for any year or for any series of years are furnished, no statistics of the number of immigrants entering into the different States, no history of the method in New York of acquiring money to take charge of the six or seven millions of immigrants who have come there within the last twenty-five years. I say that nothing of this kind has been furnished, and that we have before us only the resolution of a board interested in some direct or indirect way in expending the money for immigrants.

Now, sir, briefly, I want to say a word or two about this immigration. Since 1854, when head-money was charged upon every immigrant that came to the port of New York, almost three-quarters, not may found an opinion upon the necessity or the propriety for any such quite, of all the immigration into the United States came by the port of New York, the other quarter into the other ports of the United States; but since that time also a large share of the immigration has come into ports of the United States that are not even on the seaboard. Let me say here that into the city in which I live there has come for the last twelve years an immigration ranking higher in importance than that into any other port in the United States, except New York. The immigration at the port of Port Huron, in Michigan, the first point of arrival for almost the entire immigration by the Saint Lawrence, has averaged for the last ten years between 35,000 and 45,000 a year, in some cases reaching 52,000 immigrants in a year. and 45,000 a year, in some cases reaching 52,000 immigrants in a year. Let me say here that I have seen upon the docks upon the straits of the Saint Clair 1,500 immigrants frequently in one day; as high often as 2,500 even in one day; and 500 or 600 every day, very often in the summer days after I get home in the recess of Congress.

Sir, never was one cent of money appropriated for any purpose in connection with this immigration by the State of Michigan, and there were no contributions except the voluntary contributions of our peowere no contributions except the voluntary contributions of our people in a city of ten thousand inhabitants for that vast amount of immigration coming in the summer months. There was no head-money, no charge, nothing to meet these people but the kindness of our citizens; and there never was any want of it. They were protected; they were not swindled; they came to our shores, were shipped upon the boats going around the lake to the great Northwestern States, or sent into the interior on the railroads, into our State, or into Illinois, or Indiana, or Wisconsin by rail. We never saw the need of charging two and a half dollars upon the immigrants that we welcomed with outstretched hands and with warm hearts, to whom we gave encouragement and help if they needed it.

But for twenty-five years the city of New York, with a law requir-

But for twenty-five years the city of New York, with a law requiring captains of vessels to give bonds that if they did bring paupers or criminals to the city they would provide for them, charged upon every man, woman, and child, virtuous and impure, great and good, lowly and humble, alike, most of the time $2.50 a head and the rest of the time $1.50 a head.

They have received in that city by the Immigration Society or Aid Society, chartered by the State of New York, over fifteen millions of dollars within the time of their organization from the immigrants that came to this land of liberty and of plenty. Fifteen millions of dollars! They have bought Castle Garden and repaired it. They have bought islands in the river and in the straits. They have built palaces on those islands almost equal to this Capitol, that stand there

Mr. EINSTEIN. I ask the gentleman from Michigan to name any place where they have built a palace.

Mr. CONGER. They have built hospitals and receiving-houses probably worth over $10,000,000, which the State now owns, out of money wrung from the immigrants that we welcome in our speeches and welcome under our laws to these shores.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Will the gentleman allow me to make one re-

Mr. CONGER. Not in my ten minutes. I will be happy to listen

Now, four years ago the attention of the Supreme Court of the United States was turned to this system of levying taxes upon men, women, and children when they came here under our laws to share with us in the blessings of this land, this home of the free, this home to which we had invited the hundreds of thousands of the relatives to which we had invited the hundreds of thousands of the relatives of our countrymen and fellow-citizens to come and join them from abroad. No sooner did the eye of justice rest upon those laws, upon their extortions, upon their wrong, upon their unconstitutionality, than the sword of justice fell upon that system and it vanished out of sight. But there that city stood with its fifteen millions' worth of property or its ten millions' worth of property or its ten millions' worth of property in its hands.

What does the State do? The State voted as it ought to vote. Having this vast amount of property, the people of the State said: "This ought to belong to the immigrants; if those who have come before have gone off to other States, and their relations are now coming, let these buildings be for the use of the immigrants, and we will appropriate $150,000 a year to help to carry on the immigration, aid appropriate $150,000 a year to help to carry on the immigration, aid which the money of the immigrants has furnished."

Mr. McCOOK. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CONGER. Not now. I am so easily embarrassed. I cannot consent to be interrupted. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCOOK. I do not want to embarrass the gentleman. Mr. CONGER. The State of New York, the great State of New York, the Empire State of New York, not the city of New York, taxing all its people all over that great State for the benefit of that greatest of all our ports, the commercial metropolis of New York, the commercial metropolis of the United States, and in its pride hoping to become the commercial metropolis of the world, may tax every to become the commercial metropolis of the world, may tax every farmer and every citizen in the remotest parts of the State of New York to keep that institution up.

It comes a little hard on the Empire State in its poverty and its depression to pay this $150,000 a year. The city of New York cannot pay it, and the State does not want to pay it. Now, there is the Treasury of the United States, and the people of New York instruct their Representatives here to reach out the long fingers of that delegation toward the Treasury of the United States and to draw out the gold and the silver and the greenbacks, not to the amount of $150,000, the amount which the State had appropriated, but because they permit the General Government to take a part in it, $100,000 in addition to that, or $250,000 in all. That is the history of this case.

I desire to call attention to this bill and to ask every man in this House to read that portion of it which provides that any person afflicted with poverty, with blindness, or any of the ills or sicknesses to which humanity is subject, shall not be allowed to land in this country, but shall be sent back. And if they reach the other side of the ocean, and the law prevents them from being landed there, then these poor disabled members of the families of the immigrants, unless they are able to support themselves, will be compelled to float back and forth during their life-time on that ocean [laughter] in that purgatory between the hell of the Old World and the heaven of the New [laughter] with no relief in the world. You will find that in the first section of the bill.

There is a little provision here which provides that if a person is suffering from sickness and can be kept on shore in close custody, so that he cannot escape to any other portion of God's foot-stool, he may be allowed to go ashore for a few days; but at the first opportunity. he must be sent back across the ceean to the place whence he came. [Here the hammer fell.] A more inhuman bill in some of its provisions never was presented for the consideration of men who have hearts and souls within them.

Mr. EINSTEIN. I came here to-night, Mr. Chairman, entirely unprepared to speak on this bill. But when I hear on all sides the remarks made by gentlemen who seem to know nothing about it, I am not at all astonished at a remark which was made to me when I first entered this Congress; that is that most people here talk about things they know nothing of.

Representing as I do a constituency of the State of New York and of the city of New York, I desire to be heard to-night in support of the main features of this bill. Possibly there may be some things in it which will require amendment; but I think the gentleman who has charge of the bill [Mr. Cox] will be perfectly willing to allow all necessary amendments to be made.

The city and the State of New York have been attacked here tonight. One man, who I believe says that fifteen or twenty years ago he saw some fifteen hundred immigrants come to Port Huron, has talked here to-night about Castle Garden and the purchase of islands and the building of palaces from the head-money taken from the emigrants who have landed on our shores.

Sir, the State of New York from time immemorial has had landed at Sir, the State of New York from time immemorial has had landed at its great entrepôt, the great sea-port of the country, seven-eighths of all the immigrants who have arrived in this country; and New York State and New York City have provided the means for forwarding those immigrants all over the country, and the West and the South and the East as well have been enriched by this tide of immigration that has flowed from New York to all parts of the country.

We see here to right adving a very small thing of Country.

We come here to-night asking a very small thing of Congress. Gentlemen should recollect that they are not here for the making of laws alone, but they are here at the same time to do justice. Certainly New York City is not called upon to provide for and feed every immigrant who lands on our shores, and the bulk of whom do not remain within the borders of the city for more than twenty-four hours. I think the statistics will show that where four thousand and five thousand immigrants land daily at Castle Garden seven-eighths of them within twenty-four hours go to other parts of the country by means of the railroads leading from that city.

Now, in all fairness, in all squareness and honesty, we ask whether it is right that New York should undertake to land all these immigrants and provide for them, even if but for twenty-four hours, and then send them all over the land to benefit the farms, and the mines, and every other interest in the country? That is the one broad basis of this bill. In other words, as the State of New York cannot control foreign intercourse and foreign commerce, we must come to the Congress of the United States and ask it to make a law that shall be equitable and just.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a single question?

Mr. EINSTEIN. I have not much time, but I will yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. If these emigrants remain in New York only about twenty-four hours, where is the great expense to the city of New York?

Mr. EINSTEIN. Perhaps if the gentleman should visit New York he would see reason for the great expense of taking care of these emigrants, in the fact that Castle Garden, where they are landed, is situated at one end of a vast commercial center where land and property is very valuable. The expense of clerk-hire and sustenance is very great indeed; and New York State or New York City has to pay this expenditure.

this expenditure.

Mr. RICE. The gentleman will allow me to ask him whether the immigrants by their head-money have not already paid for that land?

Mr. EINSTEIN. I will answer the gentleman's question with very great pleasure. Up to 1876 the immigrants by their head-money did contribute to the expense of maintaining these provisions for their comfort and protection. But in that year the law under which the State had collected this head money was declared by the Supreme Court had collected this head-money was declared by the Supreme Court unconstitutional and void. Although since that time we have been unable to collect any head-money from these immigrants, the Statehas felt bound in charity, I may say, (for there is no obligation rest-ing upon us,) to take care of them during their sojourn in our city, for generally they leave almost within twenty-four hours from the time they land.

Now, on this question I can speak from intimate acquaintance with the charitable institution of New York, and with the workings of the New York Board of Emigration who have been attacked here tonight. I do not believe the gentleman making the attack ever saw a commissioner of emigration. Now, I will tell him something about these officers. Though they have never received one dollar of pay for their services, yet so far as I know they have done the business to the very best of their ability and have given satisfaction on all sides. The offices are altogether honorary, and are filled by men who have to work very hard to discharge the duties efficiently.

An attack has been made also on New York City, and some very eloquent and poetical language has been indulged in by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] whom I am proud to call my friend. He has apostrophized the paupers and idiots who come to this country with their families. He has referred to the poor old man lookcountry with their families. He has referred to the poor old man looking for his idiotic child, or his blind great-grandmother, or something of that kind. [Laughter.] There was some noise in this part of the Chamber, and I did not quite catch the exact language; but that was about the pith of the remark. Now, I can give the gentleman some information on this subject, for I have been connected for a number of years with one of these great "palaces" in New York City that he talks about—one of the largest hospitals in that city. Not that he talks about—one of the largest hospitals in that cisy. Not one cent of the head-money has ever gone to that or any other hospital. There was never a "palace" or a hospital or an institution of any kind within the borders of the State of New York built by the aid of one cent of this head-money. I defy any man on this floor or anywhere else to disprove my statement.

Mr. CONGER. In the State of New York?

Mr. EINSTEIN. Yes, sir, in the State of New York. I defy the gentleman to name one single instance. I am waiting for his answer. Mr. CONGER. The report shows a number of buildings upon the

Mr. EINSTEIN. I defy the gentleman to name one single charita-ble "palace" that has been built from the head-money—whether it be hospital, asylum, or anything he pleases.

Mr. CONGER. The report of your own commissioners shows that they have every facility on that island for the care of the sick in splendid buildings, well arranged—

Mr. EINSTEIN. The gentleman does not usually beg a question. I defy him to name a single instance of any building or institution of any description whatever that has been built by the head-money of any description whatever that has been built by the head-money or immigrants. The gentleman has made an assertion on this floor; now I challenge him to prove it.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman whether he denies that a great number of valuable buildings have been built with that head-money?

Mr. EINSTEIN. I do, most distinctly and emphatically.

Mr. CONGER. Then I will bring the report to sustain my posi-

Mr. EINSTEIN. I shall be glad to see it; and if the gentleman proves his statement I shall be glad to acknowledge myself in the

Now, as to this cry that has been raised about paupers and idiots I have something to say. It has been the custom for a great many years for the "effete despotisms of Europe," of which our friends here sometimes talk, to send persons of bad character over here; to send paupers and idiots on condition that they will not return to their native land. It has been the endeavor of the commissioners of immigration and of the charitable societies of New York City to prevent this imposition from being successfully practiced. We have tried our very best, and we think we have pretty nearly succeeded. This bill contains a very judicious provision on that subject, and I cannot see how any man on this floor can cavil at it or find fault with it.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to occupy the time of the House— The CHAIRMAN. The ten minutes of the gentleman have ex-

Mr. EINSTEIN. Well, I will in a sentence or two conclude. When I find my city and State attacked in the manner they have been tonight on this floor by men who know absolutely nothing of what they are talking about, I feel it my duty to rise here and acquaint this House with the facts. As I before remarked, this Congress is not sent here to make laws only, but to do justice to the whole country. The State of New York and its institutions demand the justice which is due to us under these circumstances. We claim that these immigrants who arrive at our ports do not belong to us, they belong to the whole country. The Supreme Court has upset the previous law as to head-money. We believe we ought not to take care of them, but that its should be left to the country to make a prepare and wind here. it should be left to the country to make a proper and wise law to over the case.

Mr. RICE. I reserve the remaining ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman cannot reserve any time. When he yields the floor he yields it entirely.

Mr. RICE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a single word in reference to a remark made by my friend from New York, who last occupied the floor. There have been, according to the report of the committee, about six millions of immigrants coming into the United States since 1847; the head-money was $2.50 each, making an aggregate of $15,000,000. That money has been expended by these commissionof $15,000,000. That money has been expended by these commissioners. They have, according to the report, purchased land and erected buildings—purchased land on Ward's Island and erected buildings there. They have leased from the City of New York and occupied the building on the estate known as Castle Garden. Now, I supposed, and I understood the chairman of the committee to say, that these purchases were made from this money which came into their hands as head money. The grantlemen last years are the reserved as the commission of the commission of the commission of the commission. as head-money. The gentleman last up now says the money has not been used in that way. How, then, has it been used? What have they done with the $15,000,000, if they have not expended it in the purchase of this land and the erection of these buildings?

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me to read a clause from the report of the committee on page 2?

Mr. RICE. Certainly; let the gentleman read the extract to which he refers

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say to the gentleman from New York, if he is here

Mr. EINSTEIN. I am here. Mr. CONGER. He questioned the statement I made. I had not time then to make examination. I wish now to read from the report of the committee, and I hope the remark about idiotic reports does not refer to this report of that committee:

Under the influence of this fact, the lands and buildings before mentioned were purchased and erected. The establishment on Ward's Island, where sick and destitute immigrants are cared for until able to proceed to their destination, embraces over one hundred and twenty acres of land, whereon have been erected by the commissioners hospitals and refugee buildings.

Mr. EINSTEIN. There is no gentleman in the House I am more pleased to answer than my distinguished friend from Michigan.
Mr. CONGER. I did not ask for an answer.
Mr. EINSTEIN. I beg pardon.
Mr. CONGER. I want my young friend to know—
Mr. EINSTEIN. That is not my fault that I am young, and it is my misfortune that I have not so much experience here as the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. Now, repeat somebody's speech about that.
Mr. EINSTEIN. You asked me for an answer.

Mr. EINSTEIN. You asked me for an answer.

Mr. CONGER. No, I wished you to hear a statement that hospitals and refugee buildings were built on Ward's Island with this money. I said buildings, I said hospitals; and fortunately in this meager report the committee have put in enough to sustain that proposition, though denied so emphatically by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. EINSTEIN. If the gentleman will allow me a moment.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman from Massachusetts has any time left the gentleman can occupy it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from

Mr. EINSTEIN. If the gentleman does not wish an answer, very

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of saying that in the main features of this bill I heartily concur. I disagree with my friend from Michigan, that New York is to be particularly benefited by the passage of this bill. I do not think any city would desire to have the passage of this bill. I do not think any city would desire to have the honor of being the entrepôt of all the foreign immigration coming into this country. A few weeks ago I visited Castle Garden myself, and know the city of New York is engaged in a wise and humane policy toward the immigrants who arrive at that place. It is true when she had the benefit of the capitation or head tax, that money was used, as I firmly believe, for the purpose of feeding the immigrants who arrived there and who were unable to provide for themselves. I know to-day that State is making appropriation out of its treasury for the purpose of feeding the poor immigrants who arrive in New York, and for the purpose of sending them on to their several destinations; I know that to-day a large corps of clerks and officers, appointed under the authority of the State of New York, is engaged in carrying out the wise and humane policy adopted by that State.

Now, sir, the question of foreign immigration is one that I am glad to know has presented itself before this honorable body. The State of California, which I have the honor in part to represent hes bear.

of California, which I have the honor in part to represent, has been knocking at the door of the National Legislature for many years asking that the Congress of the United States should pass some bill to relieve that State and the Pacific coast from the evils of Chinese immigration. I have, therefore, offered as an amendment to this bill a clause which, in addition to paupers and insane persons, deaf and dumb and blind persons, provides that no persons shall come in any greater number than fifteen at any one time on any one vessel who, under the laws of the United States, are denied the right-of natural-

My amendment, Mr. Chairman, looks to the idea that there is a calamity even greater than permitting deaf and dumb and blind and paupers, and even criminals, in the sense referred to in this bill, to come into this country. The State of California has for the past thirty years been suffering from a flood-tide of Mongolian slaves, who have been and are a curse to the prosperity of that great State. I am glad to know that my friend from New York, who I see across the way, [Mr. McCook,] has been in California and seen something of this question, and I had hoped he had sufficient cause to change his views thereon. When the bill relating to Chinese immigrants was before this House a little over a year ago he gave it a negative

Mr. McCOOK. And he would do that again.

Mr. PAGE. I have no doubt of it. I have no doubt the gentleman will give it a negative vote, and I am glad to know that some of these gentlemen will be put upon the record on this question, and then we will see if they can go and state to their people, as they have stated to me, that "the traditions of this Government were that it was the home of the distressed and the asylum of the oppressed."

Mr. McCOOK. I say so now, and I will be glad—

Mr. PAGE. Let the gentleman talk in his own time.

Mr. McCOOK. I say so now, and I will be glad—
Mr. PAGE. Let the gentleman talk in his own time.
Mr. McCOOK. The gentleman from California has referred to me personally, and I claim the right to make a fitting response.
Mr. PAGE. I wish the gentleman to know that I did not refer to him disrespectfully at all. I say, Mr. Chairman, that if this is the tradition of this Government, that this shall be the home of the down-trodden and oppressed of all countries, then why is my friend in favor of excluding immigrants from this country because they happen to be poor, and who are downtrodden and oppressed?
Mr. McCOOK. What right has the gentleman to assume that I take any such ground as that?
Mr. PAGE. Are you in favor of this bill?
Mr. McCOOK. I have not said a word in regard to this matter.
Mr. PAGE. But I know what the gentleman said to me.

Mr. PAGE. But I know what the gentleman said to me.
Mr. COX. The gentleman from California himself favored this clause of the bill.

Mr. PAGE. I am not in favor of that clause, wrongly construed and applied.

Mr. COX. I understood the gentleman from California to say he favored the clause as it stands.

Mr. PAGE. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the whole scope of the bill looks to the attempt to control the immigration of the paupers, insane, deaf and dumb, &c., and from landing at New York Mr. MORSE. Oh, no!

Mr. MORSE. Oh, no!

Mr. PAGE. The main idea of the bill is to prevent such people from landing there, and you bring in a bill asking an annual expenditure of $250,000, which you say New York has had to pay out of its own pocket, to reimburse you. But when California comes here and says this "home of the downtrodden and oppressed of all nations" is being overrun by the Chinese to whom you deny the right of citizenship and naturalization, and tells you that three of our fairest zenship and naturalization, and tells you that three of our fairest States on the Pacific coast are being flooded from this cesspool of corruption, and asks you to interpose your objection to it, and pass a law to limit the number of immigrants from that country, in the future, to a certain number, you regard it as a crime against our traditions and have no remedy you are willing to apply. If it is a crime to ask for this, how much more criminal for you to prohibit a man from landing at New York or Boston because he happens to be poor.

And I see my friend from Massachusetts before me, who also will not vote for this amendment because this is the "asylum of the downtrodden and the oppressed:" and I have no doubt my friend will trodden and the oppressed; and I have no doubt my friend will nevertheless give the bill his support, although it is obnoxious to the objections which I have just specified.

Mr. ROBINSON. You do not want anything from me now, do you?

Mr. PAGE. No, not now. [Laughter.]

To show the class of persons intended to be affected by my amendment and the class the people on the Pacific coast desire to restrict the immigration of in the interest of self-preservation, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to be read an extract taken from a book written by Bayard Taylor, entitled India, China, and Japan, and published in 1855.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

It is my deliberate opinion that the Chinese are, morally, the most debased people on the face of the earth. Forms of vice which in other countries are barely named are in China so common that they excite no comment among the natives. They constitute the surface level, and below them are deeps and deeps of depravity so shocking and horrible that their character cannot even be hinted. There are some dark shadows in human nature which we naturally shrink from penetrating, and I made no attempt to collect information of this kind; but there was enough in the things which I could not avoid seeing and hearing, which are brought almost daily to the notice of every foreign resident, to inspire me with a powerful aversion to the Chinese race. Their touch is pollution, and, harsh as the opinion may seem, justice to our own race demand that they should not be allowed to settle on our soil. Science may have lost something, but mankind has gained, by the exclusive policy which has governed China during the past century.

Mr. PAGE. That is the testimory of an emiscent Arcavison who for

Mr. PAGE. That is the testimony of an eminent American who for many years was in China, and who was minister for this country to Berlin. It is well known that he was a gentleman of ability and intelligence, and able to give intelligent information upon this subject. That information will be borne out by all the facts in the case that can be gathered from the records of my own State, which has been submitting for years to this curse.

I offer my amendment, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of giving this House an opportunity to express its opinion as to whether they believe that unrestricted immigration from Asia is to be longer continued, with its offspring, the corruption, vice, and degradation which

In section 3 of the written or printed bill I propose to amend the original bill. Where it is provided that it shall be unlawful for any ship or vessel, or the master, commander, owner, or consignee thereof, to bring into or land at any port or place within the United States, as a passenger, any person not a citizen, &c., is to limit the number of such passengers who under existing law will not be entitled to naturalization at a future time to a number not exceeding fifteen on any

That is the only amendment I shall offer except to add to line 24 of the first section, after the word "them" the words, "and whether any, and, if so, how many, male passengers are excluded under existing naturalization laws."

Acting upon the theory that the Government of the United States acting aport the theory that the dovernment of the Chited States in its laws had by express terms excluded the Asiatics from citizenship in this country, believing the reports that have often been made to this House and that stand uncontradicted to-day, believing that the testimony of almost every individual who has visited the Pacific coast and the testimony of the members from the Pacific coast upon coast and the testimony of the members from the Pacific coast upon-this floor was sufficient to justify an amendment of that kind that would limit in the future the number of Chinese who might land at any port in the United States, I have offered this amendment. If it be wrong, Mr. Chairman, as I said before, for paupers, for criminals, for deaf and dumb persons, to be permitted to come to this country, is it not wrong that California and the other Pacific States should be buried up under a class of immigration that the people of California at their leaf election with the property and the contract of the contract California at their last election, with a unanimity hardly ever before witnessed at any election, decided was an evil, declaring they regarded it as one of the greatest evils of our time. I appeal to members of this House whether they can afford to pass this bill and leave this amendment out.

Reference has been made to the traditions of this Government, and it has been repeated that this land is the asylum of the downtrodden and the oppressed of all lands. Take that statement in its broadest and best sense, and I heartily concur with it. And I take this occasion to say here and now that I belong to that party which recognizes now and has always recognized the equal rights of men in this country. I belong to and act with that party which believes every man should be entitled to his rights under this Government without distinction of the control distinction of race or color. But while I agree to this I say that the right of every State to protect itself—and self-protection to a State is the same as self-protection to an individual—demands that there shall be some restrictive legislation, so that in future we may put a check on the influx of the Asiatic hordes that are continually coming by every ship to the Pacific coast.

Practically, Mr. Chairman, San Francisco is nearer Hong-Kong or any port in China than it is to Omaha; I say practically, in cost of travel. It will take longer, of course, to come, but Chinese passengers can be landed at San Francisco from any port in China cheaper gets can be tanded at San Francisco from any port in China cheaper than an immigrant passenger can be brought from Omaha in the State of Nebraska to San Francisco. While I agree with the remarks that have been made by the gentlemen from New York who have preceded me in favor of this bill; while I agree that their grievances arising under the immigration laws ought to be remedied; and while I disagree with my other friend from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] whom I see in front of me; and while I believe the General Government should appropriate money for the purpose of feeding the starving immigrants that are in New York, that are being taken care of under the hospitable care of that State to-day, I at the same time believe it to be right that some restrictive legislation should be enacted that will prevent any foreign country from sending to this country its paupers prevent any foreign country from sending to this country its paupers or its criminals for the purpose of getting rid of them, and I know they are sent here by the hundreds and landed in New York, and the generous and noble-hearted people of that great city and that great State are compelled to take care of them. And so it is also in other cities and States in the United States. I can look beyond the State lines of my own State and can recognize the rights of other places and other States, but I must say when a State comme as California has other States, but I must say when a State comes as California has come knocking at the door of Congress, with its wishes expressed by a vote of its people; when out of 162,000 votes there were only a little over eight hundred that were not in favor of restrictive legislation upon this question, I do say her will thus expressed is entitled to some attention.

I have been called upon, Mr. Chairman, to vote many times with my friends from New England and my friends of the Middle States on the question of tariff. I have sometimes had to apologize to my people after having voted on these tariff questions; or if not to apologize, at least to explain. I have been appealed to by those who represent the manufacturing industries of New England and the Middle States of this Union to stand by their people and protect the laborers, and to protect American industries and American manufacturers. I have done so; yet my friends from New England will not listen to me when I appeal to them to stand by the laboring classes of the Pacific coast and tell them it is degrading to them to bring one hundred and fifty thousand Monagalays and also the protection of the protect coast and ten them it is degrading to them to bring one mindred and fifty thousand Mongolian slaves and place them in the machineshops, in the shoe-factories, in the watch-factories, in the cigar-factories, alongside the white laborers of the country. As before the war free labor refused to go South and enter into competition with the slave labor of South Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana, so, Mr. Chairman, free white American labor shrinks from the contest when it has to enter into competition with the labor of one hundred and fifty thousand Mongolian slaves.

When I make this appeal I do not ask any munificent legislation for the Pacific coast. I do not ask any appropriations of money. But we say, in God's name, when you are dealing with this question of immigration, protect us now.

It cannot be said that this amendment is in violation of any treaty. You have a treaty with France, and you have treaties with every

You have a treaty with France, and you have treates with every European country.

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. MORSE. What would become of these people if you did not employ them?

Mr. PAGE. Well, they are employed by different persons. They will work for a dollar a day, or even fifty cents a day, and board

Mr. MORSE. Who employs them? Mr. PAGE. Different individuals; you do not expect me to name them.

Mr. MORSE. They do not employ themselves?

Mr. PAGE. Men employ them who own the large manufactories; and they do it because they want to get labor at the cheapest price they can possibly obtain it for. And when we vote with you to protect New England manufactures and New England industries at the cheapest we want to protect and discount of the West was do it because we want to protect and discount of the west was a simple of the west to protect and discount of the west was a simple of the west to protect and discount of the west to be a second of the west to be a second of the west to protect and discount of the west to be a second of the west to be a expense of the West, we do it because we want to protect and dignify American labor and develop American industries. That is what we do it for.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.
Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Did not the contractors in California and other places employ these men in building the Pacific Railroad, and in that set an example to other parts of the country?

Mr. PAGE. I do not know that there is anything in the gentleman's question. Employers in California are like employers everywhere else; they seek to obtain the cheapest labor possible. That has always been the history of such transactions and always will be. But we say we do not want to bring them here because they enter the field of labor in competition with our own people and shut them out. The Chinaman has no family, and fifty of them will live in a room ten feet by twelve almost. As I have said, a Chinaman has no family to support; he contributes nothing to the education of children, for the building of churches and school-houses. He has no responsibilities, and he assumes none of the duties of citizenship. You could not rely upon him in case of a war over insurantice and insurantice. rely upon him in case of a war or an insurrection or an invasion. You would not dare to arm him. If the Pacific coast were invaded tomorrow, the 150,000 Mongolian serfs and slaves there would as soon fight against you as for you. They have no respect for our institu-

Mr. EINSTEIN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.
Mr. EINSTEIN. I would like to ask the gentleman from California how he could expect that, in case of an invasion of the shores of California, these Mongolians or Chinamen would rise up to help defend a State where they are allowed to take no interest in its government and none in the Government of the United States; where they are denied all the rights of citizenship? How could he expect them to aid such a State?

Mr. PAGE. I did not yield for a speech, but I will answer that question right now. I say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Einstein] that the American Congress passed a law, which was sanctioned by the President of the United States, declaring that these Chinamen should not become citizens of the United States. And the fifth article of the treaty with China denies the right of these Chinese to ever become citizens of the United States. In addition to that let me refer the gentlement to a law of China which declares it to be a felory representation of the death for any Chinamen to represent the selection. a felony punishable by death for any Chinaman to renounce his alle-a felony punishable by death for any Chinaman to rendunce his anegiance to his own country.

Mr. EINSTEIN. I am not arguing the question, but I am asking the gentleman how he can expect these Chinamen to risk their lives in defense of a country that denies them every right.

Mr. PAGE. My answer to the gentleman shall be full and complete.
We do not want that class of people here, and I announce as a principle that this Government cannot afford to invite any people to its cipie that this Government cannot allord to invite any people to its shores in any great numbers to whom they are unwilling to extend the rights of citizenship. Whenever this Government denies to any particular class of people the rights of citizenship it has no right to admit them here, in any great numbers at all events.

Mr. STEVENSON. With the permission of the gentleman, I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. PAGE. Contains

Mr. PAGE. Certainly. Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman has found fault with his friends from New England for not voting with him upon this Chinese ques-

Mr. PAGE. Oh, no; I am not finding fault at all.
Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman stated that he had voted with his New England friends upon the question of the tariff. I suggest to the gentleman that if hereafter his votes on that subject should be given in accordance with the wishes of the people of the great West and the people of his own State, he might perhaps find more assist-ance from them upon this question than he obtains from his friends from New England.

Mr. PAGE. I have a very high regard for the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. STEVENSON;] but I am not here to-night to make any trades. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Let me say that I am not asking my friend from California to make a "trade." I am with him upon this Chinese question; and I think I represent the people of my own State in regard to it. I hope that hereafter he will represent his State in regard to it. I hope that hereafter he will represent his State upon the tariff question, as I have no doubt he will.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is a warm place yet for the gentleman from California on Plymouth Rock. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAGE. I have no doubt of that. I hope Plymouth Rock will wake up and come to her senses one of these days in regard to this question of immigration. Let her do justice to the Pacific coast as question of immigration. Let her do justice to the Pacine coast as we have always done justice to her.

Mr. COX. This bill comprehends every section.

Mr. PAGE. My amendment comprehends what we want for the Pacific coast; and if the gentleman will help us to pass the amendment his bill will go through without any trouble. There is no question about the success of the bill with the amendment attached.

Mr. COX. I do not know about a veto.
Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, it may be urged by those who are to follow me (and I may not have an opportunity to reply) that there has been a commission appointed for the purpose of negotiating new treaties, and that therefore we ought not to legislate at this time. I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of State, Hon. William M. Evarts, sent to the House by the President of the United States, M. Evarts, sent to the House by the Fresident of the United States, in response to a resolution offered by my colleague on the Committee on Education and Labor, the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIS.] That resolution called upon the Secretary of State for certain information as to what had been done by the President or the Secretary of State in regard to the question of amending this treaty; and it referred to a resolution passed in February, 1878. The Secretary of State responded by denying that any such resolution had been passed. I read his language:

The committee resolution of the 25th of February, 1878, requesting the President to, open correspondence with China and Great Britain, appears to have been a joint resolution, which was read a first and second time in the House, and then recommitted. No further action was taken either in the House or Senate, and consequently it has never been communicated to the President or referred to this Department. No steps, therefore, have been or could have been taken in formal pursuance of the request of the resolution.

This struck me as singular, because I thought I remembered that this House had taken some action on the subject nearly two years ago. On examining the Congressional Record, I found that Mr. Howe, then a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, reported a concurrent resolution on the 7th of May, 1878, which was placed upon the Calendar. On the 25th of May, 1878, it passed the Senate. I refer to pages 3772-3 of the Congressional Record, second session Forty-fifth Congress. That resolution came to the House, and upon my motion was adopted on the 17th of June, 1878, in the following lan-

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the provisions of the existing treaty between the Empire of China and the United States, allowing unrestricted emigration to this country from China, might wisely be modified so as to subserve the best interests of both governments; and the attention of the Executive is respectfully invited to the subject.

My object in calling attention to this matter is to emphasize the fact that, though over two years ago the House and the Senate by concurrent resolution called the attention of the Executive to this subject of immigration, nothing has been dene upon it up to this subject of immigration, nothing has been done upon it up to this time; and the Secretary of State evades the question, declining to give any information other than such as is contained in the pamphlet to which I have referred. I mention this to show that, in my judgment, we cannot expect anything from the Secretary of State upon this subject. If we are to have any relief at all it must come through this House; and I believe that the best judgment of the people of this country to-day will join with that of the people of California, who so unanimously condemned Chinese immigration at the last election. I believe that the sentiment of the country will support Congress in adopting this amendment and placing this restriction on Chinese immigration.

I vield five minutes to the centleman from West Virginia [Mr. Wilson of the country will support the country will su

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr.WIL-son,] and then the remainder of my time to my colleague, [Mr. DAVIS, of California.]

Mr. WARNER. I rise to a question of order. I ask to have read clause 7 of Rule XIV. I regret to be compelled to make this point of order. I do not make it on my own account, but on behalf of ladies in the gallery, from whom I understand complaint is made of the violation of the rule which prohibits smoking in the Hall.

The Clerk read as follows:

7. While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no member shall walk out of or across the Hall, nor, when a member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no member shall wear his hat or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper are charged with the strict enforcement of this clause.

Mr. WARNER. That is the clause especially to which I make reference.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the Sergeant-at-Arms to the rule just read, and requests its enforcement.

Mr. PAGE. I have yielded for five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, it has been the policy of this Government ever since its organization to invite immigration from foreign countries. We did so at the earliest dawn of our Independence, and that immigration has benefited the country largely, as every man knows. It has aided us in fighting our battles, in felling our forests, in navigating our rivers, in building our railroads, in digging our canals, in aiding the national growth and adding to the general wealth and prosperity.

Now, while, as I have stated, it has been the policy on the part of this Government to invite immigration from civilized countries of this Government to invite immigration from civilized countries of the world, there is yet a power somewhere lodged in this Government to pretect our people from noxious immigration. It is not to be said the doors are to be thrown wide open and everybody from everywhere has the right to come into our borders, and that we have not the right to protect our people. We do have the right to protect our people. We have the right, sir, to protect them from the introduction into our midst of dangerous, infectious, and contagious diseases. We have the right to protect them by shutting our borders to the entrance of pesright to protect them by shitting our forders to the entrance of pestilence and plague from foreign lands.

That power, I say, Mr. Chairman, rests somewhere in this Government to protect ourselves against the introduction of noxious immigration into this country, and I propose to give the syllabus of the decision of the Supreme Court, which, I take it, will let in some light on the subject. In January, 1876, the question of the validity of the statutes of the State of New York was brought before the Supreme Court of the United States and effer argument that was adolered. Court of the United States, and after argument they were declared to be unconstitutional and void. Mr. Justice Miller, delivering the opinion of the court, says:

We are of opinion that this whole subject has been confided to Congress by the Constitution; that Congress can more appropriately and with more acceptance exercise it than any other body known to our law, State or national; that by providing a system of laws in these matters, applicable to all ports and to all vessels, a serious question, which has long been matter of contest and complaint, may be effectually and satisfactorily settled.

It is settled beyond all cavil, then, by this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, settled beyond all doubt, that the national Congress does possess the constitutional power to provide competent legislation on this most important subject.

This bill came to this House in a somewhat crude shape. of large importance, embracing many sections, and it was believed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, when it was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the crudi-ties which it contained would be corrected by amendment and all objectionable features which could be discovered removed. I have in the few moments allowed me simply desired to raise the point which has not been discussed, and to reply by quoting, as I have done, the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States to the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] who, as I understand, has denied to Congress the constitutional power over this subject of regulating immigration.

When we come to discuss the bill by sections, under the five-minute rule, I think the objections which have been urged will be removed. I know my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, and my colleague on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, has made some point well worthy of consideration and which perhaps should be adopted. He has raised some objections which unless removed are fatal to some sections. I therefore desire at the earliest possible moment to have the House proceed to the consideration of the bill by sections, under the five-minute rule, in order that whatever objectionable feature there may be in the bill may be stricken out and the measure made palatable and acceptable to the whole House. Certainly it is true something should be done in this regard, and now is the time to do it.

Mr. PAGE. I now yield whatever time I have remaining to my colleague.

Mr. DAVIS, of California, took the floor and yielded to Mr. RICE.

Mr. RICE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SIMONTON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration a bill (H. R. No. 2408) to regulate immigration and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. COX. I wish to make a motion, Mr. Speaker, that when we go into committee again on this bill all general debate shall be closed in

Mr. WRIGHT. I hope there will be no limit to the debate, as I wish to say something on this question before the debate closes. Therefore I shall object.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. COX. I wish to say that I do not propose to cut off the gentle-man from Pennsylvania from being heard. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. DAVIS] is entitled to the floor in committee the next time the subject is resumed for consideration.

Mr. COX. I move, then, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent that the bill and report be reprinted, as the numbers heretofore printed have been exhausted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I ask by unanimous consent that an amendment, which I wish to offer, may also be printed with the bill and re-

Mr. COX. By unanimous consent it can be agreed that amend-ments which gentlemen may send up to the Clerk's desk can be printed with the bill

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. And then, on motion of Mr. STEVENSON, (at ten o'clock and eighteen minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 23, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

THE JOURNAL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair wishes to call attention to that part of the Journal which relates to the first amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. Blaine] to the Army appropriation bill. It makes the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Withers] to have assigned a reason for his point of order, which was not according to the fact. He stated generally that he raised the point of order. Then the Chair inquired of him upon what ground it was, and he went on to specify some grounds which the Chair thought were not tenable grounds, but the point of order nevertheless was well taken according to the rule. The Journal should state the fact that the Senator from Virginia did not at the outset assign any reason for his point of order. He stated generally "the point of order."

Mr. WITHERS. That is correct.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal will be corrected in that respect.

respect.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Yesterday morning the Chair presented to the Senate resolutions of the American Numismatic and Archæological Society of the city of New York, in favor of the admission of classical antiquities free of duty. My recollection is that the memorial was laid on the table, but if I heard the Journal correctly, it is stated than the state of the Committee on Finance. Will the there that it was referred to the Committee on Finance. Will the Clerk please refer to it?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It appears by the Journal that the memorial was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I desire to call that matter up some time during the morning hour for a few minutes this morning.

Mr. TELLER. It ought not to have been referred, as the bill has been reported.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That is an error. The memorial was ordered to lie upon the table for the reason that the bill to which it relates had been reported from the Committee on Finance and was in possession of the Senate. The Journal should be amended so as to show that it was laid on the table and not referred to the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal will be so corrected, and as corrected will be approved.

ACCEPTANCE OF JEFFERSON'S DESK.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, yesterday when the House joint resolution relative to receiving the writing-desk of Mr. Jefferson was before the Senate, I called the attention of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Johnston] to the fact that a clause of the resolution before the Senate read in these words:

That this precious relie is hereby accepted in the name of the nation, and that the same be deposited for safe-keeping in the Department of State of the United States.

And I inquired if it would not be better to have the relic accepted "in the name of the United States." The answer was:

Mr. JOHNSTON. The resolution comes from the House as it was adopted there. It is just in the form it was adopted there. I suppose it is right because it is exceed whet the forth. actly what the fact is.

I turned to the RECORD this morning accidentally and I found the joint resolution introduced in the House by Mr. Crapo identical in language to the resolution which passed the Senate, except the second section of the resolution, which reads thus:

And be it further resolved, That this precious work is hereby accepted in the name of the United States, and the same be deposited for safe-keeping in the Department of State of the United States.

As the donors are to be advised of the action, if the Record is correct, I do not know which resolution they will be advised in regard to. The joint resolution as passed by the House says we accept it "in the name of the United States," and as it passed the Senate the phrase is "in the name of the nation." I suppose that only one copy will be transmitted to the donors, and I would rather the House resolution should go then that the Senate resolution should go then that the Senate resolution should go then that the Senate resolution should go then the senate resolution should go then the state of the senate resolution should go the sena lution should go than that the Senate resolution should go.

Mr. DAWES. The same joint resolution which passed the House must have passed the Senate. There could not have been two resolutions. That may be a mistake of the RECORD, but it cannot be otherwise than the same resolution. There may have been a mistake in copying. Mr. BECK.

Mr. BECK. I do not know the fact; I have not verified it.
Mr. DAWES. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to a little error in the RECORD as reported. I did not inquire of the Senator, as I am reported there, whether he was opposed to the resolution; I inquired of the Senator if he objected to the word "nation." I am reported as inquiring of the Senator if he was opposed to the resolution, and he said no. I inquired of the Senator if he objected to the word "nation," and the Senator's response is recorded there, but it is applied to a different question from what I put. I was desirous of ascertaining from the Senator whether it was an I was desirous of ascertaining from the Senator whether it was an objection to the resolution that it was a presentation of the desk to the "nation," and I understood the Senator to say that was no objection on his part.

Mr. BECK. I have only to say that the Senator from Massachu-

Mr. BECK. I have only to say that the Senator from Massachusetts asked me if I objected to the resolution as it was. I understood him to ask that. I do not think he said anything about "nation" or "United States," or anything else like that.

Mr. DAWES. My interrogatory to the Senator was whether he objected to the word "nation" in the resolution. The Senator, of course, speaks as he heard me. I had no idea that the Senator would have seed to a wealthing drawn in words that wars seen table to be opposed to a resolution drawn in words that were acceptable to him. My only desire was to ascertain whether the Senator from Kentucky objected to the use of the word "nation."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The only resolution passed upon the subject-matter was a joint resolution from the House of Represent-

SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday concurred in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate for the publication of the Smithsonian Report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered.

Mr. HAMLIN. The chairman of the Committee on Printing is out of his seat, and I cannot confer with him; and I enter the motion to save time.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Postmaster-General, communicating, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, information relative to a suit against the postmaster at New York for damages arising for the use of a patented instrument for canceling postage-stamps; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a letter of George W. Bruner, of Montgomery, Missouri, relative to the original bounty of Charles Mahoney, late private Company E, Twenty-fourth Missouri Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SLATER presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Astoria, relative to appropriations for the Willamette and Lower Columbia Rivers and the bar at the mouth of the Columbia River; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented resolutions of the Board of Trade of Portland which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented resolutions of the Board of Trade of Portland, Oregon, respecting appropriations for the Willamette and Lower Columbia Rivers; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Johnson, Rees & Winans, M. C. Moore & Co., and 125 others, citizens of Walla Walla, Washington Territory, praying an appropriation of $250,000 to begin the construction of a breakwater at the mouth of the Columbia River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Wasco County, Oregon, and a petition of citizens of Clatsop County, Oregon, praying for an appropriation of $250,000 to begin the construction of a breakwater at the mouth of the Columbia River; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VEST presented a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Saint Louis, Missouri, in favor of an appropriation by Congress to construct reservoirs on the headwaters of the Mississippi River and its tributaries to increase the depth of water so as to admit the passage of light-draught steamers at all seasons of the year; which was referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries.

Mr. INGALLS presented a memorial of citizens residing in the western part of Kansas, remonstrating against the passage of the bill taking certain counties from the western land district in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KIRKWOOD presented the petition of M. A. Chamberlain and 53 others, citizens of Buchanan County, Iowa, praying for the repeal of the stamp-tax on cosmetics, perfumery, and medicines; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMPRON of Representation presented a position of citizens.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented a petition of citizens of Huntingdon County, Pennsylvania, praying for the establishment of a department of agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Huntingdon County, Pennsylvania, praying for such legislation as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in transportation charges;

which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Huntingdon County,
Pennsylvania, praying for such amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. SAUNDERS presented a petition of citizens of Clinton, Iowa, praying for such action by Congress as will insure a speedy division of the Indian reserves and allow Indians to hold their lands in severalty, as is now done by white citizens; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WITHERS presented the petition of F. L. Galt, M. D., of Virginia, praying the removal of his political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1006) for the relief of Andrew T. McReynolds, to report it adversely, and with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed. The Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Ferry,] however, who is not in his seat, takes some interest in the bill, and I think would be glad to have it placed on the Calendar. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Levi Anderson, late private Company A, Seventh Regiment Kansas Volunteers, praying for an increase of pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1662) granting an increase of pension to Levi Anderson, late private Company A, Seventh Regiment Kansas Volunteers.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

be printed.

Mr. WITHERS. I am also directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Ann Dennis, a widow, and the mother of James Dennis, to report it back, the same being now pending before James Dennis, to report it back, the same being now pending before the Pension Bureau.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 851) granting a pension to Martha A. Lachman, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Henry Slaughter, praying to be granted additional pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HEREFORD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1663) for the relief of the employes who worked in and the contractors who furnished castings to the United worked in and the contractors who furnished castings to the United States armory at Harper's Ferry, West Virginia, and were not paid from January 1, 1861, to April 17, 1861, inclusive; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1664) to amend and re-enact sections 3 and 4 of an act entitled "An act authorizing the Solicitor of the Treasury, by and with the consent of the Secretary of War, to cancel certain contracts for the sale of lots of land made at Harper's Ferry in the year 1869 by the United States, to resell the same, and sell or lease all other real estate and riparian rights now owned by the United States at Harper's Ferry, West Virginia," approved June 14, 1878; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims. Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1665) to refund to George W. Graham a certain amount of money; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TELLER. Some time since I introduced a bill for the relief of B. F. Rockafellow, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I introduced it and had it referred to that committee under the impression that Mr. Rockafellow had not settled his account with the Department. The bill contains some errors at all events. I find now that he has settled his accounts with the Department—had, in fact, when I introduced the bill. I ask leave to introduce another bill and have it referred to the same committee, calling the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to the fact that, in my judgment, the bill Offices and Post-Roads to the fast that, in my judgment, the bill properly belongs to the Committee on Claims, but inasmuch as the other bill is before his committee I will have this bill referred to it for the committee to examine.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1666) for the relief of B. F. Rockafellow; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims. I remember the case. The Government had settled with

Mr. Rockafellow, and it is now a private claim, and as far as the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is concerned, I think it has nothing to do with the case. I think the bill should properly go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that I did not ask to have it referred to the Committee on Claims, because I feared the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads might think I was taking some snap on them by that course. If the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will report back the other bill and have it referred to the Committee on Claims, the committee can dispose of that also.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Commit-

Mr. JOHNSTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1667) to provide for the suppression of infectious and contagious diseases of domesticated animals; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. BALDWIN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1668) supplementary to an act for the relief of Nelson Lyon and Jeremiah S. James, approved April 1, 1880; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H.R.No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

On motion of Mr. RANSOM, it was Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the resolution of the Senate agreeing to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 100) to print extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1879.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT WICKFORD HARBOR.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill No. 1315.

No. 1315.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1315) making an appropriation for the erection of a light-house and fog-bell on Old Gay Rock, at the entrance of Wickford Harbor, Narragansett Bay.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What committee is the bill reported from?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BURNSIDE. A report of the Light-House Board accompanies the bill, and also a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the bill explained.

the bill, and also a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the bill explained. Mr. BURNSIDE. The present light-house is not only in a very bad condition, but in a bad position. The Light-House Board has recommended, on two or three occasions, that a change be made, and that the light-house provided for by this bill be built. I introduced a bill in accordance with that recommendation. It was sent through the proper channels to the Treasury Department; the Secretary of the Treasury sent it to the Light-House Board; and the Light-House Board sent back the bill with a recommendation, which is among the papers accompanying the bill. It is a very important position on the channel leading on the Narragansett Bay up to Providence, a channel as much frequented by vessels of value as almost any channel in the United States. United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much is appropriated?
Mr. BURNSIDE. Forty-five thousand dollars. It is a very necesmr. BURNSIDE. Forey-nee thousand dollars. It is a very necessary improvement, and unless the bill be passed now and the contract made very soon a whole year will be lost in the construction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it understood that $45,000 will cover the total cost, or is this merely one of the sweet pleasant steps we begin with in such cases

Mr. BURNSIDE. It is the total cost. There is no contingency of that sort for an improvement in Rhode Island.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the recommendation of the Light-House Board or something of that kind. I dare say it is all right; it must be if it is in Rhode Island.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication referred to will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 20, 1880.

SIE: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th instant, inclosing for the views of this Department Senate bill No. 1315, appropriating $45,000 for the erection of a light-house and fog-signal bell on Old Gay Rock, at the entrance of Wickford Harbor, Narragansett Bay.

In reply, I have respectfully to transmit herewith a copy of a letter of this date from the engineer secretary of the Light-House Board, in which it is stated that the board is of opinion that a light-house should be erected at Old Gay Rock, and that the sum above named will not be in excess of that required for the purpose.

Very respectfully

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary. Hon. John B. Gordon, Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD, Washington, February 20, 1880.

Washington, February 20, 1880.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Department letter (E. W. C.) of the 19th instant, transmitting, for the views of the Light-House Board thereon, Senate bill 1315, for the erection of a light-house and fog-bell on Old Gay Rock, entrance of Wickford Harbor, Narragansett Bay, this bill having been referred to the Department for suggestion by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate.

In reply, I beg to state that the matter of providing additional facilities for entering the harbor of Wickford, Rhode Island, was carefully considered by the Light-House Board at its meeting on June 3, 1878, when the conclusion was reached that the interests of commerce and navigation required that a light-house should be established at Old Gay Rock.

The board is of the opinion that the appropriation proposed to be made by the bill in question, namely, $45,000, is not in excess of the sum that will be needed for the establishment of a light-house and fog-bell at the locality named, and respectfully recommends that the same be made.

Senate bill No. 1315 is herewith returned, together with the letter of transmittal of the Committee on Commerce.

Very respectfully,

Major of Engineers, Engineer Sceretary.

The honorable the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was reported to the Treasury. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. No. 5626) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the first amendment of the Senate and had concurred in the second amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2787) making appro-amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2787) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following bill and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 5623) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury

A bill (H. R. No. 3023) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to repair and extend the public building owned by the Government at Cleveland, Ohio;
A joint resolution (H. R. No. 189) legalizing the health ordinances and regulations for the District of Columbia; and
A joint resolution (S. R. No. 91) to print the eulogies delivered in the Senate and House of Representatives upon the late George S. Houston, a Senator from the State of Alabama.

DUTY ON CLASSICAL ANTIQUITIES.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I ask to take from the table the memorial of the Numismatic and Archæological Society of the city of New York relative to the bill which provides for the admission of classical antiquities free of duty. I wish to submit a few remarks upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa desires to submit a few remarks upon the memorial named by him, to which the mtt a few remarks upon the memorial named by him, to which the Chair hears no objection.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I would have nothing to say in regard to this matter at all were it not for the fact that the gentlemen composing this society, who I have no doubt are very respectable and worthy gentlemen, have seen fit to refer to me by name in the memorial which has been presented; and that makes it, in my judgment, proper that I should say a few words.

These gentlemen allege that House bill No. 2524, which provides for the admission of classical antiquities free of duty, has been so amended by me as to destroy the probability of its becoming a law. Of course, I have no complaint to make at all that these gentlemen or any other gentlemen exercise their undoubted right of presenting memorials to either or both Houses of Congress; but I submit that they should be careful in statements, and particularly where they refer to Senators by name they should state facts accurately.

The bill referred to has not been amended by me at all. I have had printed an amendment which, when the bill is called up, I propose to offer, and that is the extent of my offending thus far.

While I am up, I will say a word or two in regard to the bill and my proposed amendment. These gentlemen say that this is a bill "in which all educational institutions and art students in the United States" are interested. From that it is to be fairly inferred, I think, that under the existing law educational institutions cannot receive these antiquities without paying duties upon them, and that is another mistake (if that be the intent of this memorial) in a matter of fact. As the law stands to-day it reads thus:

SEC. 2512. All paintings, statuary, and photographic pictures imported into the United States for exhibition by any association duly authorized under the laws of the United States or any State for the promotion and encouragement of science, art, or industry, and not intended for sale, shall be admitted free of duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

It is also provided in section 2505 of the Revised Statutes:

Works of art: paintings, statuary, fountains, and other works of art, imported expressly for presentation to national institutions or to any State, or to any municipal corporation—shall be free of duty. The bill from the House, in addition to that, proposes, as I understand it, to allow the importation of these articles free of duty for sale for the purpose of making money out of them to the persons who sell them or to reduce the price of them to those who choose to indulge their taste by purchasing them if imported free of duty. That is not at all what I gather from the memorial presented to this body is the understanding of the gentlemen who, doubtless in the exercise of their proper privilege, saw fit to present it

Another word or two, Mr. President. In the early part of this week one of the leading journals of the city of New York saw fit to allude to my action in this matter. That journal is as justly celebrated for the accuracy of its knowledge upon all matters of public concernment as it is for the unvarying courtesy with which it alludes on all ment as it is for the unvarying courtesy with which it alludes on all occasions to persons who are so unfortunate as to differ with it upon such matters. It also has fallen, strange as it may seem, into an error. That journal says that the purpose of my amendment is to secure the admission, free of duty, of salt into this country to be used in curing fish. [Laughter.] It is remarkably strange that a journal as intelligent as that could make that mistake. Salt to cure fish is free of duty to-day, and has been since the very distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. Morrill.] some years ago prepared and had passed the present tariff law.

Some movement in the country looking toward the repeal of the duty on salt directed my attention to this matter some weeks ago, and duty on salt directed my attention to this matter some weeks ago, and I made some inquiries, as was natural, perhaps, as to how the present tariff affected the people among whom I live, and what would be the effect upon their industries of the repeal of the duty upon salt. I found to my surprise—and I am almost ashamed to confess it—that in the State in which I live foreign salt is used very largely. In the county adjoining that in which I live, during the thirteen months made up of all of the year 1879 and the first month of the current year, one single establishment used two hundred and forty-five car loads of foreign salt in curing meat. And pursuing the same inquire made up of all of the year loss and the mass and an expert one single establishment used two hundred and forty-five car loads of foreign salt in curing meat. And pursuing the same inquiry in other direction in my own State and elsewhere, I found this fact; that a very large proportion, almost all of the meats cured in this country for exportation are cured with foreign salt; and it struck me that it might be in the interest not only of the section of the country in which I live but of the whole country to extend to men engaged in curing meats the same privilege and the same benefit, if it be a benefit, that is enjoyed by those of our citizens who are engaged in curing fish; and therefore I had the temerity, as perhaps it may be deemed, to propose to add to the bill of the House the amendment to which I have alluded, the sole purpose, the sole scope of which is to allow a refunding to the men who export to foreign countries meats cured in this country with foreign salt the amount of duty paid upon cured in this country with foreign salt the amount of duty paid upon such salt. That is all.

I think I am right, Mr. President, in that, and it is a habit of mine when I think I am right to stick to what I believe to be right.

Now let me state why I proposed this amendment to this bill. We all know perfectly well that all matters affecting the raising of revenue must originate in the other House, and that the Senate can only have the privilege of affecting the revenue laws by amendments to have the privilege of affecting the revenue laws by amendments to bills that come from there here. I happened to notice that this bill was here; and therefore, fearing that I might not have another op-portunity of doing what I propose to endeavor to do, I submitted this amendment.

I do not know that by so doing I antagonize the bill that came from the House. I have already indicated my judgment that its purpose is not to aid institutions that wish to gather these antiquities as matter of public instruction, but to aid men who desire to engage in the sale of them or to aid those who as I before said to gratify their testes wish to workers them so blocks of our and produced larger. tastes wish to purchase them as objects of art and perhaps luxury without paying anything to support the revenue while doing so. I think it is rather selfish in these gentlemen. They are, I apprehend, mostly men of wealth. The only duty levied upon these articles now is the small duty of 10 per cent., while almost everything that enters is the small duty of 10 per cent., while almost everything that einers into the daily necessary consumption of the people of the country is taxed much higher than that.

But, as I said, I do not know that I am disposed to antagonize specially the bill that came from the House; but I cannot help believing that it is a matter of much greater importance to the people of this country to take off the duty upon salt used in curing meats for exportation, while it would tend much more to build up the productive interests of this country than it will to take off the duty upon ive interests of this country than it will to take off the duty upon Having thus said what I desire to say, unless some Senator wishes to say something upon the same subject I will withdraw the motion I made to take this memorial from the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn. The memorial lies on the table.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. No. 5524) to establish post-routes. It is necessary for it to go back to the House with the amendments.

Mr. PLUMB. I have as much interest as the Senator from Texas in the passage of that bill, and it is proper it should pass at an early day, but I have observed that in one way or another special things occupy that part of the day which has been set apart for the Calendar, so that part of the day which has been set apart for the Calendar, so that we open up the general sea of debate and consideration of things other than the ordinary business of the Senate in the morning hour, without having lately done anything in regard to that part of the work of the Senate which has been reported by the committees or at least without entering upon it under the ordinary rule.

There is a bill on the Calendar which stands at the head of the Calendar which stands are the standard which stands at the head of the Calendar which stands are the standard which stands are the standard which sta

There is a bill on the Calendar which stands at the head of the Calendar and in which the people of my State are very deeply and seriously interested. I do not know that it will lead to any debate, but whether it shall or not, it is a bill which is very proper to be considered soon. I do not care to antagonize the post-route bill which the Senator from Texas has in charge, and if it is likely to pass in a few minutes I shall not interpose, but if it is not, I shall feel disposed to call for the regular order.

Mr. MAXEY. I have charge of the bill at the head of the Calendar to which the Senator refers, and am as much interested in it as anybody; but this is a bill which affects nearly every State in the Union; it is the annual post-route bill; no legislation whatever is contained either in the original bill or in the amendments, save the establishment of post-routes.

tablishment of post-routes.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator what objection there will be to taking it up immediately after the expiration of the morning hour?

Mr. MAXEY. Because the unfinished business will then come up.

If Senators prefer to have the post-route bill killed, I have nothing further to say. The Committee on Privileges and Elections have brought over as unfinished business the matter which came up yesterday evening, and as soon as the morning hour is over that will come up, and I have no possible hope of passing this bill in time to send it back to the Management it is done in the morning hour.

up, and I have no possible hope of passing this bill in time to send it back to the House unless it is done in the morning hour.

Mr. PADDOCK. Certainly no one will object to taking up the bill at the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Texas to an error which he fell into. The bill that I referred to is not the one which is nominally at the head of the Calendar, but one which by an arrangement made some weeks ago was to stand as at the head of the Calendar—the bill (H. R. No. 2326) for the relief of the settlers morn Osage trust and diminished-reserve lands in Kansas, and for of the Calendar—the bill (H. R. No. 2326) for the relief of the settlers upon Osage trust and diminished-reserve lands in Kansas, and for other purposes. It is a matter of not only great importance, but of great immediate importance, and one that has been a long time before the Senate. It is a House bill passed at the extra session. Of course if I felt that the post-route bill could be passed immediately, I would not insist on the regular order; but I have sat here a week waiting first for one thing and then another to be taken up in the morning hour, and the morning hour has been thus exhausted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas moves that the pending order, being the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the Anthony rule, so called, be postponed, indicating his purpose if that motion be successful to move to take up the annual purpose if that motion be successful to move to take up the annual post-route bill. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas now moves to take up the annual post-route bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 5524) to establish post-routes.

Mr. MAXEY. In order to save time, I will state that the bill seeks no legislation whatever, either in the original bill or the amendments, save the establishment of post-routes. I therefore do not see any good result to be attained by simply reading names over; and in order to expedite time I ask unanimous consent that the reading be dispensed with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not the slightest doubt of the correctness of the statement of my friend from Texas, who knows that I have a perfect confidence in him, but I believe it to be a wrong thing to allow any bill to pass the Senate without reading.

Mr. MAXEY. Then I withdraw the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the amendments will be acted on as they are reached in the reading of the bill, dis-

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it understood that Senators who have amendments are required to offer them as we go along? I suggest that as we pass a paragraph if any Senator has an amendment he offer it as we go along.

Mr. MAXEY. I apprehend that every Senator has availed himself of the notice which I gave the other day; but if any Senator wishes an amendment incorporated, I have the authority of the committee to

Mr. MAXEY. The amendments are all merely the establishment of additional routes. I move that they be agreed to in gross.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They will be read with the text of the bill and considered as agreed to as read, unless objection be made.

The Secretary read the bill with the amendments proposed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads inserted in the text.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the chairman of the committee if the route proposed from Owensboro' to Pine Bluffs is inserted? Are there any other amendments except those printed?

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator will make out his amendment and give it to me, I will offer it as soon as the reading is through.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Perhaps my amendment is incorporated by the committee; I will look and see.

Mr. MAXEY. In line 109, on page 5, I move to strike out the name of "Sutton" and insert "Sutter;" under the head of "California."

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 5626) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives upon the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 2787) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense and for the armament thereof for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, the House having non-concurred in the first and concurred in the second amendment.

Mr. WITHERS. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment which has been non-concurred in by the House. There is only one matter of difference and that is not particularly material to the bill. I move that the Senate recede from its first amendment, which has been non-concurred in by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate proceeds to the consideration of its unfinished business, being the resolutions declaring that WILLIAM P. Kellogg was not elected and that Henry M. Spofford was elected United States Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term beginning March 4, 1877.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

1. Resolved, That, according to the evidence now known to the Senate, WILLIAM P. KELLOGG was not chosen by the Legislature of Louisiana to the seat in the Senate for the term beginning on the 4th day of March, 1877, and is not entitled to sit in the same.

2. Resolved. That Henry M. Spofford was chosen by the Legislature of Louisiana to the seat in the Senate for the term beginning on the 4th of March, 1877, and that he be admitted to the same on taking the oath prescribed by law.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the credentials of WILLIAM PITT KEL-LOGG as Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years beginning the 4th day of March, 1877, and signed by Stephen B. Packard, who claimed to be the governor of the State, were presented to the Senate on the 20th January, 1877. On the 4th of March of the same year Mr. Kellogg applied to be sworn in, but the Senate then refused to admit him. In the month of October the credentials of Henry M. Spofford, claiming the same seat, and signed by P. B. Nicholls, then actually governor of the State, were presented.

These credentials were referred by the Senate to its Committee on Privileges and Elections, and on the 26th day of November, 1877, a majority of the committee reported that on the merits of the case Kellogg was entitled to the seat, and the Senate admitted him to it on the 28th of the same month.

The Legislature of the State of Louisiana solemnly protested against the action of the Senate, as a denial to the State of its right to repre-sentation in this body by a Senator chosen by the Legislature thereof as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, and in March, 1879, Mr. Spofford presented the memorial, and complained that upon the former hearing before the committee he had been denied the privilege of introducing important testimony. He further claimed that he had discovered new and material evidence which would establish that when the Legislature was elected in 1876, Kellogg, then the governor, used the power, patronage, and resources of his office to procure the election and return of a general assembly for the purpose of securing his election to the Senate, and afterward by menaces and bribery secured the vote of its members, and that but for such menaces and bribery he could not and would not have obtained the nominal election under which he claims the seat.

This memorial was referred by the Senate to its committee and authority given to it to take testimony, and to send for persons and papers. The committee has reported that Spofford is entitled to the seat, and thus is brought to your attention and before the Senate, and for its judgment, the important question to be discussed.

As one of the committee that made the report, I give to its recommendation my unqualified approbation and support. I do not propose to go into an examination of the facts now for the first time brought to light, which disclose a state of public and private morals among the men who composed what is known as the Kellogg legislature disgraceful beyond all that could have been imagined, nor will I even make an allusion to the acts of bribery and corruption of which the book of testimony is full. I prefer to examine the case from a different point of view.

I believe Mr. Spofford was elected in conformity with the com-mands of the Constitution and laws of the United States, by the only body that could justly claim to be the legislature of the State, and propose, Senators, for a little while to discuss the very interesting questions that the conclusion presents.

But in the very outset it has been said, and the point has been pressed with great earnestness, both by the counsel for Mr. Kellogg and by the minority of the committee, that all the questions of law and fact involved were presented upon the former reference, were solemnly adjudicated by the Senate, and having been adjudged are not open to inquiry. It is said that the former action of the Senate is covaluative were the parties and the State of I varieties as the parties. is conclusive upon the parties and the State of Louisiana as to every fact and every question that could have been considered, and invoking the aid of the maxim familiar to lawyers, and of frequent use in courts of judicature, that "interest reipublica ut sit finis litium," it is contended that the matter in controversy is "res adjudicata," and all the world is estopped from denying Mr. Kellogg's right to the seat. To afford a foundation for this extraordinary effort to ingraft upon the proceedings and practice of a legislative body maxims and pleas that have been adopted from considerations of convenience by courts instituted for the settlement of questions of private right, it is asserted that the questions raised are legal questions, and that in respect to the matter under consideration the Senate is a judicial tribunal.

I readily, indeed heartily, agree to the first proposition. This controversy does present grave questions of law—of public and constitutional law—questions that should provoke the most thorough discussion in this Chamber and throughout the whole country; they should interest not only you, Senators, but every statesman and jurist and citizen; and I cannot believe that any one here will dare approach their consideration without painstaking research and the calmest and most conscientious self-examination.

But I dissent and toto calo differ from the gentleman as to the last proposition.

The Senate is not and from its very constitution cannot be a judicial tribunal. The fundamental law that provides for its creation undertook to parcel out the powers and duties of the different departments of the Government, and separated them into three great divisions: the executive, the legislative, and the judicial. To each of these was allotted the work it is to perform, and each has its appropriate functions.

All legislative power-

Says the Constitution-

herein granted shall be vested in a Congress which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

And again it provides:

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

By another section one exception is made, if indeed it be an excep-tion, to this grant of judicial power. Great officers of state may be impeached by the House of Representatives for high crimes and misdemeanors, for crimes affecting the public welfare, for crimes connected with the administration of affairs, and, perhaps, for crimes that prove them unworthy to fill great political stations. If thus impeached the Senate has the sole power to try them, and when sitting for that purpose as a court Senators shall be "on oath or affirmation." The punishment is political, and political only. It can extend only to "removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of trust or profit under the United States."

With the exception named, the judicial power of the United States, and if the Constitution means anything, its entire judicial power is vested in the supreme and inferior courts. To them is committed the authority as judicial tribunals to construe, to expound, and to ascertain the law, and to enforce its commands in controversies of every kind subject to their jurisdiction. In these tribunals resides the judicial power of the Government, and by them the axiom and rules relied upon have been borrowed from like tribunals of our mother country.

The Senate, however, is a legislative body. Its office and functions are political. It is true that in the ordinary course of its procedure each Senator, and the Senate as a body, may find it necessary to construe laws and pass upon legal questions of the most abstruse kind, but this is only for the purpose of instructing the mind and conscience.

The act is a step in the performance of a political function.

So, where the Senate is called upon to judge as to the election of one of its own members, it may have to settle doubtful questions arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, or of the State that seeks representation. In such case the Senate is the judge of the election. That is, it must determine and decide upon every fact presented and every question of constitutional or statutory law that may arise. In discharging this duty the Senate is a court, as every jurisdiction, civil, criminal or ecclesiastical, is a court. It is a court in the sense that the Legislature of Massachusetts is "the general court," or that the general assembly of the Presbyterian church is a court.

Although it judges or decides, and in the sense described is a court, its proceedings are not judicial, nor is it or can be a judicial body. It is a legislative body with inherent as well as constitutional authority to judge or decide who shall be admitted to take part in its deliberations and share its responsibilities. In exercising this function it may be called upon to consider the relations of a State to the Federal Government, to inquire into and decide upon the right of the people of a State to settle their own government, or upon the regularity of the acts and proceedings of a State Legislature; but these questions at last concern only the body-politic; they relate to government, or upon the regularity of the acts and proceedings of a State Legislature; but these questions at last concern only the body-politic; they relate to government, or upon the regularity of the acts and proceedings of a State Legislature; but these questions at last concern only the body-politic; they relate to government, or upon the regularity of the acts and proceedings of a State Legislature; but these questions at last concern only the body-politic; they relate to government, or upon the regularity of the acts and proceedings of a State Legislature; but these questions at last concern only the body-politic; they relate to government, or upon the regularity of the acts and proceedings of a State Legislature; but these questions at last concern only the body-politic; they relate to government. ment, to the constitution of the Senate as a legislative body, and to the lawfulness of representation. The duty to be performed, in the broadest as in the strictest sense, is political.

Upon what theory of government or what construction of the Constitution, then, can it be affirmed that in deciding upon a question like the one before us this becomes a judicial body, or the proceeding a judicial proceeding? The Constitution has not so declared. Indeed it has expressly committed to other tribunals all the judicial power of the United States, with the exception of the trial of officers impeached by the House of Representatives. Whence comes, then, the assumption of judicial power, with its concomitants of judicial methods, maxims, and rules? Certainly not from the Constitution. Will any one here undertake to point out the section or clause that

Has the assumption any foundation in reason? Let us not be misled by a confusion of terms. Judicial power and judicial methods are one thing. The duty of every tribunal to decide fairly, justly, honestly every question that may be brought before it is quite a different thing. The Senate rests under the highest obligation to society as do the courts to uphold and maintain in all their purity the Constitution and laws, the rights of the Federal Government and of the States. No Senator can escape the performance of the duty this obligation imposes. It binds his conscience and compels recognition. But does the endeavor to perform this duty change that which is a legislative body into a judicial tribunal and impose upon it the forms and methods, the rules of procedure and maxims of the latter? Is a Senator himself transformed into a judge because he may be called upon to decide a question of law, and attempt to decide it with judidicial impartiality?

No, Mr. President, the claim cannot be maintained. It has no warrant in the Constitution. This is a legislative body, not a judicial tribunal; its functions are political and only political. As a legislative body it may adopt rules of its own to regulate its procedure facilitate the transaction of its business. But such rules are self-imposed; they cannot be imposed by others; they must be of a kind recommended by inherent propriety and a just regard to the object to be reached. They must help, not hinder, the attainment of justice and compliance with every constitutional obligation.

Nor is there any reason why this rule of res adjudicata shall be transplanted from another forum and made to take root here.

Natural justice makes no demand for its adoption. That requir justice to be done even after the delay of repeated litigation. That requires seeks to reach the real merits of every controversy, and with stern resolve redress every wrong. But inasmuch as human reason is imperfect the testimony on which it relies is often misleading, and its methods of investigation are defective, and as in the lapse of time the memory of facts becomes obscured, courts of judicature in the ordinary course of their business for the good of society, as well as their own protection, adopted the maxim quoted and formulated it into an ordinance of administration.

Experience, however, soon demonstrated that injustice and wrong were often the result of the application of the rule, and the courts without abandoning the rule itself were compelled to invent methods of relief, and the Legislature has given them willing assistance. Hence we have in courts of law retrials and writs of error, and in Hence we have in courts of law retrials and writs of error, and in courts of equity rehearings and bills of review supplemented by statutes in proper cases granting appeals, and appeals in the nature of writs of error. All these methods of relief are in daily use to escape the grinding effects of a rule which it is proposed to import into a legislative body acting upon a question purely and simply political. And yet it is not proposed to bring with it the methods by which the harshness of its effect may often be avoided.

harshness of its effect may often be avoided.

If the matter under consideration was one that affected only the rights of Mr. Kellog and Mr. Spofford there would be much force in the argument favoring the adoption of the rule. If this was a controversy as to which of the two gentlemen should enjoy the emoluments and be entitled to the dignity and honor of a seat in the Senate of the United States, the Senate might well say, indeed, having regard to the gravity of its duties and its responsibilities to the public, it should say: "It does not comport with the dignity of this body or with the public interests that the controversy shall be prolonged." The Senate should dismiss the application and proceed to perform other and more important duties. This is not such a controversy; it is one in which the State of Louisiana and the whole people of the United States are interested. It involves grave questions on public and constitutional law and reaches to the very foundations on public and constitutional law and reaches to the very foundations on which our frame of government rests. It involves the relations of the States of this Union to the National Government; the rights of the States and of the people of all the States.

One of the States appears at the bar of the Senate and demands that her constitutional right to representation shall be respected. She says that by mistake or fraud or a wrong decision one has been admitted here as her representative who in fact is not her representative, and demands redress. She says that she is prepared to demonstrate the fact to the satisfaction of the Senate and the whole country. But to this earnest appeal it is proposed to reply: What you say may be true. The one you have chosen may have been rejected; another person, a stranger and an alien to your confidence may occupy the seat prepared by the Constitution for your own accredited representative; he may have mounted to this great position by fraud, by deceit, by our own mistake, but we cannot revise or reverse our action.

our own mistake, but we cannot revise or reverse our action. We are fettered by a rule borrowed for the occasion from another tribunal, and the whole matter is res adjudicata.

Mr. President, such a reply is a denial to the State of a right guaranteed to her by the Constitution. The right cannot be questioned. No statesman or jurist in this broad land has ever questioned it. No one ever will. Has the former action of the Senate annulled it? Can that action annul it? Has the right been merged in a former independent or hidden out of sight so that it cannot be discovered? Can that action annul it? Has the right been merged in a former judgment, or hidden out of sight so that it cannot be discovered? Not at all. It is a constitutional right, and continues until satisfied. It can be satisfied only by recognition. It continues from day to day, from month to month, from year to year. It speaks to-day in tones as earnest and in voice as exacting as it did two years ago. A wrong judgment of the Senate cannot hush it into silence, nor can the plea of res adjudicata be accepted as its fulfillment.

To give such an effect to the plea places the Senate above the Constitution, and makes it the constituent instead of the Legislature of the State. Such an answer declares that although the former judgment may have been the result of a conspiracy, or fraud, or mistake, now patent to all the world, yet its effect is binding and conclusive. It declares that the State may be robbed of its right, its constitutional right, to representation, not because of any fault or error of its own, but because somebody else has been in fault, or has been its own, but because somebody else has been in fault, or has been imposed upon. Such a doctrine is monstrous. Its only foundation is the desire to exalt the dignity and value of the judgment of this body and escape the duty to perform a constitutional obligation.

Nor can the failure to perform this obligation be excused on the miserable plea that there is danger in the precedent. If Mr. Kelloge was duly elected by the true and lawful Legislature of Louisiana we should be eager to confirm him in possession of his seat and repel every effort to remove him. On the other hand, if Mr. Spofford has been elected by the true and legal Legislature, we should make haste to admit him to this body. Absolute justice requires this to be done. The Constitution requires it. A wrong decision is always a dangerous one, and may become a bad precedent; but a right decision always stands as its own justification. Bad men may seek to pervert it to a bad use, but good men will always be found to vindicate the principles upon which it rests and strip away every disguise from the motives of those who dare profane it.

But have we any precedents to instruct us in our deliberations or guide us in our action? After a good deal of research I have not een able to find one that presents the very case before us, or that in the principles settled can be considered as fairly expressing the opinions of our predecessors upon the questions now to be determined. Only three cases can be found in our legislative annals where the only three cases can be found in our legislative annuals where action of either House of Congress in seating members after examination in solemn form by a committee has been called in question. into the election of Senators and Representatives have been made usually with great care. Every fact has been brought to light through the diligence of the contestants, and every question of law involved has been thoroughly discussed by some of the very able lawyers and statesmen at all times to be found in Congress. The contestants have been satisfied by the judgments pronounced, or else, owing to the temper of party majorities, they have been convinced that further contest would be useless.

The earliest case arose in the House of Representatives in the year 1837. Gholson and Claiborne had been elected to the House from the State of Mississippi, at an election held under an order from the governor of that State, to serve at a special session of Congress, convened by proclamation of President Van Buren. The credentials of these gentlemen were referred to a committee who after an investigation made a report. The House declared them to have been duly elected and entitled to hold their seats for the two years prescribed by the Constitution as the term of office for members of that body. They were admitted and sworn. At the regular session of Congress, beginning the first Monday in December of the same year, Messrs. Prentiss and Ward, who had been elected at the time prescribed by the general law, appeared and claimed the seats. The whole subject the general law, appeared and claimed the seats. The whole subject was again referred to a committee which made a report. It was contended in behalf of Gholson and Claiborne, as is contended here, that the whole question had once been submitted to the House for its judgment, that judgment had been pronounced after a full consideration, and the matter was res adjudicata. But the House refused to recognize the validity of the plea, and held that notwithstanding the former judgment its power again to consider and determine the ques tion was plenary. It rescinded the former judgment and ejected Clai-borne and Gholson from their seats. Prentiss and Ward, however, were not admitted; the people were required to have another elec-

The next case in our legislative history came up in the Senate from the State of Indiana in 1857. Messrs. Bright and Fitch, claiming to have been chosen Senators by the Legislature of that State, presented their credentials, which were referred to a committee. The comtheir credentials, which were referred to a committee. The committee reported that they had been duly elected, and the Senate so declared. Two years thereafter a memorial was presented from the Legislature of the State protesting against the former judgment, asking that it should be reversed and that two other gentlemen chosen by that Legislature should be admitted as Senators. Again the subby that Legislature should be admitted as Senators. Again the subject was referred to a committee, which reported that every fact then presented and every question of law then raised had been presented and raised upon the former hearing, and upon the recommendation of the committee the Senate voted that the case was res adjudicata, that the former judgment was final, and concluded the parties, the State of Indiana, and the whole world.

It appears that there was no question about conflicting government the State of Indiana and Indiana Print Indiana Ind

It appears that there was no question about conflicting governments in the State. The Legislature that elected Bright and Fitch was conceded on all sides to have been the legally organized Legislature of the State. The only matter in controversy related to the regularity and lawfulness of the manner of the election. The vote stood thirty in favor of the report to fifteen against it. But in the minority stood the late Senator Chandler, Mr. Collamer of Vermont, Mr. Douglas of Illinois, Mr. Fessenden of Maine, Mr. Hamlin, now a Senator, Mr. Seward of New York, Mr. Trumbull of Illinois, and Mr. Wilson, afterward Vice-President of the United States. These gentlemen held to the same opinions that I advocate to-day in regard to the validity of the plea interposed. They were persons of the greatest reputation, and their opinions are entitled to great weight. Their arguments furnish much of the reasoning advanced here to-day. Again the question was presented to the Senate in the year 1874 in a

Again the question was presented to the Senate in the year 1874 in a contest between Spencer and Sykes, each of whom claimed to have been chosen by the lawful Legislature of the State of Alabama. In that State, as in Louisiana, two bodies were organized and claimed to be the lawful Legislature. One of these bodies chose Spencer; the other chose Sykes. Both gentlemen appeared here and claimed the seat. Their credentials, according to the rules, were referred to a committee, a majority of which reported in favor of Spencer. The Senate, by a party majority, sustained the report, and Spencer was sworn in. Afterward the Legislature memorialized the Senate, protesting against its former action, and again the question was sent to committee. A majority of the committee reported that the former judgment of the Senate was conclusive, but the Senate never voted or acted upon the report, or the resolution that accompanied it.

It thus appears that the general question as to the force and effect to be given to the judgment of a legislative body in deciding upon the election of one of its members has once been settled by the Senate and once by the House of Representatives, and that the two decisions are directly antagonistic.

The Senate has affirmed that the judgment is conclusive; the House has refused to be thus bound.

has refused to be thus bound.

The proposition that such a judgment is to have the same force and effect as the decree of a judicial tribunal settling a question of private right, to my mind, borders upon absurdity. Yet I will agree that if there had been such a line of decisions extending through a course of years, I would not only doubt the correctness of my own opinion but would accept these decisions as part of our parliamentary law. Accept these decisions are part of our parliamentary law. Accept these decisions are part of our parliamentary law. cepting them as parliamentary law, I would uphold and maintain them. But we have no such line of decisions. As we have seen, but two cases have been decided. When we examine into the facts we find that neither of them is like the one under consideration. In the Indiana case the Legislature that elected Bright and Fitch was acknowledged by everybody to have been the only true and lawful Legislature of the State. No other body of men opposed its claim. The question presented was whether that Legislature had proceeded in a regular manner to the election of Senators. The Senate held that the manner of election was proper and that Bright and Fitch had been duly elected, that is conformably to law by the only organized valities legislature. that is conformably to law, by the only organized political society in the State of Indiana. Having once settled a question, relating only "to manner," the Senate declined to reverse its decision. So in the

"to manner," the Senate declined to reverse its decision. So in the Mississippi case the regularity of the election only was involved. The House, however, did "rescind" its former judgment.

The case before us is altogether different. No question as to form or manner is presented. We affirm that the State is denied representation and that the plea, if sustained, will retain in the Senate one who represents no government and was elected by a body that was not a legislature, has never been recognized as a legislature by any authority State or national, and was no better than a mob. If the plea shall be sentained Mr. KELLOGG will one his election to the the plea shall be sustained, Mr. Kellogg will owe his election to the Senate, and not to the Legislature, as many of his adherents owed their election not to the people, but to returning boards.

If we shall fail to establish the marked differences between this case and the one referred to, if we shall fail to show that the Legislature that elected Mr. Spofford was the true and lawful Legislature of the State, the only body that could—we go further and say the only body that did—exercise legislative power in Louisiana, then unquestionably Mr. Kellogg is entitled to the seat and Spofford should

The issue is plain; it is distinct; everybody can understand it. It is stripped of all maxims and all pleas. It is a question of fact and of constitutional law. The underlying principles involved are easy of comprehension; the dullest mind can understand them. Such an issue is suited to the genius of our people. I invite their candid at-

But I beg not to be misunderstood. I do not assert that the Senate rests under the obligation to reconsider and rehear every case of a contested election that may be brought to its notice. This supreme and final arbiter in the settlement of every question that may arise as to its organization and its constituent parts should exercise a sound discretion and be guided by enlightened conscience. It should not for light or trivial reasons set aside its deliberate judgment, nor in cases of doubtful right. When the power of reconsideration is invoked for such cases it may well say, "No; the matter has been fully and fairly considered; judgment has been pronounced upon an intelligent view of all the facts and of every question of law. No good reason is shown why there shall be another investigation, another argument, and each the desirious."

and another decision. The case has been adjudged, and there it shall

On the other hand, when it is manifest that a former judgment was made upon a mistake of facts; that the Senate was imposed upon by artifice or fraud or had reached a conclusion clearly and manifestly wrong and in violation of the constitutional rights of one of festly wrong and in violation of the constitutional rights of one of the States of the Union, then there rests upon the Senate a duty which it should hasten to perform; the duty to correct the judgment, to rectify the wrong, and restore to the State rights of which it has been unjustly deprived. Will not all agree to this? Will any person here in this presence deny the obligation? Will any one go before the Amer-ican people and say that a State may be deprived of its just representa-tion by a judgment not in harmony with the Constitution? Will any Senator by making false issues or by appeals to sectional differences endeavor to hide away the true question to be settled? I fear, Mr. President—and the history of the past ten years does not quiet my ap-President-and the history of the past ten years does not quiet my apprehensions, the report of the minority of the committee, sustained by no fact, but dealing in menaces, gives additional ground to fear

Warning has been given that the action of Senators from the States engaged in the rebellion will be subjected to the severest criticism. We have been told in effect that we are expected to maintain the claim of Mr. Kellogg, or else to be considered false to duty, disloyal to the Government, and unworthy of the generous confidence reposed in us by the great body of the people of the North. We recognize the obligation which that confidence imposes. Patriotism, henory, self-interest, every motive that can control the actions of men, unite in constraining us to faithfully keep "our vows," to uphold the Constitution and laws, and do all that men can do to promote the glory and prosperity, the peace and happiness of our common country. We have no other country. Here we were born; here we expect to live; here to die, and here will be the homes of the children who are to succeed us. The great-hearted people instinctively have seized and recognized these truths. Gifted with a profound insight as to the characteristic description of the characteristic consistent and the characteristic consistency consist acter of our institutions, denied by some mysterious freak of nature to many of their public men, they have welcomed us back to the Union, not to follow blindly the opinions of others, nor to register in this council-chamber their edicts, but to take part in its deliberations and assist in the conduct of affairs. They expect us, and have the right to expect us, to exercise independent thought and to speak what we believe to be truth, being responsible, as are all the servants of the people, to an enlightened public opinion.

Therefore we appeal to the intelligent judgment of our fellow-citivess throughout these States and submit to them the reasons for

Therefore we appear to the intelligent judgment of our fellow dis-izens throughout these States, and submit to them the reasons for our action. If it shall be found that we have been led by party spirit or controlled by unworthy motives to do injustice and violate the sacred obligations under which we rest to uphold in all its purity the Constitution that gathers us here together, then upon us will be visited, and justly, the severest condemnation.

Let us then inquire whether the State of Louisiana has been deprived of its rightful representation here.

The Constitution, article 1, section 3, declares that—

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof.

This clause is the very basis of our Federal Union. It is known not only to you, Senators, but also to the whole people, that the adoption of the Constitution hinged upon these few words. States, equal in dignity, equal in authority, equal in the pride of sovereignty, were represented by delegates in the convention at Philadelphia. The desire for a more perfect Union than existed under the confederation prompted them to meet in this great council. Each of them desired not only to retain its autonomy but also its equal voice and equal share in all the deliberations and acts of the Government to be cresnare in all the deliberations and acts of the Government to be created. Earnest and angry debate arose upon this question. The differences came near defeating the whole scheme, but at last the smaller States, yielding the question of representation according to numbers in the House of Representatives, demanded that they should have equal representation in this body—that Delaware, with its single Representative, should here be equal in position, in power, and influence to New York with its thirty-five, and this was agreed upon.

In the one body the people, as such, were to have representation, but here the States. Two Senators were to be chosen from each State by the Legislature thereof. Senators thus chosen, and no others, were to be admitted. They were to represent the people in their organized capacity as a political society, or, in other words, the government of the States. They were to represent a government republican in form, with all the descriptions of the states. with all the departments necessary to the protection "of life, liberty, with all the departments necessary to the protection "of fife, fiberty, and property;" with an executive, a judiciary, and a legislature. Such a State is entitled to representation in the Senate. This right cannot be denied. It is a constitutional right. It is not a right which has existed only in the past, or exists only for this day; it is a continuing right, one that can never be taken away, for with so much jealousy was it regarded, and of such transcendent importance, that it is excepted from the constitutional power of amendment. The State of Louisiana from the day it was admitted into the Union has possessed this right, and will continue to possess it as long as her Fed-

And Senators to represent this organized political society must be chosen by "the Legislature thereof." The Legislature of no other State, nor of all the States, can make the choice. The governor of State, nor or all the States, can make the choice. The governor or Louisiana, the judiciary, and the people cannot; the Senate of the United States cannot; the law-making power, that which is actually and truly the recognized Legislature, and no other, can make the choice. No body pretending to the authority of a legislature can choose a Senator. Whatever may be the forms under which it may have organized, however plausible may be its pretensions, if it be wanting in the one vital quality of being the law-making power of the State, its action in respect to the choice of a Senator cannot be recognized.

Has that choice been made? Has the Legislature, the law-making power of Louisiana, exercised this power conferred upon it by the Constitution? Has it chosen a Senator to take his place here as the guardian of the interests of the State and its people, and, in conjunction with Senators from other States, to make laws for the nation, to shape its policies, and provide for the general welfare?

It is known that two rival bodies claimed to be the Legislature of the State; each contended that it had been elected according to law; each attempted an organization; each went through the form of choosing a Senator to represent the State in this place. The persons thus chosen are before us to-day. Who is entitled to the seat?

The Constitution of the United States has not created a tribunal, nor has it authorized any department of Government to settle a controversy such as arose in Louisiana. It is true the Constitution makes it the duty of the Government of the United States on the application of the Legislature, or of the executive, (when the Legislature cannot be convened,) to protect each State against domestic violence, and Congress to carry out this provision has authorized the President to employ the land and naval forces of the United States, and if necessary to call out the militia. But this is intended as a protection to the lawful government and people of the State. Where this power is invoked the duty may be cast upon the President in giving directions for the employment of the land and naval forces to decide be-tween conflicting claims of rival governments. His decision may be right or it may be wrong. Congress can interfere and reverse his

But although this power was invoked by Governor Packard, one of the claimants of the office of governor, and also by what is known as the Packard legislature, the President did not interfere, nor did he undertake to settle the dispute. General Grant, and after him President Hayes, taking precautions to prevent any actual outbreak, left the whole controversy to be settled by the State of Louisiana. Congress was then in session, but by neither body was any act done looking to a settlement. Congress left the State to decide which was its lawful government.

So also the Senate of the United States, as an incident to its power and duty to judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its members, may have jurisdiction to determine, in the absence of any other authoritative decision, which of two bodies claiming legislative power and sending Senators to represent the State here is the true and legal Legislature. But the right to make such a decision is only and legal Legislature. But the right to make such a decision is only an incident to another right, a necessary step to the performance of a duty, and cannot be exercised contrary to facts or contrary to the decision of that tribunal which is at last the supreme arbiter.

The Senate hesitated to perform this delicate task of deciding between the rival governments, for it appears from its Journal that Mr. Kellog, who had been chosen by the Packard legislature, presented his credentials, and on the 4th March, 1877, offering to take the cather prescribed by low select to be seated. His configuration bore oaths prescribed by law, asked to be seated. His application, however, was refused, and the credentials were sent to a committee.

We have thus seen that neither the President, nor Congress, nor the Senate decided between these rival bodies. What authority then could settle and settle conclusively which was the legal and true Legislature. islature? I answer, the State herself.

No one will contend that any authority acting under the Constitu-tion did settle the question, nor indeed, except for the purposes and under the conditions that I have named, that the Constitution inter-feres with or pretends to interfere with this just and absolute power of the State.

of the State.

If the State has settled the question, and settled it finally and irrevocably, what power or authority or jurisdiction can reverse or annul its decision? The President cannot do it; Congress cannot do it; the Senate cannot. From its action there is no appeal.

Arguing the Rhode Island case of Luther vs. Borden, Mr. Webster truly said:

The decision of Rhode Island by her Legislature, by her executive, by adjudication of her highest court, has shut up the whole case. Do you propose—I will not put it in that form—but would it be proper for this court to reverse their adjudication? That declares that the people of Rhode Island knew nothing of her "people's constitution." Is it possible for the court to know anything about it! It seems to me that if there were nothing else in the case the proceedings of Rhode Island herself must stop every mouth in the court and out of it. Rhode Island is competent to decide the question herself, and everybody else is bound by her decision.—Works, volume 6, page 239.

And Mr. Morton, of Indiana, expressed in stronger and more elaborate phrase the same opinion in a report upon the contest for a seat in this body between Ray and McMillin, from Louisiana, in the year 1873. His words are:

The Constitution says that the Senate of the United States shall consist of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof for six years. The manner of constituting the Legislature is left absolutely to each State, and the question of its organization must be left to be decided by such tribunals or regulations as are provided by the constitution and laws of the State, and the only question about which the Senate may inquire in determining the admission of Senators is whether they have been chosen by the Legislature of the State, that legislature recognized by the State or whose organization has been recognized by other departments of the State government. Under our complex system of government all questions of State governments under their own laws must be left to the decision of the State governments under their own laws must be left to the decision of the State tribunals created for that purpose and when such decisions have been made they must be accepted by the Government of the United States in their dealings with such States. It is no answer to this to say that in a particular case such tribunals will or have decided wrongfully. The Government of the United States has no right to reverse their decision so long as the State possesses a government republicant its form. republicanin its form.

This is the deliberately recorded opinion of one of the great leaders of the republican party, and a great leader in this Chamber. And who can by logic or reason disturb the solid foundation of this opinwho can by logic or reason disturb the solid foundation of this opinion? It is based upon constitutional and public law. It has its conception in the fundamental truth that these States are and must be self-governing as to all matters and all questions not delegated by the people to the Government of the United States; that they have the right and power at any time to alter, amend, or change their own governments, to administer their own affairs, to provide for every department of State administration, to call an executive, a legislature, a judiciary into being, to determine how all questions of controverted authority shall be settled, and pass upon every conflict between different departments and every conflict between rival claimants to any authority. The methods by which this shall be done cannot be reviewed or reversed by any tribunal. The only inquiry that can be made is, What has the State decided—how has the State decided ?

The decision may have been unwise; it may have been made, to use Mr. Morton's expression, "wrongfully," but, as he has put it—

The Government of the United States has no right to review their decisions so long as the State possesses a government republican in its form.

Now, has this question been presented to the State of Louisiana, and has the State decided it?

In January, 1877, there were two claimants of the office of governor and two rival bodies claiming to be the Legislature of the State. One of these bodies declared that Nicholls had been elected governor by the people, and inducted him into office. The other declared that Packard had been elected, and went through the form of his inauguration. All recognized the same constitution and professed obedience to the same laws

The Packard legislature assembled at the State-heuse. The doors and entrances to the building were barricaded. Armed policemen to the number of hundreds stood ready to prevent the people of the State from crossing the threshold. A detachment of United States troops was stationed close by to protect the inmates. For weeks this body occupied this stronghold, eating, sleeping, and living within its walls. Beyond the lines of their fortification they possessed no authority. Once and once only during their brief existence as a legislative body they attempted to enforce an act of legislation beyond the portals of their prison-house. But their agents were arrested by the strong arm of the law invoked by their rivals, and the endeavor failed. They went through the form of directing warrants to be issued upon the treasury in settlement for their services as legislators, and these remain unpaid to this day. They chose two Senators to represent the State in the Senate of the United States, and their work was ended. One by one they stole away, and those among them who had been truly elected by the people joined the Nicholls legislature. There they renewed their oaths to support the constitution of the State, The Packard legislature assembled at the State-house. The doors they renewed their oaths to support the constitution of the State, acknowledged that their first attempt at organization was a sham and a fraud, and joined with the other body in electing Mr. Spofford to the seat in the Senate which he now claims.

In all our history no more glaring attempt has been made by fraud and deceit to cheat the people of their just rights and impose upon them a government contrary to their choice. In 1872 in the same State the people had elected McEnery to be their governor and a democratic Legislature. Mr. Kellogg had been the republican candidate and claimed the executive office for himself and that a majority of his candidates had been elected to the Legislature. He applied to a drunken judge of one of the courts of the United States to assist him in gaining possession of power. The process of the court was freely issued, and the President of the United States, misled no doubt by the advice of his law officer, lent the great power of this Government and its military arm to the recognition and maintenance of the orders and decrees of the court. The people were defrauded and Mr. Kellogg and his legislature were firmly seated in authority.

Again, in 1874 the people had elected a majority of the legislators in opposition to Governor Kellogg's party. But the minority, with the help of the military forces of the Government, succeeded in effecting an organization, and the singular spectacle was presented of an officer wearing the uniform of the United States purging a State Legislature and driving from it those who had been elected by the people. Having twice succeeded by force and fraud in defeating the will of the people as expressed at the ballot-box, and wishing to gain a place the people as expressed at the ballot-box, and wishing to gain a place here, Mr. Kellogg made a third attempt to organize by fraud another legislative body, which, as we have seen, maintained a sickly existence and then perished from want of vital force. Public attention had been drawn to the consideration of affairs in Louisiana. An intelligent public opinion expressed, in language fierce with indignation, its sense of the wrongs that had been done to the people of that unhappy State, and the President wisely left it to settle its own affairs. The Packard legislature quietly separated. No act done by it now has, or ever had, any authority in the State, or has been recognized by any department of government, State or national. The man whom it inaugurated as governor went abroad, and there holds an office from the Federal Government. The only place in America where life or vigor has been given to any act of that Legislature is here in this Chamber. Here it is gravely said that that body was the Legislature of the State of Louisiana.

But let us look for a moment at the other body—the Nicholls leg-

But let us look for a moment at the other body—the Nicholls legislature. It assembled at the time required by the constitution and laws; it was duly organized, and inducted into office the person elected as chief executive. Strong in the affections and confidence of the people, it sat with open doors, and to its chambers all were invited. It proceeded with all the gravity of earnest conviction and with the consciousness of lawful authority to the business of legislation. It was recognized by the people, by the courts, and by all the civil officers of the State. It levied and collected taxes; it created courts whose jurisdiction has never been questioned, and which are to-day open to suitors for the enforcement of rights and the redress of wrongs. It enacted laws that are enforced by courts, State and of wrongs. Federal.

Under the authority of the Nicholls government the people of Louisiana have lived in peace and quiet now since January, 1877. Every department of that government is in active being, performing every duty and discharging every proper function. Under laws enacted by its legislature senators and representatives to the State Legislature are elected, and members of the Federal House of Representatives. The lawful successor to the Nicholls legislature chose a Senator to this body whose credentials bore the broad seal of the State of Louisia affixed by Governor Nicholls.

Who can, then, question the acts of the Nicholls legislature? The President cannot; Congress cannot. Who can question the lawfulness of the Nicholls government? If Packard were to return to Louisiana and incite the people to domestic violence, could the President or Congress refuse to Governor Nicholls or his legislature the assistance guaranteed by the Constitution on the ground that he is not the lawful governor of the State? If such a call had been made two years ago by the legislature that elected Mr. Spofford, could the appeal have been neglected? No Senator is bold enough to answer affirmatively; and why? Because the State of Louisiana has settled all these questions for herself. She has decided that Nicholls was her lawful governor, and that the Nicholls legislature was the lawful Legislature. She enforces laws placed upon the statute-book before either of these claimants was chosen, and thus has settled that the Nicholls legislature was from the beginning the only true legislature. The State having thus settled the question, everybody else is concluded. This, in the words of Mr. Webster, "must stop every mouth." The Senate is concluded like everybody else. Authority to judge of the election of a Senator does not confer authority to decide that to be a legislature which is not a legislature any more than it confers authority to decide that to be law which is not law. The Senate is under the same obligation with the President and Congress to recognize the political organization that the Constitution recognizes as the State—that organization with which the Government has Federal relations and which in virtue of those relations is entitled to representation. The people of that organization have the right to representation in the House of Representatives; and the Legislature which sensition in the House of Representatives, and the Legislature when is part of it, and no other body, can choose two persons to serve the State in the Senate. The decision of the State, to use the words of Mr. Morton, may have been "wrongful," but if the State has made the decision that decision must be accepted as final, and "the Government of the United States has no right to reverse" it as long as the State pos-Upon this ground alone we can safely rest the claim of Mr. Spofford to the seat, for to this conclusion every impartial mind must come. But we are not content to do so. We are prepared to show, and the documentary evidence within the reach of every Senator will establish that the Kellogg legislature did not derive its authority to assemble as a legislative body from the people. Its only claim to authority rests upon the fraudulent acts of a returning board whose referred briefly to the canvass in Louisiana in 1876. The people of that State, inspired with the hope of a change of administration at the Federal city, and animated with the expectation of relief from the thralldom in which they had been held for so many years, put forth the most energetic efforts to gain a majority. years, put forth the most energetic efforts to gain a majority. These efforts were met with equal energy by Governor Kellogg and his associated band of adventurers. They were loath to yield the offices of dignity and honor, and the treasury which had fed and strengthened them through a long period of misrule, of license, and plunder. Promptly their forces were organized, unscrupulously they employed every agency that arbitrary power, and cunningly devised machinery placed at their disposal. Confident of success, they laughed at the despairing struggle of a once free but then subjugated people. They boldly proclaimed that they would come off victors, for experience had taught them the value of their methods. But when the election was over it was discovered not only that Packard was beaten for governor, but that a majority of the democratic candidates for senators and representatives had been elected to the State Legislature. This was a cruel disappointment to Governor Kellogg, who was a prospective candidate for a seat in the Senate of the United States. His life in Louisiana had been the life of an office-holder. He had been connected with politics and official station from the time he went there. Success had attended him in every effort, and he had looked with confident expectation to a seat in this great council of the nation. The people now had decided against him, and it became necessary to resort again to the machinery provided by the election laws to enable a minority party to retain possession of power and control the great offices of State. This machinery had been used before, and its use and value were well known to the hordes of bad men who for so long a time had rioted in the luxury of ill-gotten place. It had been denounced by congressional committees, who had published to the world the infamy of its methods, but in the extremity to which they were reduced Governor Kellog and his associates did not hesitate to use it, and, as will be shown, they used it with a boldness that almost concealed their crime. Their purpose was strengthened by the ready counsel of others, for it so happened, and unfortunately for the oppressed people of Louisiana, that its electoral vote would decide the result of a great national contest.

The election laws gave to the governor power to appoint a registrar of voters for each of the fifty-seven parishes of the State and eighteen wards of the city of New Orleans. These registrars appointed three commissioners of election for each of the seven hundred pollthree commissioners of election for each of the seven hundred poli-ing-places, and besides were required to appoint one or more consta-bles to keep the peace at each polling-place. The registrars had the power to admit or reject the name of any voter. The law forbade any court to interfere with the exercise of this power. In every in-stance a republican was appointed to be registrar, and at least two of the three commissioners of election were of the same party, as was true of the constables whose number was not limited.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator allow me one moment to correct him 1

Mr. BAILEY. I prefer not to be interrupted.
Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator has fallen into so gross an error that should like to correct him.

Mr. BAILEY. If I have fallen into an error the Senator will have ample opportunity to correct it. I cannot stop to take notice of every matter, and if in some unimportant particular there may be a mistake it can be corrected hereafter, and no one will more cheerfully join in which at the terretion they may be making that correction than myself.

Mr. KELLOGG. No doubt of it.

Mr. BAILEY. It will thus be seen that the whole election machinery of the State was under the absolute control of the governor, and including registrars, commissioners of election, and policemen, not less than two thousand eight hundred persons of his own party and his own adherents were connected with it. To this number must be added fourteen hundred supervisors of election appointed by the United States court at New Orleans, two for each poll, and twentythree hundred deputy marshals appointed by the marshal of the district, and upon the advice of the Attorney-General at Washington large detachments of the Army were scattered through the State as bystanders, to serve as a posse comitatus, if the marshal should find use for them.

In addition to this, the republican committee had sent to each reg-In addition to this, the republican committee had sent to each registrar a statement showing the number of colored voters in his parish, urging that he should exert himself to have their names registered, and bring them to the polls to vote the republican ticket, and stating that his claims to recognition for official station would depend upon the fidelity with which he did this partisan work. But, not content with these preparations, within one week of the day of election, either by the instigation of the governor, or his party friends, and he to profit by the act, more than ten thousand warrants were issued out of the circuit court at New Orleans for the arrest of citizens who were of the circuit court at New Orleans for the arrest of citizens who were alleged to have falsely registered as competent voters. In this number were included many of the oldest and most respectable citizens, and among them was a Representative in the Congress of the United States. The affidavits upon which the warrants were issued were made by wholesale and by two policemen. Thirteen hundred of these cases were tried before the day of election and the warrants dismissed, but the remainder for want of time and for other reasons were not heard, the remainder for want of time and for other reasons were not heard, and more than five thousand citizens were excluded from the ballotbox. So palpable was the fraud, that when the commissioner presented his bill for more than $15,000 for these services, Judge Billings, of the circuit court of the United States, told him, "On the face of these papers there is a gross fraud, and I will not certify a cent."

As an atonement, however, for this successful attempt to rob so many thousands of white men of the ballot, they issued in the city of New Orleans to the blacks, whose total people is now as only fifty seven.

many thousands of white men of the ballot, they issued in the city of New Orleans to the blacks, whose total population was only fifty-seven thousand, more than twenty-three thousand certificates of registration, upon each of which, owing to the shrewdly-contrived election laws, a ballot could be cast. There were cases where the same person held half a dozen of these certificates, and could repeat his vote by going from one polling-place to another.

going from one polling-place to another.

But notwithstanding all this, and the willing aid given by the Attorney-General and Secretary of War, and although an army of more than seven thousand registrars, commissioners, constables, supervisors, and deputy marshals were scattered throughout the State under the pretense of preserving the peace and guarding the purity of the ballot-box, the people of Louisiana decided against Governor KellogG and by a majority exceeding 8,000 in a popular vote of 160,000, the largest ever cast in the State and greater in proportion than almost any other State, elected a democrat to be governor and a majority of democrats to the Legislature.

a majority of democrats to the Legislature.

Profound peace reigned everywhere. The democrats had been deprived of the fruits of victory in 1872 and 1874 under the pretense of violence and intimidation. They had seen the cunningly-devised machinery of the returning board set at work upon more than one occasion to fabricate returns that defeated the expressions of the ballot-box. They exhorted their friends in every ward and parish to use every effort to bring every voter to the polls and to afford no shadow of excuse to charges of intimidation or violence. No such shadow of excuse to charges or intimidation or violence. No such peaceful election had been known in Louisiana since reconstruction was inaugurated. No such peaceful election was seen in any one of the States of the Union. Although by the election laws it was the duty of each of the registrars to report every act of intimidation and violence occurring during the progress of registration, and of every commissioner of election to report similar misconduct on the day of election and to send these reports with the compiled returns to the returning board within forty-eight hours of the close of the election, and although these registrars and in every instance two of the three commissioners of election were republicans, yet such a report was made from only a single parish, and that a report of republican frauds.

The result was astounding; the defeat was crushing. In other communities the verdict of the people would have been accepted by even the most unscrupulous of partisans as a finality. The boldest among them would have shrunk from encountering an indignant and outraged public opinion, and would have stood abashed by traditional reverence for the sacredness of the ballot; but such traditions had been banished from Louisiana for almost a generation. The horde of adventurers who had hastened to that political El Dorado had so often been confronted by adverse ballots and so often by fraud, by the aid of returning boards, of Federal judges, and Federal power had wrested victory from defeat, that they did not despair of success. The returning board was still in reserve. It was brought to the front, and begun its subtle and destructive work.

By the laws of the State this board was to be composed of five persons chosen from all political parties. At the time its aid was invoked its number was not full; four republicans, and they representing the worst elements in the republican party, were in charge. The democrats, instructed by experience of their methods in the past, and remembering that on other occasions they had not scrupled to exercise power without regard to truth or justice, earnestly insisted that a fifth member should be added, and, as the law required, belonging to the democratic party. But this reasonable and lawful request was refused. It did not suit the purposes of the defeated and disappointed office-holders to have an impartial or unfriendly witness to their pro-omee-noiders to have an impartial or unfriendly witness to their proceedings. Thus, in defiance of the plain commands of the very law which brought the board into being, they begun the work mapped out for them by their masters.

This power of this board, although semi-judicial in its nature, was limited in extent; they had the power to examine the returns from the different parishes, and it was made their duty to correct and tabulate the votes cast at each poll. To this general and plain rule there were two exceptions, and two only.

First. When the commissioners of elections at a poll certified that "on the day of the election" there had been "any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation or disturbance, bribery or corrupt influences," "at or near" any poll or voting-place, preventing or tending to prevent a fair, free, peaceable, or full vote.

days before the election, certified that any of the causes before recited, at or near the places of registration or revision of registration, prevented or tended to prevent a fair, free, peaceable, and full registration of all the qualified voters of the parish.

The law required the commissioners of election, where such riot, tumult, &c., prevailed on the day of election, to make, in duplicate and under oath, a clear and full statement of all the facts relating thereto, corroborated under oath by three respectable citizens, qualified voters of the parish. One of these duplicates was to be given to the supervisor of registration, and by him was to be sent with his consolidated return to the returning board.

The supervisor of registration was required to make a like statement of riot, tumult, intimidation, &c., verified in like manner by the ment of riot, tumuit, intimidation, &c., verified in like manner by the oaths of three respectable citizens and qualified voters of the parish. The law required the commissioners of election within twenty-four hours after the closing of the polls to make out and deliver duplicate returns of the election; one to the supervisor of registration and one to the clerk of the district court of the parish.

The supervisor of registration was required within twenty-four hours the effect of the parish of the return and to return them to the hours thereafter to consolidate the returns and to return them to the returning board, together with a copy of any statement as to violence, disturbance, &c., or other offenses specified above, all to be securely

The returning board was required to canvass and compile the statement of votes made by the commissioners of election and make returns to the secretary of state. Whenever from any poll or voting place a statement of any supervisor of registration or commissioner of election, made in form and at the time required above, was received, it was made the duty of the board to determine the facts, and if not convinced from the statements filed, before referred to, it was authorized to hear other testimony. If satisfied upon all the testimony that a fair and peaceable election had not been held, it was authorized to cast out the vote at a polling place or of the entire parish, as the facts might warrant.

This brief statement of the duties of the board and the extent of its authority shows that the task it undertook presented extraordinary difficulties. The registrars and commissioners of election had simply counted and tabulated the votes at the polls and of the parishes. They had made no statements or complaints of riot, fraud, intimidation, nade no statements or complaints of riot, fraud, intimidation, violence, or other fact that authorized the board to do more than "canvass and compile" the votes, and they did not make the statements for the very plain reason that the facts did not exist. There was no ground upon which the returning board could base its semi-judicial investigation. The duty of its members was to "canvass and compile" the votes and issue certificates to the successful candidates.

But the veterans who had borne the brunt of the fierce conflicts in 1872 and 1874 were not discouraged by the impediments that stood in the way. Experience had taught them how easily they could be rethe way. Experience had taught them how easily they could be removed, and they announced their readiness to begin the work. Political harlots with their panders flocked in countless numbers to the capital of the State, ready to sell their virtuous oaths for a price. Protests and certificates were manufactured by the score many days after the time when by law they were to be filed. Affidavits were written by hundreds and thousands supporting these false protests and certificates. Jewett, the secretary of the republican committee—the same who gave warning to the registrars that their claims to recognition by the incoming administration depended upon their success in registering colored voters and bringing them to the polls—swears that he himself wrote three of these certificates. Other pens were busy and other brains were fertile. A vast pile of such stuff was heaped before the board. Its members worked with gleeful spirit, for the base work was well suited to their tastes and its results promised great rewards-nor have they been disappointed in their reckoning. When their labors were ended it was found they had more than met the expectations of their employers. The verdict of the people was set aside. Packard, who had been beaten eight thousand votes, was declared to be governor-elect. Candidates for the senate and house of representatives who had been rejected by large majorities were announced as successful.

Three senators and ten representatives discarded at the polls were granted certificates. Hamlett and Blunt and Weber were returned as senators. Barringham and Brewster from Ouachita; Sheldon and Blair from Morehouse; Holt, Bird, and Lane, from West Baton Ronge; Johnson from De Soto; and Early and Swazie from West Feliciana, were returned as representatives, although all were beaten. Certificates of election were given them, and on the 1st of January, 1877, when by the constitution the Legislature was to assemble, these men appeared, claimed, and were admitted to seats.

Thirty-six senators and one hundred and twenty representatives compose the Legislature of the State, and by the constitution a quorum necessary for organization or the transaction of business consists of a majority in each body. In the Packard senate sixteen duly elected senators were present, and fifty-eight duly elected representatives. To those numbers were added the three senators and ten representatives created by the act of the returning board; in each house an organization was effected, and Governor Kellogg was notified of the fact. On the day fixed by the act of Congress they began to vote for Senator to represent the State in the Senate. Two of the State senators had deserted them, but a sufficient number of representatives went into the joint convention to make a majority of the whole number of both bodies. Mr. Kellogg was thus chosen, and this is the foundation of his claim to a seat here.

Mr. President, I have endeavored to state with brevity the facts connected with the canvass in 1876 and its result; the action of the returning board and the manner of organizing what is known as the Packard legislature. The facts cannot be disputed. They are the Packard legislature. The facts cannot be disputed. They are beyond controversy. I invite Senators who uphold the pretensions of Mr. Kellogg to examine the facts and point out wherein they are misstated.

misstated.

But, sir, they will not undertake to meet the facts or to discuss this matter upon its merits. They will endeavor to-day, as they have done in the past, to shelter this pretender to a seat in the Senate under the protecting edict of a returning board. They will claim, as was done on another memorable occasion, that nothing "aliunde" the record shall be heard, and ask the benefit of the plea res adjudicata. Argument upon the facts and plain expositions of constitutional law are answered by warnings to Senators from a particular section that they are upon trial before the American people, who will judge of the sincerity of their vows of fidelity to the Constitution by the alacrity with which they yield the right of thought and prove themselves with which they yield the right of thought and prove themselves false to duty, to manhood, and to our common country; for the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which disdained to state a fact or otherwise to justify its action, has declared—

That the men whose professions of returning loyalty to the Constitution have been trusted by the generous confidence of the American people, are now to give evidence of the sincerity of their vows. The people will thoroughly understand this matter and will not be likely to be deceived again.

Sir, we want the American people to understand this matter. believe that the people are superior to this sectional clamor, and will believe that the people are superior to this sectional clamor, and will demand that the constitutional rights of one of the States of this Union shall be vindicated and her wrongs redressed.

Let us come back to the point before us. Upon the facts stated, and they cannot be disputed, is Mr. Kelloge entitled to the great position he claims? As I have said before, the determination of this question involves the inquiry whether the body of men that elected him was the Legislature of the State of Louisiana? If it was not the Legislature, then under the Constitution he has no status here, for it is expressly declared that Senators in Congress shall be chosen by the Legislatures of the States.

Now, if the body that sent him here had been the only body claiming to act as the Legislature of the State; if its authority and power ing to act as the Legislature of the State; if its authority and power had been recognized by the other departments of the State governnad been recognized by the other departments of the State government, and if it had made laws that were recognized and binding upon all the people of the State, I would not question, but would affirm the validity of the act; for in such case the State through her departments having settled its legislative authority, "everybody else" is thereby concluded. Nor would it be permissible to institute an inquiry into the methods of its organization or the composition of the body. The decisions of the Legislature itself more every matter.

the body. The decisions of the Legislature itself upon every matter of that kind would be conclusive and binding on all the world.

But the case supposed is not presented. The Packard legislature did not have undisputed possession of the field of legislation. What is known as the Nichol's legislature claimed that it was the lawful Legislature. In that body undoubtedly appeared fifteen senators and forty-four representatives certified to have been elected by the returning board. They were joined by other persons who were in fact elected by the people, but rejected by the returning board. This body, or rather a senate and house of representatives, was organized. After its organization its strength was increased by the voluntary submission of the Packard legislature, all of whose members, duly elected, joined it. And Mr. Spofford was chosen, all the duly elected members of both bodies joining in making the choice. Now, which was the true Legislature of the State?

This question is not of the first impression. It was once before presented to the Senate in the contest between Spencer and Sykes, each of whom claimed to have been chosen to be Senator by the Legislature of Alabama. The question was referred to a committee and that committee made a report, from which it appears that two bodies claimed to be the Legislature of the State. One of them had a quorum of members certified to have been elected by the returning boards. The other body had a quorum composed in part of members certified by the returning boards and in part of persons actually elected by the people, but whose election was denied by the returning board. The case and the question in these particulars were identical with the one now under consideration. The facts and the conclusions of the committee were stated in a report prepared by Mr. CARPENTER, then as now a Senator from Wisconsin, in a manner so clear as not to admit of being misunderstood. I ask the Secretary to read the passage I have marked from that report, beginning on page 6.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

When we consider that all the forms prescribed by law for canvassing and certifying an election, and for the organization of the two Houses, are designed to secure to the persons actually elected the right to act in the offices to which in fact they have been elected, it would be sacrificing the end to the means were the Senate to adhere to the mere form, and thus defeat the end which the forms were insecure to the persons actually elected the right to act in the offices to which in fact they have been elected, it would be secrificing the end to the means were the Senate to adhere to the mere form, and thus defeat the end which the forms were intended to secure.

The persons in the two bodies claiming to be the senate and house of representatives who voted for Spencer constituted a quorum of both houses of the members actually elected; the persons in the State-house legislature who voted for Sykes did not constitute a quorum of the two houses duly elected, but a quorum of persons certified to have been elected to the two houses. Were the Senate to hold Sykes's election to be valid, it would follow that erroneous certificates, delivered to men conceded not to be elected, had enabled persons who in fact ought not to vote for a Senator to elect a Senator to misrepresent the State for six years. On the other hand, if we treat the court-house legislature as the legal Legislature of the State, it is conceded that we give effect to the will of the people as evidenced by the election. So that, to state the proposition in other words, we are called upon to choose between the form and the substance, the fiction and the fact; and, considering the importance of the election of a Senator in the opinion of your committee the Senate would not be justified in overriding the will of the people, as expressed at the ballot-box, out of deference to certificates issued erroneously to persons who were not elected.

In the opinion of your committee it is not competent for the Senate to inquire as to the right of individual members to sit in a legislature which is conceded to have a quorum in both houses of legally elected members. But, undoubtedly, the Senate must always inquire whether the body which pretended to elect a Senator was the Legislature of a State or not; because a Senator can only be elected by the Legislature of a State or not; because a Senator can only be elected by the Legislature of a State or not; because a Sen

Mr. BAILEY. The republican majority of the Senate adopted the reasoning and conclusions of the committee, and, rejecting Sykes, who had been chosen by the Legislature assembled and organized under certificates from the returning boards, admitted to the seat Mr. Spencer, who was chosen by the Legislature that the committee claimed was actually elected. Now, in what respect does that case differ from the one under consideration? I affirm, and I make the affirmation with all earnestness and sincerity, challenging contradiction from any part of this Chamber, from Senators of all parties and from every section, that the only difference is that Spencer was a republican, while Spofford is a democrat. publican, while Spofford is a democrat.

The case of Spencer is directly in point. No appeals to passion or prejudice or sectional feeling, no effort to revive the memories of our unhappy divisions, nor the threatened denunciation of those who "are now to give evidence of the sincerity of their vows," can change the facts. The precedent exists. The argument of the committee in the Spencer case, as the argument in this case, is conclusive. Its principles are to be found in the American idea for the committee in the spencer case, as the argument in this case, is conclusive. ples are to be found in the American idea of government; in the recognition of the fact that inspectors and canvassers of ballots, returnognition of the fact that inspectors and canvassers of ballots, returning boards, tabulated statements, certificates, and all the machinery of elections are intended to protect the ballot, to uphold and maintain the recorded will of the people. The verdict of the people thus declared is to be respected in every portion of our great country, in Louisiana as in Maine, in Florida as in Oregon.

The law of majorities is the one general and universal law of these American States. It commands obedience from all alike, from the Senate as from the people. Upon its recognition depends not only the purity of elections but the perpetuity of our institutions. With the spread of democratic ideas it is fast becoming the law of all civilized peoples. It will not be confined to any time, to any country or ized peoples. It will not be confined to any time, to any country or any race. It will reach to the remotest regions where free government shall be found. And men now living may see realized the prophetic aspiration of the Roman orator and sage:

Nec erit alia lex Roma, alia Athenis; alia nunc et alia posthac. Sed et omnes gentes, et omni tempore, una lex, et sempiterna et universalis, pravalebit.

Mr. CONKLING. Would it be agreeable to the Senator from Tennessee before he leaves this subject to indulge me in two inquiries relating to points which he has touched in his address, my object being to except in if Lean his view of the law in those two regards? ing to ascertain, if I can, his view of the law in those two regards? Mr. BAILEY. I am somewhat fatigued. I have no objection to the Senator stating his points or seeking for information; but I am too well aware, as is the Senate, that the Senator from New York will never seek for information from the Senator from Tennessee. I shall listen to him with pleasure, and reply if I think proper.

Mr. CONKLING. Well, Mr. President, after hearing some of the Mr. CONKLING. Well, Mr. President, after hearing some of the propositions which the Senator from Tennessee has laid down, in which I am bound to suppose he believes, I ought not to be surprised that his credulity or his capacity for belief is so great that he really holds the impression he has stated that the Senator from New York would not in good faith or seriousness seek light from him. I will content myself with assuring him that he is quite mistaken, and I will not press upon the Senator any inquiry which he is unwilling to

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I do not at this time intend to do more than refer to a matter upon which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BAILEY] has dwelt with some explicitness. I desire to call [Mr. Bailey] has dwelt with some explicitness. I desire to call specific attention to it, to the end that other Senators who follow the Senator and who share his views may address themselves to the proposition if they see fit. It is a matter of fact that I think will not be disputed that the Nicholls legislature had not at the time it organized in January, 1877, a quorum of members in the lower house who were elected upon the face of the returns, and even by the showing of the democratic party itself, nor during the whole term of sixty days—the constitutional session of the Legislature. By the laws of the State then in force one hundred and twenty members comprised the State then in force one hundred and twenty members comprised the lower house. It was admitted that the republicans had chosen sixty of that number. After the MacVeagh commission went to New Orleans, and when the returning-board members went over to the Nicholls legislature, fifty-seven members of the Packard legislature were admitted; they excluded, however, three republican members chosen from the seventh ward of New Orleans, who were admitted to have been elected by the democratic canvassing committee of the State, and who were elected really upon the face of the returns. The only way the Nicholls legislature got a quorum finally, after the MacVeagh commission went there, was to exclude those three men from the seventh ward, who, as I have said, were long after the election admitted to have been elected.

Moreover, the extra session, the session called after the MacVeagh commission went to New Orleans, I think, at no time had a quorum in their house without counting the three members from the seventh ward.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator prefers not to go on, I should like to ask the Senate to take up an important bill, which ought to have been passed some time since, and which I think will occupy but a very few moments. If he prefers to go on now, of course I shall not interpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Nebraka, [Mr. PADDOCK?]

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1336) for the establishment of a land office in the Territory of Montana.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. F. KING, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 291) authorizing tents to be loaned to the governor of Missouri for the use of sufferers by the recent tornado in that State; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in some and non-concurred in other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.

R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, and had concurred in the first amendment of the Senate, with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Military Affairs.

Mr. TELLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1670) to authorize the Wyoming, Montana, and Pacific Railroad Company to build its road across the Fort Russell military reservation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

HERMAN NETTERFIELD.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, the hour of adjournment has not with Kirk Wood. Mr. Frestdent, the nour of adjournment has not yet been reached, and there is a bill upon the Calendar that I should like to have disposed of, which has been before the Senate and partially considered at one time, and I think will not consume any length of time. It is Senate bill No. 35.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa asks the Senate to consider at this time the bill (S. No. 35) granting a pension to Herman Natural States.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS,] whom I do not see in his seat, is against this bill. This is a contested case, and I think it should be considered when he is here.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The only contest there ever was about it was the contest of the principle involved, which was settled in the Phares case. As to the facts, there was no controversy at all; and the same considerations which carried the Phares bill must necessarily carry this unless Senators are dissatisfied with their votes on that case The case has been partially heard, and the bill ought to be disposed of. I ask that it be taken up.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 35) granting a pension to Herman Netterfield.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report submitted by Mr. Kirkwood, from the Committee on Pensions, January 12, 1880, and heretofore published in the RECORD.

Mr. INGALLS. What rate of pension does the bill give? Let the bill be again reported.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. WITHERS. I have simply to remark in connection with the bill under consideration that I have no further opposition to offer to it. This case runs on all fours with the one the Senate passed after a very full discussion a few days ago.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I move to amend the bill as the bill for Phares was amended. I think the language used was giving him the pension of an enlisted man.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment will be made.

Mr. INGALLS. That is not doing this man justice. An enlisted man receives pay at the rate of $16 a month, and in case of disability he draws a pension of $8 a month, which is equivalent to one-half his pay. The beneficiary of this bill was employed at $60 a month, and of course must have rendered more valuable and efficient service, and in case of disability ought to receive an increased rate of pension.

and in case of disability ought to receive an increased rate of pension. The Senate understands of course that I was opposed to the principle recognized by this bill and the bill that passed the other day; but the Senate have a right to do as they please about it, and I recognize what has been accomplished in this direction; but certainly those who favor this class of pensions ought to be logical and give Netterfield and Phares the rate to which they would be entitled in accordance with the service they rendered. It is a burlesque to declare that this man who received $60 a month shall be put on the pension soll as an enlisted private. He was not an enlisted private, and he did not render any service equivalent to that of an enlisted private. not render any service equivalent to that of an enlisted private. If his compensation is any guide of the measure of his capacity and of the service he rendered, he did much more for the country than an enlisted private. And when he was disabled, as I have no doubt he was, according to the report in this case, his pension ought to be equivalent to the rank that his compensation would entitle him to in the service. Of course, not having charge of the bill, I am not prepared to offer any amendment; but in accordance with the principles of the pension law he ought not to have less than $30 a month; and I think the rate should be fixed in the bill, and not make it illogical and absurd by saying that he shall be paid a pension as an enlisted

Mr. McMILLAN. I had the honor of introducing the bill. Although the Senator from Kansas was opposed to allowing this pension, I think I may say to the Senator that the disabled soldier in this case will be content with being enrolled upon the pension-roll as a private soldier. He was not an officer of the United States Army; he was in the ranks; and in a charge upon the enemy, a charge in the night-time, he was disabled; so that I think he may well be enrolled as a pensioner as a private soldier.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to pension this man as an enlisted man.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM GAINES.

Mr. COCKRELL. Some time ago the bill (H. R. No. 2902) to place william Gaines, late ordnance-sergeant United States Army, on the retired list, which had been reported favorably by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, was called up. Remembering that there had been a general bill on the subject reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and supposing that this case would come within the limitations and terms of that bill, I objected to its consideration at that time. On a subsequent examination, I find that the eration at that time. On a subsequent examination I find that the general bill will not provide for this particular case, and I desire simply to withdraw my objection, as I had it postponed; and I ask that the bill be taken up and considered now without committing myself to support it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 3, after the word "that," to insert "the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to place," and in line 5, after the word "Army," to strike out "be, and he is hereby, placed;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to place William Gaines, late ordnance-sergeant United States Army, on the retired list of the Army, with the full pay and allowances of an ordnance sergeant for and during his natural life, he having served faithfully and honorably in the Army of the United States for more than fifty-one years, having been an ordnance-sergeant for over thirty-three consecutive years of said service, and having participated in the siege of Fort Meigs, the defense of Fort Stephenson, and the battle of the Thames in the war of 1812.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Has the report been read?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report was read on a former occa-

Mr. WITHERS. I merely wish to ask whether that is not a case of putting upon the retired list a non-commissioned officer, and whether there is not a bill on the Calendar to provide by general law the authority for placing all meritorious cases of that class upon the retired list, and in that connection, therefore, whether it would not be better to act on the general bill rather than select a special case? I ask the Senator having the bill in charge the question.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. RANDOLPH] who is not in his seat reported the bill, and I have called it up stating the reasons why I had thought it was not embraced in the terms of the bill reported by the Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY.] This man is now in his seventy-ninth or eightieth year, and as he is not in the Army he would not come within the provisions of the general bill, his term of service having already expired. The general bill cannot provide for the cases of those who have passed out of the Army prior to its passage.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask, however, if it is not by virtue of his service in the Army that it is proposed to put him upon the retired list?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. WITHERS. I do not see upon what other ground you can propose to put a man upon the retired list of the Army except by virtue of military service, and therefore it is essentially a case that comes among those designed to be provided for by the general bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. It does seem to me that the Senator from Virginia fails to see the whole point.

Mr. WITHERS. Possibly.

Mr. COCKRELL. A man who goes into the Army as an ordnance-Mr. COCKRELL. A man who goes into the Army as an ordinance-sergeant, as a sergeant, or in any other capacity as a non-commis-sioned officer, only enlists for a specific term of five years. Each en-listment of this man was for five years. This man served fifty-one years in the Army. He enlisted ten different times. The term of his last enlistment has expired. The general bill which has been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs only applies to those who are in the Army, and who go out of it hereafter, and cannot apply to this man. He cannot be reached by that bill, and this is simply a special bill placing him where he would be if he were now enlisted in the Army, and his fifty years of service were about to expire.

Mr. WITHERS. Is there any law on the statute-book which authorizes the placing upon the retired list of non-commissioned officers?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly not; there is no question of that in the world. There is no authority under the statutes now to place a non-commissioned officer or an ordnance-sergeant upon the retired list, or to place any one there except commissioned officers.

Mr. WITHERS. Is there any case which has been acted upon by special enactment the effect of which has been to place on the retired list non-commissioned officers? Mr. COCKRELL. This is the first one that I have heard of, the first one that I have had any intimation of. The Senator from Virginia must understand that I am not advocating the principle of the bill; that is a question for the Senate to determine; but I objected to its consideration, and had it passed over until I could make an examination, and I thought that in justice to myself I should bring it before the Senate the Senat before the Senate, the report having been read, and have the Senate act upon it. I propose to move an amendment to the bill before it passes to give this person 75 per cent. of his regular pay, the same percentage as commissioned officers of the Army get.

Mr. WITHERS. I understand that this is establishing a precedent which will pave the way, if not designed to do so—and I presume it is the object to do so—by which provision may be made hereafter for pensioning private soldiers for long service who are not disabled to an extent or in a manner which will authorize the payment of a pension to such soldiers. If the Senate is willing to establish a precedent of that kind, then it ought to pass the general bill which is now on the Calendar, which is to provide by law that this may be done systematically and be made applicable to all persons of equal merit and of earnel service.

and of equal service. Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to offer an amendment of which I gave notice, to insert in line 6, after "with," the words "75 per cent. of;" so as to read:

With 75 per cent. of the full pay and allowances of an ordnance-sergeant for and during his natural life.

All the commissioned officers of the Army who are retired draw 75 per cent. of their regular pay and allowances, and all officers of the Navy and also all officers of the Marine Corps who are placed upon the retired list draw the same rate; and if this list is to be created, I think that it would be only fair that they should have 75 per cent. of the pay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RETIRED LIST OF NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1331) to authorize a retired list of non-commissioned the bill (S. No. 1331) to authorize a retired list of non-commissioned officers of the United States Army who have served therein continuously, honorably, and faithfully for a period of thirty years or upward. It is the bill at the head of the list of cases to be considered, and is therefore the regular order on the Calendar.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, the pending question being on the amendment reported by Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, which was in section 1, line 3, after the word "thirty," to strike out "consecutive," and in section 2, line 2, after the word "thirty-five," to strike out "consecutive; "so as to make the bill read:

Be it exacted the That when a religited man has several as such thirty were in

Be it enacted, &c., That when an enlisted man has served as such thirty years in the United States Army, honorably and faithfully, and the last fifteen years thereof as a non-commissioned officer, he shall, if he makes application therefor to the President, be retired from active service, and placed on the retired list hereby created, with the non-commissioned rank held by him at the date of retirement.

SEC. 2. When an enlisted man has served as such thirty-five years in the United States Army, honorably and faithfully, and the last fifteen years thereof as a non-commissioned officer, he may be retired from active service at the discretion of the President, with the non-commissioned anak held by him at the date of retirement.

SEC. 3. Non-commissioned officers retired from active service shall receive 75 per cent of the pay and allowances of the non-commissioned rank upon which they are retired.

Mr. MAXEY. At a former sitting of the Senate this bill was read and also the report of the committee and the amendments offered by the direction of the Committee on Military Affairs and the letter of the Adjutant-General showing that there were forty-two persons only who would be benefited by the bill as reported to the Senate, and the letter of Colonel Davis, one of the inspectors-general of the Army, giving his opinion as to the merits of the bill. Some discussion was also had upon the bill at the sitting referred to. The argument of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Saulsbury] which was simply elaborated by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Beck] in my judgment does not reach this case. Their argument was in effect in opposition to a retired list at all for either commissioned or non-commissioned officers. The precise argument used by them would apply with full force and effect against a retired list for commissioned officers the same as non-commissioned officers; but it is entirely clear that logically if the retired list for commissioned officers is permitted to remain upon the statute-book there ought to be according to all principles of equity a corresponding retired list for meritorious non-commissioned officers, who having become worn out in the military service, are incapacitated from want of training in civil pursuits and approaching old age from earning a livlihood.

That is the whole theory of the bill as presented by the Committee on Military Affairs, giving to the non-commissioned officers, on being retired after long and faithful service, neither more nor less than three-fourths of the pay and allowances they would have received as non-commissioned officers in active service, just as is now the case for commissioned officers. If there is equity in one there is equity in the other. Their argument therefore would have been applicable against the original creation of a retired list for commissioned officers, and would be applicable to a bill to repeal that law. That lawhas been upon the statute-book nineteen years; nobody proposes to repeal it, and therefore to make the principle harmonize all the way through this bill logically follows that enactment.

In support of the arguments which I have heretofore presented, I desire to lay before the Senate and ask the Clerk to read a letter from Major Joseph P. Farley, Ordnance Corps, a very intelligent commissioned officer of the Army of long standing.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, April 12, 1880. My Dear Sir: My attention has been directed to the letter of Inspect. General Davis, relative to your bill for the retirement of old and worn-out non-commissioned Permit me to state, in this connection, that the two old soldiers whose Permit me to state, in this connection, that the two old soldiers whose cases are cited by the General, are at present serving under my command, and that their terms of service expire, the one, July 18, 1880, and the other May, 1881, respectively. These very worthy old non-commissioned officers have been pronounced by the post-surgeon entirely unfit for the performance of any military duty, and therefore cannot be re-emlisted, however much may be the desire that they "die in harness." Had there been a provision of law whereby these men could have been retired, even on full pay, within the past ten years, the interests of the Government would have been better and more economically served.

This will be understood by those who know and appreciate the relations between the private soldier and son-commissioned officer, where the motive for the continuation of men in the latter grade is simply that of justice to the individual.

I am, sir, yours very respectfully,

JOSEPH P. FARLEY,

JOSEPH P. FARLEY, Major Ordnance, United States Army.

Hon. S. B. MAXEY, United States Senate.

Mr. MAXEY. Since this bill was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, one of the forty-two, Sergeant Walker, stationed in Maine, has died, leaving but forty-one who would be benefited by the bill. To show further, and in addition to the testimony adduced, that the deliberate judgment of men who have studied this question favors this bill, I ask that the editorial which I send up, from The United Service, an ably conducted periodical devoted to Army and Navy matters, be read by the Clerk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows, from the May number, present year of The United Service:

year, of The United Service:

year, of The United Service:

It is to be hoped that the bill now before Congress authorizing "a retired list of non-commissioned officers of the United States Army who have served therein continuously, honorably, and faithfully for thirty years or upward" may soon become a law. The importance of this class in the service has never been fully recognized in the laws relating to them, and the bill above referred to is but a tardy acknowledgment of a debt of justice, the payment of which has been too long withheld. It has been repeatedly decided, both at home and abroad, that the discipline and efficiency of an Army depend largely upon its non-commissioned officers. To obtain those of the highest character and ability, it is advisable and necessary to offer every inducement to men possessing such qualities to enter the service, and to remain in it after entering. Liberal pay and proper consideration for their rank should be given to them while in the service, and will do much toward accomplishing the desired end; but an official rank, with an assured pension for their old age, after having given the best years of their life to their country, and when they are unfitted for engaging in ordinary business occupations, will do much more toward reconciling them to remaining in it for life. The wisdom and justice of the proposed measure are too evident to all thinking minds to render discussion of it necessary.

Mr. MAXEY. I have laid the deliberate views of the Committee on Military Affairs before the Senate. I have shown by the letter of the Adjutant-General that there would be but forty-two as the bill the Adjutant-General that there would be but forty-two as the bill was originally introduced benefited, and that one of those forty-two, since the bill was reported, has died, leaving but forty-one; that the amendment passed by the committee to strike out the word "consecutively," will, as I believe, but slightly increase the number; that it is a bill based upon the equitable principle, that if those who have become worn out in the service holding commissions are entitled to be retired upon three-fourths of their pay, in like manner non-commissioned officers who have for thirty years been honorable, faithful, and true in the service of the country and who have in like manner and true in the service of the country and who have in like manner become worn out should in like manner be provided for in their old age. I have shown that this measure is approved by men who are wholly disinterested, who are intelligent in respect to the subject-matter before the Senate, who have by long experience become acquainted with the wants and necessities of the service, who appreciate the fact that this bill would be exactly in the direction of efficiency in the Army, and therefore wise economy. I have taken the best witnesses known to the law, that is to say, witnesses intelligent upon the subject in hand, credible and disinterested, and have given their testimony. Having shown this, I can say no more than I have already said, believing as the committee believe that the bill is wise, and that it ought to be passed.

Mr. INGALLS. Did I understand the Senator to say that this bill would provide for but forty-one persons?

Mr. MAXEY. That is exactly what I said, and I will refer the Senator to the letter of the Adjutant-General.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator mean to be understood as saying that if the bill passes only forty-one persons will be added to the retired list?

Mr. MAXEY. I mean to say precisely this: that if the Adjutant-General of the United States Army, E. D. Townsend, is credible—and his letter is now in the sight of the Senator from Kansas—he says precisely that thing in respect to the bill as originally reported.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill is not to be a continuing bill, then, to affect those who reach the period of thirty years' service hereafter?

Mr. MAXEY. Yes; it is designed to be continuing, and this design is clearly shown on the face of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Then the statement of the Senator from Towns in

Mr. INGALLS. Then the statement of the Senator from Texas is liable to misconstruction. If this measure were to place upon the retired list only forty men who had become worn-out and helpless in the service of the country it would be one thing; but if this is a provision for permanently adding to the retired list such men as may hereafter at all times reach the period of thirty years' continuous service it is entirely a different thing.

Mr. MAXEY. I take it that the past is a good criterion for the future; that as there were but forty-two men of this class in the United States Army a few day ago, and but forty-one now, who had served thirty years continuously, and the last fifteen thereof as non-commissioned officers, that death, which has already carried one of those off, will in like manner carry others off, and the list probably will not be increased beyond that number in all time to come at any will not be increased beyond that number in all time to come at any one time. That it is to continue is just as true, and no more so, than of the retired list for commissioned officers. It stands precisely upon the same footing. It is designed to apply to a certain class of non-commissioned officers. Of that class there are now but forty-one, and the same principle which applies to those forty-one will apply to others as time rolls by and the same conditions reach others as to age and service, just as the retired list as to commissioned officers is continuing in operation.

Mr. INGALLS. Can the Senator advise the Senate what the present retired list of the Army is, and how much the expense is upon the revenues of the country for that purpose?

Mr. MAXEY. I am not prepared to state the number. The original number was three hundred, which has since been authorized to be increased.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Four hundred.
Mr. INGALLS. I saw in the Army bill that passed a few days ago provision for four hundred retired officers.
Mr. MAXEY. The law as originally passed was for three hundred, but by subsequent amendments the number has been authorized to be increased, the exact extent I did not remember, but the Schalier. from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] states it four hundred, which is doubtless correct, and if we can provide for four hundred commissioned officers on large pay, surely we might provide for forty-one non-commissioned officers on far less pay.

Mr. INGALLS. Can the Senator state the amount that is paid for the retired Army list.

the retired Army list.

Mr. MAXEY. I cannot; but I will say this in regard to the expense: If General Sherman, with a pay of some thirteen or fourteen thousand dollars, were retired, he would get 75 per cent. of that; and so at the same ratio of their pay would other commissioned officers, and the non-commissioned officers are under this bill to get the same percentage. A sergeant-major gets $23 a month in active service, and so on down, as will be seen by section 1280, Revised Statutes. There is, as you will see by subsequent sections, 1281 to 1284, inclusive, a small amount added for additional service, &c. In like manner you will see by sections 1285 and 1286 that privates who have certificates of merit of distinguished honor get $2 a month additional; but the highest pay proper of non-commissioned officers is $23 a month. Sergeants of engineers get larger pay, of course, because they are experts anglest pay proper of non-commissioned omcets is $25 a month. Sergeants of engineers get larger pay, of course, because they are experts attached to a scientific corps. They get $36 a month, but the highest of the others get $23 a month, next $22, next $17, and then corporals $15 a month. That may be increased somewhat as stated by virtue of sections 1281 and 1282, and the pay of enlisted men by virtue of sections 1283 and 1284.

Mr. INGALLS. I think the country will be interested in knowing

Mr. INGALLS. I think the country will be interested in knowing the expenditure at the present time on account of the retired list of the Army and Navy, and I regret that the Senator from Texas is not able to inform the Senate upon that point.

With reference to the bill now before the Senate it is in plain terms a proposition to add to the pension list of the country.

a proposition to add to the pension list of the country. It is that, and nothing else.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator to allow me to go on.

Mr. INGALLS. I beg pardon. I thought the Senator was done.

Mr. MAXEY. No. I will state that if the law, which neither the Senator from Kansas nor anybody else has proposed to repeal, which keeps the commissioned officers, with their large pay, on the retired list remains on the statute-book in full force, then, in all equity and good conscience, I ask if these poor men who have to work with the musket in their hands and drawing but $23 a month, the highest of them, ought not to be entitled to retirement? In other words, has it come to this that the Congress of the United States makes a distinction between those who wear the epaulettes and those who wear the more humble garb of the non-commissioned officer or the private the more humble garb of the non-commissioned officer or the private soldier? If it is right to give retirement to one it is right to give it to the other, and the question of right has nothing to do with the question of what it is going to cost. Strike all out or put them all on a footing. That is the principle. I have not made inquiry, I will say to the Senator from Kansas, as to the cost of the present retired list of commissioned officers. That would be a pertinent inquiry on a bill to repeal the law, but so long as that law remains untouched the cost of that list has nothing to do with this.

The question has been asked whether this ought not to apply to private soldiers as well, so that there should be no distinction. The

The question has been asked whether this ought not to apply to private soldiers as well, so that there should be no distinction. The law at present makes a distinction among privates by reason of special merit. A private soldier who has received from the President a certificate of merit for distinguished services receives additional pay at the rate of $2 per month, and if granted to a soldier of the Mexican war, he need not have served continuously. If he served in the Mexican war it is not necessary, as I have stated, that his service shall have been continuous. So the law now makes a distinction in favor of those who have proved themselves to be meritarious, and favor of those who have proved themselves to be meritorious, and the theory of this bill is to hold out encouragement to a spirit of emulation and secure the best material for the Army, and thus the best non-commissioned officers that can be had, because everybody who has experience in an army knows that the more efficient your non-commissioned officers are the more efficient your army is, and if that be true it is a measure in the interest of wise economy.

With these views I present the question to the Senate.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the other morning when this bill was up I took occasion to make some objections to it. I do not intend to go over them again in extenso; but the meaning of all this is that we are to extend the retired list or the pension list of the United States so as to include every man who sees fit to enter the Army at eighteen and remain till he is forty-eight years of age, no matter how able-bodied he may be, because all can be pensioned for the balance of their days after they are forty-eight years of age, if they enter the Army at the age of eighteen, as most of the young fellows who are picked up for the Army as private soldiers do, under circumstances frequently not very creditable to them. They have the right to retire at the end of every five years if they see war or see trouble ahead. They are not like a commissioned officer, who is bound to remain, because he is pledged to the country to remain in the service, and he cannot retire without dishonor and disgrace. But at the end of each five years any without dishonor and disgrace. But at the end of each five years any one of these men can retire, and if there is a likelihood of war or trouble or disagreeable service, many of them will retire. If they are likely to be stationed at Washington or Fortress Monroe or some nice place, they will re-enlist. Whether wounded or not, whether they have ever heard a gun fired in anger, the moment they have served thirty years and are forty-eight years of age (ten years younger than I am and a few years younger than my friend from Vermont) they can retire with a pension for the rest of their days under this bill

Mr. EDMUNDS. But if my friend from Kentucky, who so kindly brings me into notice in connection with this bill, will remember the proposed bill as it stands requires thirty consecutive years of service. It is true I think that the Senator from Texas, or the committee, proposed to strike out the word "consecutive;" but if the word "consecutive;"

proposed to strike out the word "consecutive;" but if the word "consecutive" were in, then the suggestion of a soldier skipping in time of trouble and again enlisting in time of peace would not apply.

Mr. BECK. I suppose the Senator from Vermont very well understands, as I do, that after the immense military prowess displayed by this country on both sides fifteen years ago, there is very little probability of any American soldier having to fight again on dry land unless it be with a few Indians. The nations of the world are not going to fight us any more, and this is not a bill to provide for those who fought in the Mexican war or the late war or in any one war, but it is to provide for the future and to make provision to encourage men is to provide for the future, and to make provision to encourage men to stay in the Army and to pension them when they get forty-eight years of age; and if it extends to non-commissioned officers of course it will have to go to the private, for the same argument applies all around. Then it has to go to the Navy, and the Navy perhaps may have trouble hereafter with the iron-clads of the great nations of the earth, and we may have to fight them somewhere on the high seas. I concede that there may possibly be trouble there, but on land I do not see any prospect of it.

If this bill passes you will soon have to extend it to all the civil employes, men who have gone through the temptations of the civil service and have been in custom-houses or worn out in the Departments here as a matter of choice, but could have left at any moment they chose. They have all got to be pensioned. Already the country has extended its pension laws to an extent that it has become a very serious question where the money is to come from. We have certainly exhausted our power of receiving it from whisky, tobacco, banks, proprietary stamps, and other things now subject to internal tax, and there is great indisposition to put it on incomes; but taxation necessarily has to follow appropriations. Now, you are providing a system, a new system, an extended system. The ways and means must be furnished. I have always thought it would be a good idea whenever you begin a new system of appropriations to begin a new system of ways and means. Then attention would be called to it sharply, to how it is to be obtained, to where the money is to come from. ments here as a matter of choice, but could have left at any moment from

It is plausible to say these are meritorious men. They may or may not be. They may regard a soldier's life—and in future I hope it will be—the laziest, the easiest, and the safest of all the lives that a man can lead. You pension a soldier at forty-eight years of age for doing nothing, simply because he has seen fit to stay there instead of going to other work. This little Army of ours is twenty-five thousand men for fifty million people, and perhaps it will be reduced to fifteen thousand or ten thousand hereafter, after some of these Indian troubles are settled. To provide a pension list for its men after thirty report exercise does not seem to me to be a good thing to do.

thirty years' service does not seem to me to be a good thing to do.

I merely rose to say that I hope the yeas and navs will be called, for I desire to record my vote against this bill and against the sysfor I desire to record my vote against this bill and against the system. However little it may appear now, it is the beginning of a system that no man can see the end of. That is the objection.

Mr. President, I sympathize with the object of this bill and I sympathize to a degree with the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky, but I am not so sure as he feels about the future necessity for an army. I do not quite agree with him either as to the laziness and easiness of a soldier's life, although I cannot speak from much experience as I only served, I believe for three days, when the Confederate States invaded Vermont from Canada at one time during "the late unpleasantness."

Mr. BECK. What side were you on? [Langhter.]

Mr. BECK. What side were you on? [Laughter.] Mr. EDMUNDS. I was not on the side of the confederates any more than I am now. [Laughter.]
Mr. MORGAN. Was the Senator from Vermont a brigadier-gen-

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, Mr. President, the brigadiers are all on the other side of the Chamber. [Laughter.]
But the life of the soldier has not been easy at any time in the history of this country. Troubles have arisen, external and internal. The internal ones we have not all forgotten on all sides; they are not exclusively composed of the greatest one of them all; there have been "whisky insurrections" and "Shays's rebellions;" there have been cases of domestic violence in a great number of the States that did not go into the rebellion, where soldiers have been necessary to carry out the provisions of the Constitution, and there they have been exposed to peril. All this is likely to happen in the future until the millennium comes, and then I suppose we can repeal the Army establishment, or at any rate get rid of it by refusing appropriations to support it in case it is not repealed, or in some other constitutional way which our friends on the other side know, or as the Senator from New York says we can repeal all of it except the provision about hav-

New York says we can repeal all of it except the provision about having troops at the polls, and so on.

And then in respect to our foreign affairs, I think the Senator from Kentucky is a little too hopeful. We have powerful neighbors on all of our northern boundary. We have at this very moment difficulties and complications with the great power that controls that territory, and according to the dispatches in to-day's papers it would seem that that government had refused, if the dispatches are true, to do the justice that the United States think they have the right to insist upon. Of course I am not proposing to alarm anybody; but I believe something in the European policy that it is a wise economy in a strong nation to be ready to defend its rights at a moment's notice, and the day may come when it may be necessary to exert the power that we have to defend our rights in that direction. I hope it never will come. The day may come when it will be necessary to defend our national rights and interests in our southern borders and in the islands that occupy the sea there. It may be necessary to do a great many things as long as we are a nation, that require the exertion of force. It will therefore be necessary for a long time to come, certainly long enough to enable us to abolish this provision, to have an Army, and to have an Army that shall be as efficient as the Senator from Texas describes it as it ought to be, as efficient as it is possible for wise legislation to make it—to make the mission of the soldier one of the orderly means of Government, and if he has worn out his life in that mission by consecutive and faithful service, to take care of him when he is through. It seems so to me. Therefore I sympathize with the proposition of the Senator from Texas. I think it ought to include the privates and I rather think at this moment that it ought to be a consecutive service, to guard against the suggestion that the Senator from Kentucky has so forcibly made. I shall vote for an amendment that will include the privates when the matter can be put into a proper shape, but at this present time I doubt if it can be.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to suggest that the Soldiers' Home makes wonderfully good provision for many of these men when they are worn out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So they do, but the Soldiers' Homes only make provision for those who are in special circumstances of disease or wounds received in service and so on, and, therefore, the Soldiers' Homes provisions do not cover the whole length and breadth of the Many an old soldier, a non-commissioned officer or a private, feels naturally a certain sense of dislike to going to a Soldiers' Home, just as in our States

Mr. BUTLER. The Soldiers' Home costs the Government nothing.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Everything that we have to do with costs something. We tax the soldiers to support the Soldiers' Home, and we arrange the pay of the soldier in such a way as to warrant that taxation. So when you come around to it after all the fact is, as it ought to be, that the great body of the people pay for all things of that kind in one way or another, directly or indirectly. But a great many men naturally feel a disinclination to go to one of these places, like a hospital or an infirmary or a retreat, just as I was saying in all the States there are provisions, wise and humane, for taking care of those who through misfortune and honest poverty are unable to take care of themselves, and yet we know that in every town in every State of the Union there are many people in distress who have a perfectly natural feeling of dislike to going to what is called the poor-house. It is a feeling that ought to be respected to a degree, and is respected in all the States in one way or another. List a with those old selected in all the States in one way or another. Just so with those old soldiers worn out in the service. They might think and say "it looks as if we were paupers if we are to be sent to a special place away from our families and the old homes where we want to go back and smoke in peace and die;" and I do not think the Government is wasting money when it gives a little something to that class of public servants for such long service.

So, as I say, I shall be glad to go for the theory of this bill, and to include privates, but that would require some amendment, and it is so late to-day that I hope we shall not conclude the bill, for I do not know that an amendment could be prepared in a moment that would cover the idea in the right way.

Mr. MAXEY. In respect to the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] I beg to call his attention to what the report shows; and if he will do me the honor to read that and what I have said in regard to this bill heretofore, he will readily understand the reasons of the committee for limiting the operations of the bill to the class therein provided for. A point in this bill is to create a spirit of emulation in the Army; to hold out an inducement for the best material to go into the Army and to behave themselves in an orderly and soldierly way so as to secure the position of a non-commissioned officer, and thus be enabled to get the benefit of this bill. That is to say, it creates a spirit of emulation which would not be the case if all, without any special merit, were to be entitled to like benefits. That is the view the committee have on that point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I suggest to my honorable friend just there—because I do not wish to take up time—that I think there should always be an emulation among the enlisted men to have the honors of helding the efficiency if I my well it such be a recommissioned off.

holding the office (if I may call it such) of a non-commissioned officer, just as there is an emulation outside in the lower houses of State cet, just as there is an emulation outside in the lower houses of state Legislatures—of course there is none in the lower House of the National Legislature—to get into the senate of the State Legislature and so on. I think that if the case were put merely on the point of stimulating emulation, it would hardly justify the expenditure; but in respect of that justice and gratitude that belongs, I think, to a wise nation in respect to its faithful soldiers who have spent their lives in its service. I think the bill stands over solid ground.

lives in its service, I think the bill stands upon solid ground.

Mr. MAXEY. Of course in the presentation of this bill, I am not presenting my individual views only as to the merits of the bill but those of the committee as well. If the committee is right in thinking that we shall secure for the entire Army better material by holding out this prize that is a point, but not all the point, in its favor, ing out this prize that is a point, but not all the point, in its favor, and as to providing for these meritorious men, that in view of existing laws for retiring commissioned officers, is a conclusive point in its favor. On that point I agree with the Senator.

Now, in regard to what the Senator from Kentucky says, my observation, not to say experience, in this breathing world of ours is that when there is a necessity to have food for powder, a soldier is a good man, a splendid, brave, gallant man; everybody is in favor of the soldier; he is a glorious man. His praises are sounded everywhere; he is fêted as the defender of his country's honor; but when the time comes that there is no further need for his services, then—well he is an expensive luxury, and the tax-payer cannot afford to provide for the old worn-out decrepit man, no longer fit food for powder. History repeats itself.

After the treaty of Ryswick, when William III brought back from the continent his old battle-scarred veterans, perhaps the best-disciplined army of that day and time, an army that would have reflected credit on any government, that army, one would think by looking at the debates in Parliament, was the most dangerous enemy that England ever had; and the proposition was gravely argued to disband the entire army, leaving England without armed protection. I believe, for I am citing from memory of history, that ten thousand men were finally left. It was a mere accident that it was ten thou-sand, for the design was to reduce it to five thousand; but a certain portion of the army happened to be serving beyond the British Isles, about five thousand, I think, and by ministerial construction it was held the bill was not sufficiently broad to reach them; and thus the army was retained at about ten thousand. It was then said—as the Senator from Kentucky says to-day—that war was over and peace would henceforth bless the land; the lion and the lamb can lie down together, and there will be peace in the land; but I think any one who will follow the history of Great Britain will see that after 1698 there were wars, disastrous wars, that cost England her best blood and involved that country in untold millions of pounds with a national debt mountain-high. It was after that, among many other wars England has fought, our independence from her was won. It was after that England fought Napoleon for so many long years and that our last war with England was fought on land and sea. In the United States we are at peace at this time. I hope and trust in the good Lord that this country will always be in peace. I hope that there will never a time come when there will be need to hear a hostile gun within our borders. But, sir, when we look back through all history from now back to its earliest dawn we see that war always has been going on somewhere, is now, and always will be. Indeed some philosophers have it that the normal condition of man is war, and historical facts seem to prove it.

The world has always been at war, and I greatly fear that some part of the world always will be; and the greatest of all men this country has ever had enunciated a doctrine as different from that of the Senator from Kentucky as the zenith from the nadir: "In peace prepare for war." How better can you prepare for war than to tell the men who serve your country and serve it where death-darts fly thickest and swiftest, "If you serve your country faithfully and well, meeting its enemies on the battle-field whenever and wherever commanded to meet him, when your hair is blossoming with the gray your country will provide you and your old wife a home." It seems to me that is wise. Say to them you will not be turned out to die to me that is wise. Say to them you will not be turned out to die like a dog, for republics are not ungrateful.

But it comes with a strange note from one who voted as I did (and I am in favor of it) to put upon the pension list the veterans of the Mexican war who served their country three months, six months, twelve months, or two years—and then oppose this bill. Both positions are interestinable and in perfect accord. The Senetar from Kon tions are maintainable and in perfect accord. The Senator from Kentions are maintainable and in perfect accord. The Senator from Kentucky voted for the bill to pension our soldiers of the Mexican war, but now opposes this little bill that puts on the retired list forty-one or forty-two men who have served for more than thirty years, some of whom were in the Florida war, in the Mexican war, and in the late war under the flag of the Union. There should be consistency in all things. Of course I know that all Senators vote just as they think is best, most patriotic, wisest, and for the good of the country. These men have no great political influence behind them; they have not even the privilege of a vote; they rely upon the Committee on Military have no great political influence behind them; they have not even the privilege of a vote; they rely upon the Committee on Military Affairs to present their claims, and the committee has discharged that duty faithfully, and, fortunately for the country, as Americans looking to the good of the country, and not as partisans, for there was not the slightest touch of party in the action of the committee.

Mr. President, after all the fact remains, and the Senator from Kentucky, with all the logic that he has—and I concede that he is very logical, indeed—cannot get rid of it, that the officers, with their salaries running up to, I believe, $17,000, if they have served the same length of time, can retire with 75 per cent. of their pay; but when a poor enlisted man comes and asks you to place him, with his small pay, on the same footing, neither better nor worse, the same men who make no effort to take that law off the statute-book say, "No, pay, on the same footing, neither better nor worse, the same men who make no effort to take that law off the statute-book say, "No, the back of my hand is to you." Well, Mr. President, that is not according to my ideas of justice.

It is said that this may in time extend to the private soldier, the enlisted man. I do not think it would be proper at this time to try that. This is an experiment. If it works well, as I hope it will, the time may come when the Congress of the United States may in its wisdom see proper to extend the provision. At present I think that the Senate would do well to go no further in the bill than the committee has gone. Certainly when we make in less than a week forty pensioners for life, and we do it every week, and when the entire Calendar and all the business is set aside when the chairman of the Committee on Pensions says he wants to take up the pension case when you make more than forty pensioners for life every week, it when you make more than forty pensioners for life every week, it does seem to me upon the same principle, if the object is to provide for the meritorious, these men ought to be provided for.

Why, sir, take a case: A man goes into a battle, he is not wounded; he gets no pension. Is there not as much merit in his fighting bravely under the same flag in the same rank, side by side, with his neighbor who is shot down? That one who is shot down is pensioned because under the wise and liberal theory of the law he has been in a meritorious service, and has thereby become disqualified for making his living. I ask you if in regard to that other man who served by him, and who in the service has become by age disqualified from making a living otherwise, it is not as inst, as fair, and as conitable to make a living otherwise, it is not as just, as fair, and as equitable to make provision for him? The fact remains, and all the arguments made by the Senator from Kentucky cannot get rid of that fact, if he believes that he ought to vote against this bill he ought to introduce a bill for the repeal of the law creating a retired list for commissioned officers, and thus place all on the same dead level. It is absurd to acquiesce in the one and oppose the other.

Mr. ALLISON. I was waiting to hear the Senator from Texas answer the suggestion made by the Senator from Kentucky that under this bill persons of forty-eight years of age in sound health may be placed on the retired list.

placed on the retired list.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator will pardon me a moment I answered that the other day by a single argumentum ad hominem, the right way, in my judgment, to answer it. I said to the Senator from Kentucky that the bill which he does not propose to repeal does exactly the same thing. The bill to retire commissioned officers is subject to the like exceptional cases. A cadet enters West Point at seventeen years, he graduates at twenty-one, he is retired after thirty years, and that takes him off at fifty-one. The logic of that argument is that a boy eighteen years old may enlist and be retired at forty-eight, therefore all enlisted men go in at eighteen and may be retired at forty-eight, but as this is far from the fact, the argument falls to the ground; and like all arguments drawn from extreme and exceptional instances and like all arguments drawn from extreme and exceptional instances has no practical merit.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the point to which I wished to call atten-

Mr. MAXEY. If one is bad in that respect, the other is.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Will the Senator allow me to make a remark on that subject?
Mr. ALLISON.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.
Mr. BURNSIDE. A soldier who is able-bodied will not retire at forty-eight, because he can stay in the Army and get full pay. If he has served thirty years and is still able-bodied at forty-eight years of age, he will keep on serving until he finds himself unable to keep in the service, because he would rather have full pay than three-fourths pay. When he is absolutely disabled, disqualified for service, then he will retire, it may be after forty years' service.

In the next place it must be understood that no soldier is re-enlisted at the end of five years' service when there is the slightest cause for not re-enlisting him. It is put upon every discharge paper whether there is any cause why he should not be re-enlisted. Therefore a man at the end of every five years has to present a clean record, and a man who has staid thirty years in the Army, who has given thirty years' continuous service to the Army of the United States, is sure to be found to be a good man. There is hardly such a thing on record as continuous service to the Army of the United States, is sure to be found to be a good man. There is hardly such a thing on record as a bad man who has served continuously for thirty years.

Mr. ALLISON. The chief argument made by the Senator from Texas in favor of this bill—and I quite sympathize with him in most of what he says—is that these non-commissioned officers should be placed in the same relation to the service as the commissioned officers occupy. I quite agree with that; but when I examine the statute with reference to the position of the commissioned officers I find that they occupy a very different position from that proposed in this bill. In the first place no officer in the Army can be refired until be has In the first place no officer in the Army can be retired until he has been forty years in the service. Mr. MAXEY rose.

Mr. MAXEY rose.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will wait a moment; I have the statute right before me. The object of that provision is that an officer shall not be retired below the age of sixty or sixty-two years. On his application the President in his discretion, acting in each particular case presented, may retire an officer when he has served thirty years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Or on the report of a board.

Mr. ALLISON. Or on the report of a board where he is incapacitated by service. All these provisions are put in for the purpose of protecting this retired list; but here we find this Military Committee, who claim to be the only apprising of the soldiers in this body coming protecting this retired list; but here we find this Military Committee, who claim to be the only guardians of the soldiers in this body, coming in with a proposition that these soldiers shall be placed on a different position from that now occupied by the officers of the Army. If the Senator from Texas will amend his bill so as to place the non-commissioned officer in precisely the same relation and position now occupied by the commissioned officers I think I should vote for it very cheerfully; but there is in the bill a provision for thirty years of consecutive service that I believe the committee propose to strike out. I think there is a great deal of force in what the Senator from Kentucky said about the provisions of this bill. A large number of soldiers in the future may under it be placed on this retired list at the age of forty-eight years. The suggestion made by the Senator from diers in the future may under it be placed on this retired list at the age of forty-eight years. The suggestion made by the Senator from Rhode Island does not change that, I think. They are placed on the retired list with three-quarters pay when they can engage, at forty-eight years of age, in other business. It is not so with the commissioned officer, because the commissioned officer at the end of thirty years has his eye on promotion; he may become a major, a colonel, or a general it may be general it may be.

Mr. MAXEY. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to this fact, which doubtless will attract his attention if he looks at to this fact, which doubtless will attract his attention if he looks at it, that the commissioned officer need not do any act of special merit to entitle him to the privileges of the section in respect to the retired list for officers; a non-commissioned officer must have served as a non-commissioned officer, showing that he must have secured by honest, faithful, soldierly conduct that position and hold that position for thirty years. Nothing of that kind is required of the commissioned officer.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator does not seem to draw the distinction which I find in the statute, namely, that in particular cases the President, in his discretion, retires an officer. Now by force of law the Senator from Texas proposes to put these soldiers on the retired list at the age of forty-eight.

Mr. MAXEY. An officer may be retired on his own application by direction of the President after thirty years' service.

Mr. ALLISON. After all the suggestions made by the Senator from Texas, and the idea expressed by the Senator from Rhode Island, I think the objection made by the Senator from Kentucky still stands that here is a proposition to allow a great body of men to be placed upon the retired list at the age of forty-eight years, without sufficient inducement to them to continue in the service for the additional greater pay.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion.

There is a very important resolution passed by the House of Representatives lying upon the President's table, and I desire to ask that it be taken up. I know that there will be no objection to it. It is it be taken up. I know that there will be no objection to it. It is House joint resolution No. 291.
Mr. CONKLING. Taken up for what? For reference, or for action?
Mr. COCKRELL. For action. There will be no objection, I am sure.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the resolution?
Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that it may be read for information.
Mr. MAXEY. I have no objection to accommodating the Senator from Missouri, but I do not want this bill to lose the position it now has. If that resolution is called up, I desire it to be understood that this bill is temporarily laid aside, subject to call at any time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Chair understands the bill will retain its place at the head of the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution I have referred to be read.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas has moved that the Senate do now adjourn.
Mr. COCKRELL. He withdraws that, I hope.
Mr. GARLAND. I withdraw that at the request of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to know before we go further what has become of the business thus far? Where is the regular order may I inquire?

Mr. MAXEY. That was laid aside informally.
Mr. CONKLING. Then the bill we have just been considering is also informally laid aside.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the reoort from the Committee on Privileges and Elections was laid aside informally, to be resumed at any time on the demand of the chairman of the committee as the unfinished business, and that the bill which has recently been under consideration was taken up on motion of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. WITHERS. It is the first bill on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If its consideration is now suspended it will retain its place on the Calendar as the first bill to be considered on the call of the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The regular order is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is before the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask now that the Senator from Arkansas has withdrawn the motion to adjourn—

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Jonas] took the floor upon the regular order, and yielded it temporarily to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] for the consideration of a bill, with the understanding that he would retain the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There can be no misunderstanding whatever.

Mr. GARLAND. There is no difficulty about it at all.
Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the joint resolution from the House of Representatives be laid before the Senate.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate a joint resolution received from the House of Representatives.

TORNADO IN MISSOURI.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 291) authorizing tents to be loaned to the governor of Missouri for the use of sufferers by the recent tornado in that State was read the first time by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to consider the joint resolution at the present time. I know there can be no objection to it.

Mr. CONKLING and Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read.

The joint resolution was read the second time at least the

The joint resolution was read the second time at length.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH R. SHANNON.

Mr. TELLER. Some time ago the bill (S. No. 33) to ascertain the amount of the claim of Joseph R. Shannon, of Louisiana, was reached on the Calendar and passed over in my absence. I ask unanimous consent that it may be put back on the Calendar immediately following Senate bill No. 1331, which we have been considering to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CONKLING. I will not object, but I take this occasion to say that some time ago a bill of much concern to a citizen of the State of New York was taken up and placed somewhere on the Calendar with New York was taken up and placed somewhere on the Calendar with the understanding that whenever the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPherson] was here it should be in order on a call. I have been trying in a feeble and respectful way, as one or two other Senators have been, to get the light to strike on that bill ever since, and with very bad success. Now I will not object to the Senator from Colorado putting his bill in front, but I do give notice that I will object, if an objection can avail to giving precedence to other hills of the if an objection can avail, to giving precedence to other bills on the Calendar. It seems to me that these bills which are thus to be left behind ought to have some possibility, some time or other, of being reached. Therefore, although I do not object to this request, I hope no other Senator will ask to advance another bill to the detriment of those already on the Calendar.

Mr. TELLER. I will state that this is a bill which I reported from the Committee on Claims, but when it was reached on the Calendar

I was not here, and it went over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado asks that the bill indicated by him be placed on the Calendar next to Senate bill No. 1331, which has been lately under consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is necessary to have a short executive session. Mr. GARLAND. I will change my motion from a motion to adjourn to a motion for an executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and fifty-eight minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 23, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MAMENDMENTS TO IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. McLANE. I ask unanimous consent at this time to present an amendment to the immigration bill, and ask that it be printed together with other amendments.

Mr. COX. That order was made last evening.

The SPEAKER. The order of last evening allows the gentleman to present his amendment and have it printed.

The amendments were read, as follows:

The amendments were read, as follows:

After the word "State," in section 6, line 4, insert "or if there should be no such commission, board, or officer in a State, then with any duly incorporated society or societies or associations in said State, having in charge the care of immigrants and recognized by the governor of said State."

And after the word "board," in the eleventh line of said section 6, strike out the words "or officers," and insert "officers, society or societies, or other association."

And after the word "appoint," in the fourteenth line of same section, insert the following: "or as shall be appointed by any such society or societies, or associations, as the case may be."

RECIPROCITY TREATY.

RECIPROCITY TREATY.

Mr. COX submitted a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs as to the basis of a reciprocity treaty between this country and Canada; which was recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed; not to come back by a motion to reconsider.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

Mr. COX also, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back joint resolution (H. R. No. 281) requesting the President to abrogate the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS, WISCONSIN.

Mr. POUND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this time, by authority of the Committee on Indian Affairs, to present a substitute for House bill 1139, a bill for the relief of the Lac de Flambeau, Lac Court Oreilles, and Bad River bands of Chippewa Indians, in the State of Wisconsin, and ask that the same be printed. I also desire to give notice that I shall offer this substitute at the proper time.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

EXPENSES OF ISSUING CURRENCY.

Mr. DE LA MATYR, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and ing resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

*Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, respectfully requested to cause to be furnished to this House at his earliest convenience an account showing the following:

First. The amount of United States bonds and the interest they bore, secured by the national banks and held by the Treasury as security for circulation, issued to said banks in each year, from 1863 until 1880, with the aggregate of said interest paid by the Government between said periods.

Second. The amount of United States deposits held by national banks, and the amount of bonds of the United States secured by said banks and held by the Treasury to secure said deposits, with the rate of interest said bonds have borne, and the amount of interest paid thereon in each year, from 1863 until 1880, with the aggregate of said payments.

Third. The amount of money paid by the United States each year, from 1863 until 1880, for salaries of officers, clerks, and employés of all kinds for and connected with national banks, and the aggregate thereof for said term.

Fourth. The amount of money paid by the United States for plates, engraving, paper, printing, signing, and transmitting circulation to national banks each year, from 1863 until 1880, and the aggregate of said payments in said term.

Fifth. Any and all other payments of money made by the United States for or on account of national banks not included in the foregoing specifications, if any there be, each year, from 1863 until 1880, with the aggregate thereof.

Sixth. That all of said payments so made by the United States for, on account of, or connected with national banks, ouring said term, be footed up, that the aggregate of all said payments may appear to the credit of the United States and to the debit of said banks.

That said account also contain the following to the credit of said banks:

First. The amount of all taxes paid by the national banks to the United States upon their circulation e gate thereof, not including, however, any such tax required to be paid by State banks and private bankers, as well as national banks.

Fourth. That any sum or sums paid by national banks to the United States under requirements of law, not included in the foregoing specifications, be also stated, and due credit thereof be given said banks for each year from 1863 until 1880, and the due credit therefor be given said banks for each year from 1863 until 1880, and the aggregate thereof.

Fifth. That a balance be struck, showing the amount due the Government for money paid to and for the national banks up to 1880, or the amount due said national banks, as the case may be, and that said account be duly signed by the proper officer of the Government.

Also, that said account state all the expenses incurred by the United States for the issue of legal-tender Treasury notes of the Government called greenbacks, each year from 1862 until 1880, and the aggregate expenses during that time, and that the difference, if any, between the cost of national-bank notes and of legal-tender Treasury notes be made to appear in said account.

NAVAL HISTORY OF THE WAR.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, by unanimous consent, Senate bill No. 888, authorizing the compilation and printing of the naval history of the war, was taken from the Speaker's table, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

WILLIAM S. BURGESS AND OTHERS.

Mr. DIBRELL. I ask unanimous consent that House bill No. 709, Mr. DIBRELL. I ask unanimous consent that House bill No. 705, for the relief of William S. Burgess and others, be taken from the Private Calendar and put upon its passage. This bill passed in the Forty-fourth Congress, passed in the Forty-fifth Congress, but failed in the Senate, and it is the unanimous report of the Committee on Claims at the present Congress.

Mr. BREWER. I object.

KIMBERLY BROTHERS.

Mr. GOODE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. No. 3290) for the relief of Kimberly Brothers, for consideration at this time.

Mr. BRIGGS. I object.

JOHN G. ABERCROMBIE.

Mr. GUNTER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5898) for the relief of John G. Abercrombie, of Arkansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

HEZEKIAH M'GEHEE.

Mr. GUNTER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5899) for the relief of Hezekiah McGehee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

OPERATIONS OF LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

Mr. CRAPO, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein,) That there be printed 10,000 copies of the Report of the Operations of the United States Life-Saving Service for the year ending June 30, 1879, without the accompanying takes, for distribution among the officers of our merchant marine, through the collectors of customs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

MESSENGERS IN HOUSE POST-OFFICE.

Mr. HENRY. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Accounts at this time a substitute for House resolution concerning the messengers in the House post-office, and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. BRIGGS. I object and demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is the report the gentleman desires to make a privileged report?

Mr. HENRY. No, sir; it does not relate to the contingent fund of the House; but I hope there will be no objections to its consideration.

Objection was made.

BRANNIN, SUMMERS & CO.

Mr. CARLISLE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 623) for the relief of Brannin, Summers & Co.; which was referred to the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

S. ROSENFELD & CO.

Mr. CARLISLE also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 290) for the relief of S. Rosenfeld & Co.; which was referred to the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LEGAL DEFINITION OF THE WORD ORPHAN.

Mr. BERRY, by unanimous consent from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported the bill (H. R. No. 4561) to declare the meaning of the word "orphan;" which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

EDWARD BRADEN AND J. W. ANGUS.

Mr. UPSON. I ask by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 56) for the relief of Edward Braden and J. W. Angus, to refer a claim to the Court of Claims, and ask for its present consideration. Mr. BRIGGS.

Mr. BRIGGS. I object. I have demanded the regular order.
Mr. BRIGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 196) and that it may be taken up for present consideration.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire having de-manded the regular order, the Chair has no option but to recognize

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMahon] asks unanimous consent to make a proposition touching the order of business.

There was no objection.

Mr. McMAHON. This is private-bill day, as we all know, and there are a great many bills and reports of a private nature on which gentlemen desire the action of the House. I dislike any further to antagonize private-bill day without giving something in return therefor. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the business of to-day and that of to-morrow shall be transposed, so that to-morrow shall take the place of to-day as private-bill day, and that to-day we proceed to public business so as to finish up the immediate deficiency bill, and that to-morrow be assigned for private business.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is, that to-morrow be treated as if it were

The SPEAKER. The object being to dispose of the immediate

The SPEARER. The object being to dispose of the immediate deficiency bill as soon as possible.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no objection to the proposition.

Mr. CONGER. I do not object to it, if it be understood that we shall have to-morrow for private business.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I desire to make one inquiry about this. Will it be understood that no motion to adjourn over till Monday can cut off that and of the total of the to that order if now made by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The House which has voted unanimously to meet for private business to-morrow would hardly indorse a resolution to adjourn over.

The arrangement proposed by the gentleman from Ohio is that to-day the deficiency appropriation bill be proceeded with, and that to-morrow shall be assigned to private business as if it were Friday. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. McMAHON. I now move to dispense with the morning hour.
The motion was agreed to; two-thirds voting in favor thereof.
Mr. McMAHON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the immediate deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. Whitthorne in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. Reed] is entitled to the floor and has twenty-eight minutes of his hour remaining. Mr. REED. I am aware, Mr. Chairman, of the difficulty of stating suggestions such as I have been making in this interrupted way, and also of the disadvantage under which I labor of not having the benefit of suggestions which come from previous discussion. I must accept the situation with all its disadvantages, and present the ideas I have in the crude way which circumstances render necessary. But I have a few more suggestions to make with regard to the practical effect of this amendment with regard to its tendencies as affecting the election laws, and I ask the attention of members of this House, because I believe that the suggestions which I am to make are matbecause I believe that the suggestions which I am to make are mat ters of importance and worthy of their attentive consideration. Those suggestions are founded upon the practical working of election laws which will come out of this amendment.

I called attention last night to the somewhat crude character of this legislation. I purpose now to show in particular where it does not join on to the election laws which we already have. A court is an institution which is to be set in motion from outside. It does an institution which is to be set in hotion from rotatics. It does not proceed upon its own motion, but upon petition and action of other parties; and accordingly in section 2011 of the Revised Statutes distinct means and methods and modes of procedure are presented for the appointment of supervisors and for everything connected with the title in which that section is to be found. Upon petition of two citizens in any city or town having upward of two thousand inhabitants, and upon the petition of ten citizens in other places, the machinery of the court can be set in operation. And further along, in section 2026 there is provision how the court shall receive the information necessary to guide it in making the appointment of supervisors of election. And there is a provision in section 2013 of the Revised Statutes for a session of the court for particular purpose purposes.

Now, in this amendment there is no provision whatever for setting the court in motion. There is no method of procedure provided whereby the court can be induced to act; and if it acts at all it has got to act upon its own motion; it has got to act without any means of information, and to appoint large numbers, perhaps, of deputy marshals without any means provided as to the inception of proceedings looking to their appointment, or any provisions to give the court information as to the character of the applicants for appointment. This of itself is a complete objection to this bill, arising from its very nature. I am aware that it will be attempted to be said that section 2013 provides that the circuit court shall be in session for a certain length of time to do business under this title in which the section is to be found. But that business is confined strictly to business under

And in that connection I wish to call the attention of the House to the nature and constitution of circuit courts of the United States. The courts of the United States, except the supreme judicial court, which has certain powers conferred upon it by the Constitution of the United States, are courts of limited and statutory jurisdiction. They have no common-law powers. There is no extension of their powers have no common-law powers. There is no extension of their powers outside of the letter and phraseology of the statutes. And in title 13, chapters 7 and 8, will be found the whole, or nearly the whole, of the law in regard to the jurisdiction of the circuit courts. It will be found there that circuit courts have regular terms, and special terms in some of the States, and that there is considerable difference between the powers of the circuit court at special and regular terms in different States of this Union; and it is only inviting confusion to attempt to bring this amendment within the scope of all of them. There is nothing in the statute law that makes the circuit court which is in session for the purposes of a particular title namely, title 26 in is in session for the purposes of a particular title, namely, title 26, in session for the purposes connected with this amendment. This amendment is not within that title, is not put there in terms, and there is nothing whatever in the amendment to bring it within the reach and nothing whatever in the amendment to oring it within the reach and scope and sweep of that title.

This view of the case is confirmed by the language of the amendment itself. If section 2013 of its own vigor attaches itself to this amendment why is this language used in the amendment:

Should there be no session of the circuit courts in the States or districts where such marshals are to be appointed, then and in that case the district judges are hereby authorized to convene their courts—

Which courts, by the way, district or circuit ?-

for the aforesaid purpos

If section 2013 applies, this language would have no force and be utterly unnecessary

If there was sure to be a session of the circuit court, as there must be under section 2013, it would be the height of absurdity to provide for a failure which could never occur. Evidently the Senate did not contemplate any action by virtue of this amendment under section

Consequently we are remitted to the uncertainty which I have already pointed out, and to the uncertainty which has been commented upon so ably elsewhere that I should feel it to be a work of supererogation for me to go over the ground.

I put the point in this way: there stands in the way of this proposed legislation very many doubts and difficulties connected with its interpretation. What is the nature of the work that this amendment provides shall be done? It is not a matter that admits of dallying. It is a matter that must be done at once. So executive is it lying. It is a matter that must be done at once. So executive is it in its functions that unless it is done within the period of a few days it cannot be done at all.

Suppose that you grant that every one of the difficulties I have suggested may possibly in time be overruled by the courts, and they may discover some method or way of making this amendment consonant with previous legislation. Yet I say to you that until that is done there never can be anything but doubt and hesitation and difficulty in a matter where we need prompt, immediate, speedy, and righteous action. Now will the Congress of the United States, in view of these circumstances, insist upon passing in this objectionable way this objectionable legislation?

I call your attention to another point, and that is that every other law in this land is self-executory, it does not depend upon the whim of the executive power whether the law shall be executed or not. The law commands and he must obey.

When you take the power of keeping the peace out of the hands of the executive department and transfer it to the courts, without making any provision whatever for the method of procedure or for the inception of action on the part of the courts, you leave it to the judgment and discretion of the tribunal whether the law shall be executed or not. It may be safely affirmed that an attempt like this is without a parallel not only in the history of this country but in the history of civilized government the world over.

Now, gentlemen, I have made some remarks with regard to the

Now, gentiemen, I have made some remarks with regard to the nature of this non-partisan amendment. I desire to make one other suggestion, and that is, in brief, the danger to arise at the polls from putting there two sets of people to execute the law, two sets of people who are appointed not irrespective of party but because of their party affiliations. You will have a divided duty, a divided Executive, an irresponsible head, and the result will be that you will have nothing done.

That is precisely what our friends on the other side mean, and that is all they mean. They do not accept this amendment in good faith. They have no idea of making it a practical affair, but they intend to go before the country pretending to accept it while in reality ignoring it. I venture to say that there is not one of them who will stand up here and say that if he had the power he would put this amendment upon the law even with its broadest scope, with proper restrictions, limitations, and methods of procedure.

I venture to say that I have made suggestions which justify our side in the struggle which we have made for the right of free discussion of this subject before the House, and I venture to say also that I have made some remarks which justify or excuse our friends on the other side in refusing to give it to us. [Laughter.]

Why is it, sir, that year after year, even day after day, the democratic party in this House and in this country are attempting legiscratic party in this House and in this country are attempting legislation like this, legislation which, while it may be fair-seeming on its face, is nevertheless insincere and a false pretense? The answer to that question requires the asking of some more.

Why was it, for ten years preceding the war, that the democratic party kept slowly and steadily solidifying itself into a party in favor of human slavery? Why was it, when the war broke out, that the democratic party of the South went into the rebellion, and the democratic party of the North back into the breeching? Why was it that after the war was flagrant these men met together under the lead of a discarded general, and resolved the very year before Appomattox Court-House that the war was a failure? Why was it that when we proposed in legal and proper fashion to make constitutional when we proposed in legal and proper fashion to make constitutional amendments abolishing slavery by virtue of law, long after it had been abolished by virtue of facts, they found themselves arrayed in solid opposition to it? Why was it that when we came to the question of the honest payment of the debts of the country the democratic party arranged itself solidly in favor of partial or total repudiation of those obligations? Why was it that they came before us discarding their own leaders and adopting men they had received from our party? Why is it, in a single word, that always for the last twenty-five years upon points about which there is no dispute now they have always been wrong? I do not talk now about matters that can be discussed; I talk about matters done by us which not half a dozen men on the other side would want undone to-day. Why is it that they have always gone wrong upon those subjects and have always taken wrong positions?

I will tell you, my friends. The notion that a party is made up like a subscription to a ladies' magazine, by sending out a declaration of principles, is a mistake of world-wide significance. Men associate together because they are progressive, because they are honest, because they have purposes connected with the furtherance and improvement of government. Other men associate together because they are conservative, because they are opposed to progress, and be-

That is the plan on which parties are formed. They are not formed to meet future issues. The future issues spring up, and parties deal with them according to their constitution and their nature.

The difference between the republican party and the democratic party is founded on this principle. All parties act from a common average. There is a great deal more of the government of the people average. There is a great deal more of the government of the people in this country than is generally admitted even by ourselves. The people express their average intelligence every time they come to the polls, and every party expresses its average intelligence. The reason we have been right and they have been wrong has not been that they had not brilliant leaders; it is because the average of intelligence with us has been higher than the average of intelligence with them. That is the whole secret of it, and it is an "open secret" to any man

That is the whole secret or it, and it is an "open secret" to any man who looks at the history of parties for the past few years.

These are general principles; let us descend a little to particulars. I say that the democratic party for the last thirty years has not had an honest heart-beat north of Mason and Dixon's line. I say that they have continually come forward as a party of false pretenses. Why, look at the acts of this session. Only the other day they came before us and delayed this very bill which we are now discussing by shill presented by the syntlement from Indiana [Mr. Hogymynnen]. why, look at the acts of this session. Only the other day they came before us and delayed this very bill which we are now discussing by a bill presented by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOSTETLER,] which was to deprive of the rights of citizenship every individual who had a claim against the Government, including, as was so eloquently said by my friend from New York, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] the very soldier who fought for his country. And for a day or two they actually kept up the pretense of pressing that! They were beaten and overthrown; yet just think of it—the democratic party at this moment of all others proclaiming against the use of money in politics! Why, in the very instant of one of their cataleptic spasms of virtue let Samuel J. Tilden but stand visibly before them, pointing his finger to the very least of his "barrels," and straightway there would leap into that old, wizened, decrepit, and paralyzed frame a strength and vigor mightier than "the might of France;" for in that attitude would be the potentiality of swinging the whole democratic party, North and South, by its noblest part, its long, majestic, and prehensile tail! [Laughter.] And yet, with that picture on the canvas visible to a whole continent, they come forward and pretend to talk about suppressing the use of money in politics.

I was greatly struck by an instance of their pretenses in the elaborate speech which was delivered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE.] He resurrected what I never expected to see dug up in this House. The committee for the investigation of frends in the last orate speech which was delivered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. House.] He resurrected what I never expected to see dug up in this House—the committee for the investigation of frauds in the last presidential election. Why, there has not been such a resurrection of dead and buried people since Kilpatrick saw the mummies of Peru rise and range themselves on the sea-coast line of South America. Well do I remember the launching of that illustrious committee. Never was there on earth such an awe-inspiring pageant. The air was thick with the coming storm. Across the leaden sky had flamed Anderson, a red-haired portent, who afterward proved to be the loftiest liar of historic Christendom.

Men went about with hushed voices, whispering to each other of dreadful possibilities. The faces of the democracy were radiant with a solemn joy. Now at last the usurper who had done them so much harm should be hurled from his throne; and Tilden, Samuel J., the wise, the virtuous, the innocent, the reformatory, should stand before the world visibly what he had always been spiritually, "the Lord's anointed." We, for our part, sat here sullenly rounding our backs to meet the coming storm. When the Speaker announced the mem-bers of the committee on the other side, it became perfectly apparent that the supreme hour of battle had come and the household troops had been ordered up. There at the head was a polished and able gennad been ordered up. There at the head was a polished and able gentleman, taken some years ago from our ranks, and who had voted with us often enough since to give the people the idea that he was respectable and to be trusted [laughter]—a gentleman to whose fairness and impartiality in everything except his report I bear cheerful, cordial, and willing witness. Nextcame my friend from Ohio, [Mr. McMahon,] keen and subtle, than whom there is no man in five kingdoms abler to dig a pit, for a witness and sweetly coay him into it. keen and subtle, than whom there is no man in five kingdoms abler to dig a pit for a witness and sweetly coax him into it. And there, to give a tone of chivalry to it, was my friend from the seventh district of Kentucky, [Mr. Blackburn,] then as now undallying and undoubting, and consequently undastardized and undamned. [Laughter.] Time would fail me to give an Homeric catalogue of all the great souls of heroes who went down to dusty death. [Laughter.] It is enough to say that they were the bright, consummate flower, the cream, or, to use a metaphor more suitable to the subject, the combined sweetness and strength, the very "rock and rye" of the democracy [Laughter.]

bined sweetness and strength, the very "rock and rye" of the democracy. [Laughter.]

I saw that expedition set forth with much boom of cannon and much float of flags. Five months afterward I saw it drift into port dismasted and dismantled. In silence and sadness, the sorrowing survivors, on the heel of the session jostled by every job and hustled by ten-dollar claims, disembarked their precious freight in two parcels—a little one containing what they had to say about our alleged frauds, and a big one containing their real ones. What was the reason of all this shipwreck of bright and high endeavor? Why between those days had rolled twenty-seven hundred bages of printed testison of all this sinpwreck of bright and high endeavor? Why between those days had rolled twenty-seven hundred pages of printed testimony. Now I shall not say—yet I am afraid my friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] will never forgive me for not saying—I shall not say that such is the nature of printed matter and of educa-I shall not say that such is the nature of printed matter and of education and of intelligence and of types that it would be impossible to get together twenty-seven hundred pages of printed matter without there being a condemnation of democracy somewhere between its leaves. But I do say that the people day by day examined that testimony; and when they got through, all that vast pretense of fraud vanished into thin air, and the public saw that Rutherford B. Hayes had not played the knave and that Samuel J. Tilden had.

Time would fail me to enumerate all these matters. I bring these up simply as samples showing what they have done. I affirm that they have not throughout all this Congress come forward with a single measure which they believe in. All their noble energies have been spent and exhausted in attempts to catch us in some mouse-trap or other, like the bill of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOSTETLER.] All this arises from the inherent nature of the collection [laughter] called democracy. I do not mean to say the difference between their average of intelligence and ours is so very great, but I say that the difference is just enough to make us take right positions on an average and for them to take wrong ones on an average; that is all. [Laughter.]

[Laughter.]
With this picture or panorama thus carefully and considerately drawn, Mr. Chairman, I want to contrast in just one or two words, and then I have done, the action of the republican party of the United States. I belong to it, and have always belonged to it; and I beg to say I am proud of the honor. I believe in it; I believe in its future; I believe in its past; I believe even in its present.
When in 1860 we came into power, sixteen States of this Union were black with the festering curse of African slavery, and over a vast empire beyond the Mississippi the same portentous cloud hung black and lowering; to-day in all this Republic there is not one man who is big enough to buy and sell another.

enough to buy and sell another.

enough to buy and sell another.

We found four millions of men slaves, and we left them all freemen. We found a war just becoming flagrant along a thousand miles of border. That war we have brought to a close ably, decisively, victoriously, mercifully. If the problems of reconstruction have proved too much for anything but time, that universal solvent, nevertheless impartial history will accord to us that we have given to them the best of honest effort and of patriotic endeavor.

The finances of the country, entangled and overwhelmed in the confusion of a great war, we have brought out of chaos up to the shining heights of prosperity.

I need say no more. These and such as these are our arms, won in well-fought fields. These are our monuments; and whether the world be sixty centuries or six thousand old, I say that the sun in all world be sixty centuries or six thousand old, I say that the sun in all his luminous marches from the east has never lighted up blazonry so honorable or inscriptions truer or more splendidly deserved. [Ap-honorable or inscriptions truer or more spiendidly deserved. [Applause on the republican side.]

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, belonging, as I do, to the party of "inferior intelligence," according to the gentleman who has just taken his seat, I regret that I should have reserved any time for the purpose of answering the extraordinary argument he has made. I have listened patiently for an hour, with my limited intelligence, to hear some invested point and when I remember that our friends on that side important point, and when I remember that our friends on that side sat for two whole days in the persistent obstruction of the public business for this—[laughter]—for this and nothing more, I am lost in amazement. Is this all that can be offered by them in opposition to this amendment? Is it for this that they spent two days in a solemn struggle? The gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] said something the other day about a mouse, which might not be inapplicable just

I hope that the argument which has been presented satisfies gentlemen on the republican side. It certainly does this side. When I consider, Mr. Chairman, that at the present time we have the delightful English opera in our city, with its soft strains of beautiful music, and next week are to have the French opera, it is cruel and extraordinary that an intelligent body of men should be compelled to sit bere for an hour and be sawed as the gentleman from Maine sawed both sides of this House for one hour. This is too much for human nature! [Laughter and applause on the democratic side.] We may be deficient in intelligence, as the gentleman suggests, but we are not destitute of nerves

A Member. Does he mean sawed or bored ? [Laughter.] Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, I have reserved twenty minutes Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, I have reserved twenty minutes in the close for the purpose of stating a few general propositions which I might have desired to state without having heard the gentleman's argument. While the objection made on that side is that the democratic party has been putting political riders on appropriation bills, gentlemen present the queer spectacle of approving a certification of the property of the property of the property and the proving a certification of the property of the proving a certification of the province of the purpose of tain measure as an independent measure, and yet voting against an appropriation bill because this measure is ingrafted on that bill. They say they do it because these measures are political riders. And they are opposed to riders.

What is a political rider? My friend from Maine [Mr. REED] ad-What is a political rider? My friend from Maine [Mr. Reed] admitted yesterday that no party as a party objected to legislation on an appropriation bill. As a matter of fact, the President scarcely ever signs an appropriation bill which does not contain some legislation. The objection, therefore, is not to legislation on appropriation bills but to political legislation, as the gentleman himself has admitted. And he says that we thereby mean to coerce the President. I want to ask gentlemen, in all fairness, this question: If they are against having troops at the polls, and if they are at heart in favor of having non-partisan marshals and of dividing them between the political parties, how does an amendment become a political rider political parties, how does an amendment become a political rider which ingrafts these ideas on an appropriation bill? It can only become a political rider when gentlemen on the other side take the ground that they are in favor of troops at the polls as a party and that they are opposed as a party to dividing the marshals between the political parties and having them appointed by an impartial tribunal. If they will take this ground, I can understand them. But how does a good proposition, approved by everybody, become a political proposition by being annexed to an appropriation bill? This is a dilemma into which gentlemen are driven by fighting to retain bad laws under a false pretense.

And yet gentlemen upon that side of the House say that as an in-dependent measure they would support the proposition in this bill; that as an independent measure they are against the use of troops at the polls, and are favorable to an equal division of the marshals, and for having them appointed by the courts. They must permit us to doubt their sincerity. The gentleman who last addressed this House in his rambling tirade against our party made much sport out of the supposed attitude of the democratic members of this House upon the tariff as compared with the platform of the democratic party adopted by the Saint Louis convention. I ask the gentleman to keep his eyes a little nearer at home, as the old hunter does, and perhaps he will find a little better game. If the question of consistency is of any consequence, let him look into the present position of his own party. At the extra session we find them supporting an Army bill containing the identical amendment which was in the late Army bill. But we find them turned completely around at this session, and refusing to support the Army bill for the next fiscal year, because it contains this same prohibition of troops at the polls which they approved one year

What is the matter with gentlemen on that side? What change has come over them to induce this revolution in their sentiments? What medicine have they taken? Are troops at the polls a part of the third-term programme? The claim is made that this is political considerion. It is not, unless gentlemen do not speak the truth when legislation. It is not, unless gentlemen do not speak the truth when they say they would support it as an independent measure. And when gentlemen undertake to evade the proper force and effect of their action in voting against an appropriation bill by saying that they are in favor of this as an independent measure but against it on the appropriation bill, they are not uttering the true inwardness of their objection to it. Their objection is founded upon different ground. They are for troops at the polls, but they dare not avow it. They disguise their opposition under the pretext of hostility to riders. And my friend from Connecticut [Mr. Hawley] professed to be in favor of the proposition but not in favor of it in this shape, because we sought to coerce the President.

what do we understand by a rider? Is all legislation on appropriation bills to be designated as riders? I do not so understand the term. And the gentleman from Maine has just admitted that it is not. Legislation on appropriation bills becomes a rider under certain circumstances which are familiar to gentlemen. We had instances in the extra session. Legislation upon an appropriation bill becomes a rider when one party refuses supplies for the support of the Government unless that legislation shall receive the executive sanction as the condition of the appropriation. We acted upon that principle at the extra session. We put our repeal of the election laws upon an appropriation bill and insisted that the President should sign it as the condition of the supplies granted. Whether we acted in complete wisdom is not the question now to be considered. But whatever intimation may have been given out then as to our course in case of a veto, the situation is very different now. I ask gentlemen if any one upon this side of the House, either privately or publicly, has stated that the bill for the support of the Army or the deficiency bill should fail if the President refused his sanction to either ciency bill should fail if the President refused his sanction to either measure? Has any gentleman whispered any penalty against the President if he fails to sign the bills? Did not both of the appropriation bills come from the Committee on Appropriations without these clauses? And when the amendments were put upon them by the House itself, one was the amendment which the President had already approved, and the other was invited by my colleague from Ohio, [Mr.

I speak for every democratic member, I believe, when I say that, whatever may be their opinion in general of the right of the House to annex conditions to the grant of supplies for the Government, there is no assertion of that right in this instance.

Why, then, are these measures offered at all? They are offered to test your sincerity. They are offered to test the sincerity of the President. I doubt the former. I have much more confidence in the latter. If we were pushing these amendments as political riders on appropriation bills we would express our own views. We would renew the programme of the extra session.

Instead of that, what do we do? We take the Army bill in the condition in which it met the approval of the President of the United States one year ago, and send it to him in the same shape precisely. The modification does not alter the situation. We present it to him again with full confidence that it will meet his approval; especially since my distinguished colleague from Ohio made so forcible an argument for it at the extra session. When the marshals amendment is looked into carefully it will be seen that we have acted on the same principle. We have proposed a measure that meets the approval of many on the other side of the House, that has been accepted by the country as a fair settlement, and one that will meet the approval of the President himself. We have sought to discover the views of fair-minded men, and we only ask for that which they themselves have offered to us as a fair solution of the difficulty.

I hold in my hand, Mr. Chairman, the message of the President of the United States, vetoing the Army bill at the extra session, to this House on the 30th day of April, 1879. In that message he uses this language:

If well-founded objections exist against the present national election laws, all good citizens should unite in their amendment. The laws providing the safeguards of the elections should be impartial, just, and efficient. They should, if possible, be so non-partisan and fair in their operation that the minority, the party out of power, will have no just grounds to complain.

Then, in one of his very last messages, the one vetoing the bill for certain judicial expenses of the Government, he says:

I have in my former message on this subject expressed a willingness to concur in suitable amendments for the improvement of the election laws; but I cannot consent to their absolute and entire repeal, and cannot approve the legislation which seeks to prevent their enforcement.

Now, if we desire to make these laws "non-partisan," if we want to accept the idea that has made a lodgment in the mind of the President, as in that of my colleague, [Mr. Garfield,] that they are unfair and need amendment, if we want to act up to the high standard which the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Garfield,] rising above party interests, set up for all honest, fair-minded men in this country, what we have done to these laws less than we have done?

We have not restricted the number of deputy marshals to be appointed; we have not reduced their term of service; we have not diminished their compensation; we have not touched one of their powers to prevent fraud or preserve peace; we have not altered or repealed one provision of law which protects them in the exercise of their duties. All we have done is the least we could have done, and repealed one provision of law which protects them in the exercise of their duties. All we have done is the least we could have done, and that is to put the appointment in the courts of law, providing, also, that they shall be taken equally from all political parties.

Mr. SIMONTON. And be men of good character.

Mr. McMAHON. Yes; and be men of good character. What less could we have done? I appeal to gentlemen on the other side, in all fairness, whether less could be asked by the democratic party. We have confined ourselves in this amendment to what the President of the United States has substantially admitted in his message should be done and would be approved by him, and what many gentlemen on the other side have said they would agree to as an independent measure. We mean no coercion. But we do mean to test the sincerity of the gentlemen on the other side and of the President of the United States. We want the republican party to show whether it is for fair States. We want the republican party to show whether it is for fair elections or for elections controlled by partisans.

When you had the power, gentlemen, you passed these election laws. You made them in the worst partisan shape. When we undertook to repeal them you said, "No, you shall not repeal them; but if you will modify and make them non-partisan, we will agree to that." We did not accept your proposition then. The Supreme Court having decided the constitutional question involved, the situation has changed. We now come to you and say, "Make these laws non-partisan; make them just as you would wish to have them if you were in the minority; make them, as the President suggested, so fair and non-partisan that the minority will have no just grounds to complain." But how are we met? The republican party has professed a reverence for fair and free elections; but the veil is rudely torn from the party by such statements as that of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. Reed.] How is the hypocrisy of the republican party laid bare to the world when that gentleman talked as he did, denonneing the idea of the President that these laws should be made (from ing the idea of the President that these laws should be made "nonpartisan," and claiming for the party in power all the officers of elec-tions, all the power, with nothing but submission for the minority! The great constitutional argument of the gentleman from Maine

The great constitutional argument of the gentleman from Maine was that we were confounding the executive and judicial duties of this Government in providing that the judge of the court should have the power to appoint deputy marshals instead of the marshal himself. All I have to say about that to the distinguished gentleman is this: let him take the case of Ex parte Siebold, one of the election cases recently decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, and he will find there the total overthrow of everything he has said on this subject. There is not any trouble upon the constitutional question. And there is no trouble in a supposed confusion of powers. on this subject. There is not any trouble upon the constitutional question. And there is no trouble in a supposed confusion of powers. The judge of the circuit court is a most fit person to make the appointment of special deputies. I appeal to every member within the sound of my voice whether in his Statea judge of the court is not made, either by the constitution or by statute, a conservator of the peace. It is so in my State. It is so in Illinois, Alabama, Indiana, Texas, and many others many otners.

Mr. HOUSE. And it is so in mine.

Mr. McMAHON. It is so in almost every State of the Union. The judge has the right to put down riots and to summon a posse as a conservator of the peace by the very nature of his office. What is more proper, then, than that these deputy marshals, who are only the mushrooms of election times for the preservation of the peace about mushrooms of election times for the preservation of the peace about the polls, should be appointed by those great conservators of the peace, (if there be a peace of the United States,) the judges of our courts. It is eminently proper and right; and the circuit court of the United States is not lowered in its dignity by having the appointment of these persons; nor will it be involved in political quarrels any more than by the appointment of supervisors, which it now exercises; nor does the theory of our Government suffer; nor are the laws impaired in their efficiency. To make laws more just necessarily laws impaired in their efficiency. To make laws more just necessarily increases their efficiency.

And I would ask the distinguished "average intelligence" statesman from Maine this question: If the circuit courts can appoint supervisors of election, as they do under the present law, and these supervisors of election have the power to preserve the peace and to make arrests, in the absence of deputy marshals, as they have, by express statutory provision, what possible objection can exist to elothing the same judges of the United States courts with power to appoint the auxiliary officers the deputy marshals, whose powers and point the auxiliary officers, the deputy marshals, whose powers and duties are so similar to their own?

The truth is, if we want non-partisan appointments we are driven to the courts. I do not pretend that this theory is always vindicated. I do not pretend that every time you vest such power in a man you thereby divest him of all the prejudices that belong to him as a man because he is a judge. But the judge of the court is dependent on no one. He has every inducement to be fair; and because we fail in many instances is no reason for us to adopt the low political ethics of the gentleman from Maine, who ridicules in such strong and no doubt sincere language the decent effort that is being made by this side of the House and my colleague from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to lift elections out of the political grasp of any one party. The gentleman from Maine professes to believe that to the party in power belongs everything. His views will change materially when he finds himself in the minority, and he finds an administration seeking to prevent him from returning to Congress to punish the House with his disquisitions on the "inferior intelligence" of the party opposed to him. But the gentleman from the State of Maine has made another discovery. He says this law is not "hitched on" to the other law and the right an emphysion to set the approximant in partial and the judge.

there is no machinery to set the amendment in motion, and the judge of the court will sit back in his chair and do nothing.

Why, sir, I thought the gentleman from the State of Maine was well aware of the law that all statutes passed upon the same subjectmatter are construed together, as constituting but one law. If one statute is passed to-day, and another on the same subject shall be passed ten years from now, those two statutes will be construed to-gether and made to stand together so far as they can, and only the inconsistent portions of the previous statute rejected. Nothing is simpler. All the election laws stand except as modified in this amend-ment; and they stand with this amendment as part of one and the same law.

The gentleman also says that the courts cannot be set in motion under this amendment. Why, sir, the law provides that any two citizens who want supervisors of elections can at any time demand that the circuit court of the United States shall be opened, and upon that demand the court must be opened ten days before the election and kept open until the day after. Now, if two citizens (and that is all that is required) want marshals appeinted all they have to do is to file an application for the appointment of supervisors. The court is then bound to be open, and it is opened under the whole election-statute title, for operation under that law, from the first to the last section. And if new duties are east upon the court by an amendment to the election laws in that title, the provisions apply to all such amendments as well as to the original law.

The trouble with this little amendment which we are now discussing is not that it will not work in the way of having a perfect system of non-partisan men at the polls. The true trouble is that it deprives the marshal of the United States, who of course is the mere creature of the President of the United States, from putting at the polls such persons as he may see fit, the consideration of whose employment usually is the purchase of their votes or influence, and the votes of their immediate friends. It accomplishes what our republican friends do not want. It deprives them of an unfair, partisan advantage. And no better evidence is desired of the propriety of the amendment

And no better evidence is desired of the propriety of the amendment than the slender argument that has been made against it.

One moment more and I will have done. My time is up; but I wish to add a few words. The democratic party has made a long fight for free and honest election laws. It has asked two things that are fundamental to any free and fair election. The great writer, Francis Lieber, in his Paper on Elections, says that elections are of no value unless certain conditions are fulfilled, among which he enumerates

It is especially necessary that the Army be in abeyance, as it were, with reference to all subjects and movements appertaining to the question at issue.

3. All elections must be superintended by election judges and officers independent of the executive or any other organized or unorganized power of government.

Therefore we say, put these appointments in the hands of the courts, the judges of which hold their places for life, and give us free and fair elections. Keep the troops from the polls. And when you give us these we will have accomplished much for our country and for the cause of free government. We have had a long struggle. But public opinion has vindicated our rights; and if we have not carried our views we have conquered to the extent of having at least fair laws for the protection of elections.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed by the House for general debate has been exhausted. The Clerk will now report the amendments of the Senate; first, those in which the Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence; second, those, if any, in which the Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence with amendments; and third, those in which non-concurrence is recommended.

The following are amendments in which concurrence was recommended by the Committee on Appropriations:

In the clause making appropriations for the public printing, to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$300,000."

The amendment was concurred in.

The second amendment was in the clause making appropriations for the salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, gaugers, store-keepers, &c.; to strike out "$320,000" and to insert "$313,000." The amendment was concurred in.

The third amendment was to insert the following:

For dies, paper, and stamps, being a deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, $51,283.10.

The amendment was concurred in.
The fourth amendment was to insert the following:

For the continuation of the Coast and Geodetic Survey in the eastern division, (or Atlantic and gulf coasts division,) $7,500.

The amendment was concurred in.

The fifth amendment was to insert the following:

For the continuation of the coast and geodetic survey in the western division, (or the Pacific coast division,) $7,500.

The amendment was concurred in.

The seventh and eighth amendments were to transpose the clause

"For Navy pensions to invalids, widows, minors, and dependent relatives, $140,000," from its position in the House bill to come in after the following clause:

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Pensions:
For pensions for Army invalids, widows, minors, and dependent relatives, survivors of the war of 1812, and widows of the war of 1812, $6,500,000.

The amendments were concurred in.
The twelfth amendment was to insert the following:

For continuing the work of adjusting and settling the claims of the several States under the act of Congress approved September 28, 1850, and the acts supplemental thereto and amendatory thereof, for swamp lands, including all claims for swamp-land indemnity, under the acts of March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857, and other acts, $5,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to have some explanation of this

Mr. McMAHON. As I understand the amendment it is for this purpose: The Government of the United States some years ago gave to the various States the swamp lands embraced within their limits. The question arises, what are the swamp lands? I understand that States are claiming a great deal of land which are not properly swamp lands. These lands must be surveyed and examined; and the Government must have some one to protect its rights. There are persons now in the field making this examination, and the appropriation for the purpose has run out. Unless we make this appropriation I understand that the men will be withdrawn from the field and the work stopped.

Mr. DUNNELL. The explanation of the gentleman is satisfac-

Mr. CALKINS. Does this amendment change the existing law in any respect?

Mr. McMAHON. It certainly does not.

Mr. CALKINS. It is simply an appropriation to carry on the sur-weys?

Mr. DUNNELL. For a deficiency in the Land Department,
Mr. McMAHON. Strictly a deficiency for an object already ordered by law.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

The eighteenth amendment was to insert the following:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

National Museum: For steam-heating apparatus and fuel for the new National Museum building, $20,000.

For water and gas fixtures and electrical apparatus for the new National Museum building, $10,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

The nineteenth amendment was to insert the following:

SENATE.

To pay George A. Clarke for services as messenger in charge of the official reporters' room of the Senate from July 1, 1879, to June 30, 1880, inclusive, $1,200.

The amendment was concurred in.

The twentieth and twenty-first amendments were in the following

And the sum of $1,200, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the unexpended balance of any appropriations heretofore made for the support of the southern claims commission is hereby reappropriated for the payment of a clerk, who may be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, at the rate of $100 per month, to complete the records of the said commission and care for the same under the supervision of the Treasury Department.

The amendments were, to strike out the words "of the unexpended balance of any appropriations heretofore made for the support of the southern claims commission," and also to strike out the word "reappropriated" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "appropriated." The amendments were concurred in.

The twenty-second amendment was to insert the following:

For extra labor on the grounds, putting up seeds, and printing labels for the Botanic Garden, $850.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

The twenty-third amendment was, after the words "and that all appointments of such special deputy marshals shall be made by the," to strike out the words "judge of the circuit court of the United States for the district in which such marshals are to perform their duties, or by the district judge in the absence of the circuit judge" and to insert in lieu thereof these words: "circuit court of the United States for the district in which such marshals are to perform their duties; but should there be no session of the circuit courts in the States or districts where such marshals are to be appointed, then and in that case the district judges are hereby authorized to convene their States or districts where such marshals are to be appointed, then and in that case the district judges are hereby authorized to convene their courts for the aforesaid purpose."

Mr. GARFIELD. Is that the whole amendment of the Senate?

The CHAIRMAN. It is. The committee recommend concurrence. Mr. GARFIELD. I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I have no time to enter upon a general discussion of this question, as I would be glad to do and as I hoped to do; but I will offer a few reflections before the vote is taken. Nothing is more unfortunate than the persistent determination of a matority of this House to tack "riders" upon appropriation bills, and thus ake again the indefensible position of last session, that they will coerce another branch of the Government to approve of an independent measure in order to save the Government supplies. There is no valid excuse for persisting in this course. There is no good reason for not offering this amendment and passing it through both Houses as an independent bill. The majority have the power to pass it, and if it is made free from ambiguity I have no doubt it would receive many votes on this side. But the majority have adopted a method to reach the result which is universally acknowledged to be bad, and which they know is especially offensive to the minority. On this ground we are unanimous on this side of the House in the opinion that this amendment ought not to be made to this bill.

In short, to put this measure upon this bill is a challenge to an independent department of the Government, the Executive, to declare whether he will consent to be coerced in order to secure the necessary appropriations. It is a revival of the controversy of the last session that ended so disastrously to the majority. Experience ought to have taught them wisdom and led them to offer this measure by itself.

I now ask attention to the merits of the proposition itself. If the

I now ask attention to the merits of the proposition itself. If the point made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Reed] be good, that the language of this amendment is such that its provisions cannot be fairly and fully executed, his objection is fatal to the measure. In my judgment, however, the pending clause, by necessary implication is a repeal of a part of one of the sections of the election laws, and hence must be incorporated with that section, and be construed and executed as a part of the whole body of the election laws, and I think any court would be compelled to construe it as a part of these laws. Still, if there is a reasonable doubt on that question it is a good reason why that doubt ought to be removed before the amend-

Now, I call attention to the debate on another point. In all that has been said about it, I have noticed what appears to me an utter ignoring of one central fact in relation to the special deputy marshals created by the election law. They are a class of officers wholly unknown to the statutes of the United States except as they appear in the election law. Marshals and deputy marshals have been known in our statutes since 1789, and their powers and duties have been carefully defined; but the office of special deputy marshal never existed in this country until it was created and its duties defined in the sections of the election law of 1871.

To show how completely this office has been confounded in the recent debate with that of deputy marshal, or general deputy marshal as it is called by way of distinction in the statutes, I call attention to section 2021 and the sections immediately following. The duty of the special deputy marshal is to attend all places of registration and voting for members of Congress and "to aid and assist the supervisors of election in the verification of any list of persons who may have registered or voted." This is the primary and chief duty of special deputy marshals. They are really assistants of the supervisors rather than the marshals; and the fact that they are called special deputy marshals does not change the nature of their office or the character of their duties.

It is true that in the part section (2000) they are as it is called by way of distinction in the statutes, I call attention

It is true that in the next section (2022) these officers are made conservators of the peace; but so are the supervisors of the elections and many other officers. But with this exception the special deputy marshals have none of the general executive powers which the law has confided to marshals and their general deputies. They have no authority by virtue of their appointment as special deputies to make arrests and summon the posse comitatus to put down violence at the election. This they can do only when the marshal under his hand and seal in writing specially empowers them so to act, as provided in section 2024. But the general deputy marshals are required to exercise these powers by virtue of the office they hold as defined by the law. From this review of the statutes it will be seen that the chief duty of the special deputy marshals is to accompany and assist the supervisors of the election in the discharge of their quasi-judicial duties; that is, in scrutinizing and verifying the registration and election and detecting any fraud or attempted fraud.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KEIFER obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. GAR-FIELD. It is true that in the next section (2022) these officers are made

Mr. GARFIELD. I thank my colleague. Let me follow this subject a step further. The supervisor cannot leave his post at the ballot-box to follow John Doe and learn whether he has registered or voted under a false name; and therefore this section of the statute (2021) gives the supervisor an assistant, known as a special deputy marshal, who goes out and verifies John Doe and reports the result of his investigation to the supervisor. As this is their chief function, it is clear that the special deputy marshals, in their essential character, are assistant supervisors, and their duties partake of the judicial character of that of their chief.

Under the law as it now stands the supervisors themselves are appointed by the courts and from the different political parties. Now, can any valid reason be given on the merits of the case why their assistants, whose first and chief duty is to aid them in the discharge of their quasi-judicial duties, should not also be appointed by the court as they themselves are appointed, without regard to political affiliation? The argument that these officers should not be appointed. affiliation? The argument that these officers should not be appointed by the court because they are under the orders of the marshal falls to the ground when the plain fact is known that they serve the supervisors rather than the marshal. But we are told that if the special deputies should be appointed from different political parties there would be no unity of action among them in the execution of the law. I am not willing to confess, for I do not believe it to be true, that this country is so far gone into debasement and anarchy that the fair-minded people in any democratic township or ward can truthfully say, "There is no republican in this precinct who can be trusted to aid in executing the election law," or that they will in any republican community say, "There is no democrat in all the borders of this district whom we can trust to help carry out a fair election law." When I am compelled to believe this I shall say that my country is no longer capable of self-government, is no longer worthy of freedom.

worthy of freedom.

Our laws provide for summoning the posse comitatus as the extreme civil remedy for suppressing disorder and keeping the peace. What is the posse comitatus but the whole body of by-standers—men of all political parties? The theory of our Government is that in the last civil resort we summon all men without distinction of party to act civil resort we summon all men without distinction of party to act as conservators of the peace. If the by-standers, without distinction of party, can be trusted to perform this important duty, surely we can trust such as the court on its high responsibility shall appoint to aid in securing a fair election. It ought constantly to be remembered that no one of these special deputy marshals has any power to put down a riot at the polls, unless the marshal, under his hand and seal, in writing, shall specially empower such special deputy to do that thing. And let it also be remembered that this amendment in no way interferes with the power of the marshal to appoint as many general deputy marshals as may be needed to suppress disorder.

I hope I am not altogether a dreamer, forgetful of practical necessi-

I hope I am not altogether a dreamer, forgetful of practical necessities, but I have never been able to see why this measure cannot be executed fully, thoroughly, and justly, provided its language makes it a part of the election law. My friend from Maine [Mr. Reed] has raised some doubt on that point, and in so far as that doubt is justified, it is a fair argument against the clause. But we should look beyond the mere word of the amendment to the objects of national good it may be made to accomplish. I care but little for it as a mere settle-may be made to accomplish. I care but little for it as a mere settlement of a present party controversy.

No thoughtful man can fail to see great danger in a close and bitterly contested national election. In common with my party associates I believe that these election laws are great and beneficent safeguards to the fair and free expression of the national will. Now, if the adoption of a measure like this will harness the two great political parties to these election laws, by the bonds of common consent and wanted to present their advanced in which have been described to the content of the content of the content of the content in the content is the content of the content of the content in the content in the content is the content of the content of the content in the content in the content is the content of the content mutual co-operation for their enforcement, it will be a benefit that will far outweigh any slight advantage that can be gained by retaining wholly within our party the appointment of a few officers to aid the supervisors. I believe this measure will not weaken but will strengthen the authority of the election laws, and will remove from them the only reasonable ground of complaint that the other side have made against them.

I resist the amendment only because it is a rider which should not be a part of the appropriation bill; but as a measure by itself, clearly and plainly drawn, I will cordially support it. I agree that ours is a party Government, and I believe in parties, especially in my own; but when we come to the ballot-box where citizens of all parties meet to enjoy the highest rights of freemen, all parties should unite in enforcing these just and necessary laws designed to secure free, fair, and peaceable national elections throughout the Union.

I now withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. I renew it; and I have but a word or two, Mr. Chairman. I regard this clause relating to the mode of appointing special deputy marshals as a piece of the proposed legislation which we have had pending along through the entire life-time of this Congress, all of which tends, and was so intended, to hedge about the powers of the Government and to so provide when wrong is threatened or actually exists at the polls on the part of those who are anxious to destroy the purity of the ballot-box, the Government should stand there mute and powerless.

This is a piece of it. It is intended to break down the power of the Government at the very fountain-head and at the very source of all our strength.

I do not agree with the remark made by my colleague [Mr. GAR-FIELD] who has just taken his seat, that because this amendment may be by implication a repeal of a portion of the election laws now on the statute-books on the subject of special deputy marshals, that on the statute-books on the subject of special deputy marshals, that it necessarily provides a mode of executing itself. It may be by implication a repeal and a total destruction of that part of our law which I regard wise and necessary, and yet in and of itself not make provision for a peaceful election or the appointment of these special deputy marshals at all. It may be, in other words, a repeal without adding anything or putting anything into the law which can take the place of what is repealed. I think this House already understands my views on this subject of the right and duty and the constitutional power of this Government to events all its laws and especially my views on this stoject of the right and duty and the constitutional power of this Government to execute all its laws and especially election laws. I intended when I rose to make a remark in reply to a reference of the honorable gentleman from Maine [Mr. Reed] which I thought was possibly, by implication at least, a little unkind to my distinguished colleague from Ohio, [Mr. Ewing.] who spoke the other day after the previous question had been ordered. We had the benefit of hearing what he had to say, but not the pleasure yet of reading what he said.

The honorable gentleman from Maine incidentally referred to a recent election in Ohio in which my colleague was prominent, intending, I presume, to refer to the fact that he was recently the standarding, I presume, to refer to the fact that he was recently the standard-bearer of the democratic party in Ohio in the election for governor. Now, in his defense, and I may add he can defend himself, I wish to say he went into that campaign with a high character, not only as a civilian, but as a statesman and a soldier. He went there embodying all that was good, if there be any good, in the democratic party. He had it all with him, and he had clinging to his skirts some of the good things gathered when he trained in the gallant, chivalrous, patriotic, and progressive republican party. He also had embodied in himself everything good that belonged to the national greenback party. With all these things emblazoned on his banner, he went into that campaign under apparently favorable circumstances; but, Mr. Chairman, he and his party were damned at the polls by the patriotic peope of Ohio because of the conduct of the Forty-sixth Congress in the extra session in which the democratic party proclaimed that we peope of Ohio because of the conduct of the Forty-sixth Congress in the extra session in which the democratic party proclaimed that we had a Government of so little value to the people of this country that it should be starved to death, by withholding appropriations unless the President laid his constitutional powers at the feet of the democratic party and allowed it to pass into laws the most vicious things ever proposed by a legislative body in any civilized country.

A continuation of this evil and dangerous course here will cause more men to be led to the sacrifice. Their political blood will be on the heads of their own political friends.

the heads of their own political friends.

We are on the eve of the time when the national political ax will

Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KEIFER. I withdraw my formal amendment. The Senate amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Amendment No. 24, page 7, insert the following:
For repairs to the court-house building in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, $800, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee recommend concurrence in the first Senate amendment by striking out $300,000 and inserting $250,000; so it will read as follows:

For the public printing and binding and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for the Departments, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving, each one.

The amendment was agreed to; and the Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the amendments of the Senate in which non-concurrence is recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.
The Clerk read as follows:

Sixth amendment, page 3, after line 15, insert:
For continuing the construction of the north wing of the State, War, and Navy Departments building, $286,500.

Mr. HUNTON. I believe it is in order to move an amendment to concur, as a substitute for the report of the Committee on Appropriations ?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be in order.

Mr. HUNTON. I move then to concur in the Senate amendment. Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Virginia will not prevail. There is no necessity as far as I am able to perceive, or that has been brought to the attention of the Committee on Apor that has been brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations, for proceeding with such expedition in completing that building, while there are several excellent reasons why it is improper to attempt to complete it with so much greater rapidity than any other public building in the United States. And I desire to call attention to some few facts in this connection. In the Forty-fourth Congress at the first session there was appropriated for this building $320,000. The second session appropriated $400,000. During the Forty-fifth Congress, the first session, we appropriated $325,000, and then at the regular session we appropriated $650,000, and at the last session we appropriated the sum of $515,000. There was, therefore, appropriated by the Forty-fifth Congress $1,160,000, as compared with $750,000 appropriated by the preceding Congress.

We have already appropriated, sir, for the current fiscal year a much larger sum than we appropriate a larger sum during the Forty-fourth Congress. We did appropriate a larger sum during the Forty-fifth Congress than during the Forty-fourth with a view to complete the east wing of that building for occupancy. This building like a few others in this city under the charge of the officer who has control of the public buildings has progressed much more rapidly than any other public building in the country. For the buildings under the Treasury Department we appropriate from year to year at a rate of progress far slower than those appropriated for in the District of Columbia, and for the reason that all the buildings here are under the control of officers with whom we come in personal contact, and they are thus pushed forward propriations, for proceeding with such expedition in completing that control of officers with whom we come in personal contact, and they are thus pushed forward.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no special claim that additional room is needed or that there is a public exigency demanding that this building shall be completed with such expedition, while there is need of additional room for the use of many of the public buildings in other parts of the country outside of the District. There is no pretense made that any economy would result from the hasty construc-tion of the building in the matter of rent. It is well known to gen-tlemen who have gone through it that it is a most extravagant building, and has been carried on at a rate of expenditure the interest of which it is not pretended is less than the rental for buildings suitable for the purposes of the Government would be.

I repeat, sir, that there is no pretense of economy in asking this appropriation.

Again, sir, the great idea upon which this item is pressed is that this most expensive building shall be completed as rapidly as possible, while the other public buildings are allowed to progress slowly from year to year. This building, as I am told by gentlemen who are familiar with foreign capitals, far surpasses any in the most popular and the popular statements. are faminar with foreign capitals, far surpasses any in the most populous and important European states. I have been informed that it exceeds in style, in the details of its construction, and in its cost anything of the kind in Europe. Why, if this great display is to be had in reference to a public building, should it be pressed forward at a rate of progress far beyond that permissible as to other public buildings in the country † I say, Mr. Chairman, why should this building be pressed forward to completion in preference to other public buildings in the country the country which the country is the standard of the public buildings. ings throughout the country which are urged upon Congress by reasons of economy, by reason of high rents, and necessities for additional room for court-houses, for custom-houses, and for revenue offices? The only reason given for it is that they are anxious to go on and complete it as rapidly as possible. That is no good reason. I trust the House will not adopt a policy of that sort and provide that this building shall be pressed forward in advance of the needs and interests of the Government and adopt a different policy as to the other publics. Government, and adopt a different policy as to the other public buildings throughout the country.

I trust they will not be diverted from it because the gentleman who has it in charge, a man of learning and ability, and who has a pride in the structure, whose fame as an architect is well known, who is in the structure, whose fame as an architect is well known, who is enthusiastic to complete it, presents himself and presses it with all the earnestness of his nature. There ought to be a rule in reference to these public buildings all over the land. The Secretary of the Treasury asks no such thing as is requested here to complete the public buildings now in process of erection at Cincinnati, Chicago, or elsewhere. There is no contemplation of finishing those buildings this year or the next year. The amount recommended is perhaps as much as will be sufficient, or as much as is right and proper, and we go foras will be sumicient, or as much as is right and proper, and we go forward slowly with them. Why, sir, should we deviate from that course here? Why is it necessary that this building shall be ready for occupancy by 1883? Why shall we select that above all the other structures in the United States and urge it forward to completion, and say that building, and that alone, shall be put forward rapidly? There is no reason for it, and I trust if there is any preference to be given in this matter, it will be given at those points of practical importance where there are present and pressing emergencies that do not apply in this case.

Mr. HUNTON. I am an economist in regard to the administration of the affairs of this Government. I go for the strictest economy in the expenditure of the people's money. But I recognize to the fullest extent that there may be a policy inaugurated that may be characterized as penny-wise and pound-foolish. I imagine, sir, that when this question is sifted a refusal to concur in the amendment of the this question is sifted, a refusal to concur in the amendment of the Senate may be characterized under the latter head.

It is not the question, Mr. Chairman, whether this is a costly, expensive, or elegant building. The plan of this building, the mode of its construction, all that has been determined upon long ago. The only question here for us to determine is whether this building shall be completed in the shortest practicable time, consistent with economy in the disbursement of the people's money.

Now, I say, Mr. Chairman, that if this appropriation is withheld it not only delays the construction and finishing of this building, but entails a loss upon the Government of the United States. My friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] says it does not matter whether this building is completed in one, two, three, or four years. If there is no necessity for its completion in a given time it ought never to have been begun; but being begun, it ought to be pressed forward with reasonable dispatch to a completion. There is a very good reason for it, sir. We know that the archives of this Government and particularly those growing out of the late war are scattered over this city in buildings not fire-proof; and one single fire in this city would destroy papers and archives of this Government that could not be replaced by ten times the amount asked for in this special appropriation for a deficiency. If it be necessary to preserve those valuable papers, we ought to hasten the completion of the fire-proof building now in course of erection that they may be preserved there for the benefit of future generations.

The Secretary of War, into whose charge this building has been committed by the Congress of the United States, says that a failure to give this sum of money will not only retard the progress and completion of the building but will result in serious loss. I will read a few extracts from the report of Colonel Casey, of the Corps of Engineers, transmitted by the Secretary to Congress as showing the necessity for this appropriation:

At the last session of Congress an appropriation of $600,000 was asked to continue the work on this building during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880. This sum of money was carefully estimated to be barely sufficient, at the then current prices of labor and materials, to carry on the work steadily and advantageously during the period named. The appropriation, as passed, however, contained only $450,000, specially applicable to the north wing.

The work is, therefore, now left, as will be shown below, not only with a fund inadequate for a vigorous prosecution of it until the close of the present fiscal year, but also without the means with which stone and iron work may be procured ahead to obviate an ine vitable delay of some months in the work of construction during the best part of the next working season. Such delay would greatly extend the time necessary for the final completion of this wing, and entail, also, a considerable increase in its total cost, as is always the case with unduly protracted work. Moreover, it is not expected that Congress will pass the next regular appropriation until too late for it to be of service for the accomplishment of the desired end.

If, however, the $340,000 now needed should not be appropriated immediately, then no work can go on during the months of July, August, and September, 1880; and during the remaining part of the season, namely, October, November, and a part of December, but a small force could be employed. The completion of this wing would also be thereby unavoidably delayed fully one year.

Those are the reasons assigned by the Secretary of War which no gentleman on this floor, I think, will undertake to controvert.

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. ELLIS was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. HUNTON.
Mr. HUNTON. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy.
If the Congress of the United States has committed itself to the building of this handsome and costly structure, in the name of common sense if there be no money in the Treasury for the purpose let us go on and complete this building as fast as we can do it practically, with a due regard to economy. Do not let us delay its construction. Do not let these archives of the Government be longer exposed to fire than can be avoided. I say, Mr. Chairman, a refusal to concur in the Senate amendment giving a deficiency appropriation to go on with the work on that new wing of the building would entail loss on the people of the United States and delay the finishing of this wing of that grand structure for the period of twelve months. My friend from Georgia [Mr. Blount] read the amounts appropriated every year since the Forty-third Congress to this building. But he did not tell the House that almost all of these appropriations were either to the wing for the State Department or the wing for the Navy Department, which have been completed and occupied by those two Department.

Mr. BLOUNT. I supposed everybody knew that.
Mr. HUNTON. Perhaps not. Everybody does not know as much as the gentleman from Georgia does.
To show there has been no unnecessary money expended upon the wing of the building that is now in process of construction, the report savs

The total cost of the north wing of the building is not expected to exceed the estimate given in my annual report for the year ending June 30, 1878, namely, $2,192,-414.40, (unless there should be marked changes in the cost of labor and materials,) a sum less by about $1,172,000 than the cost of the south wing, of which the north wing is to be essentially a counterpart.

Now, if the Secretary has saved $1,172,000 in the construction of the north wing over the south wing, it is evident to me there is no unnecessary expenditure of the people's money in prosecuting this work to completion; and I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the committee will concur in the Senate amendment and let the work be finished.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to strike out the last word.

My friend from Virginia has been here for the last three Congresses voting to sustain the Committee on Appropriations on their bills in relation to public buildings in the face of the very argument he has been making to the House for this amendment.

I do not know why my friend should have so suddenly found that these reasons have so much force. The gentleman has never shown his appreciation of them before by expressing his views to the House. Perhaps there may be reasons which the gentleman will appreciate. There is nothing more natural than for a man to be careful of his There is nothing more natural than for a man to be careful of his home interests. It may be possible that the gentleman unwittingly and unconsciously may have been influenced by the fact that the great bulk of this stone comes from quarries in his own State.

Mr. HUNTON. The gentleman must not measure my corn in his

mr. BLOUNT. Not at all. Of course my friend is utterly unselfish when he comes to anything that affects the interests of his people; but it is a little singular that he should now for the first time have found these reasons. He talks of statements which have lately come from the officials in favor of this expenditure, and repeats every idea of them before this House without question. For instance, he tells you that the east wing has cost less than the south wing.

Mr. HUNTON. The north wing.

Mr. BLOUNT. The north wing is not yet in progress of construction. The gentleman must mean the south wing.

Mr. HUNTON. I mean the north wing.

Mr. BLOUNT. The north wing has not been constructed yet. The comparative statements made from the Department as to the cost, comparative statements made from the Department as to the cost, comparative statements made from the Department as to the cost, which the gentleman quotes, must relate to the south and east wing. Now, we all know that when the south wing was in process of construction, the cost of labor, material, and everything else that entered into it was far beyond the cost of such articles when the east wing was constructed. My friend cannot expect the House to take that comparison as any evidence in favor of this appropriation.

The gentleman says that we have finished the wing for the State Department and the wing for the Navy Department. He says that there are important records of the War Department that should be cared for. Now, that is not the reason given in the communication from the War Department. There has been no representation to the Committee on Appropriations that there were any records especially in danger, none at all. It is just an eager desire to go forward and complete this building.

Now, I repeat what I said a year since, that there should be some

Now, I repeat what I said a year since, that there should be some system and method adopted and followed. If we are to go forward and vote every dollar that can be used for the completion of this building, if that is to be the principle upon which we are to act, let us apply it to all the public buildings all over the country. Let us run up our appropriation bills by the millions beyond what the Secretary of the Treasury or any other officer of this Government ever retary of the Treasury or any other officer of this Government ever contemplated or ever sanctioned. I hope we will not do it.

Now, why should we refuse to concur with the Senate in this amendment? It is only by our recent rule, requiring that we should go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the additional appropriations made by the Senate, that we are here at all. And now my friend is not even willing that the conference committees of the two Houses shall consult over this matter and give us their opinion of it.

in of it.

Mr. GODSHALK. I did not intend to say a word on this subject, and would not now do so except for some of the arguments which have been made here. I do not think the Government should put itself into the position of a man who has commenced a building which he is not able to complete.

Liver pothing to say in instifaction or in condensation of the

I have nothing to say in justification or in condemnation of the expenditures heretofore made upon this particular building. For my part I do not know whether they have been wise or unwise. But I do say that it would be wise to finish this building at once. I cannot but believe that the building would be damaged by the elements if it is left in its present unfinished condition, or if the work of completion is unnecessarily delayed. The building is now an unsightly object, and it would be but true economy to go right on and finish it; and the appropriations necessary for that purpose should be made.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise for the purpose of opposing this amendation of the purpose of the purpo ment, and wish to state to the members of the House some of the ment, and wish to state to the members of the House some of the reasons for my opposition.

I oppose this appropriation in part because I am in favor of other sections of this country as well as of this city. It is evident to my mind, as it must be to the mind of every unprejudiced man here, that we cannot complete all of the public buildings that are now in process of construction within the next year. That being so, the question arises upon which of them shall we continue to work and upon which shall we appreciate overstions.

which shall we suspend operations.

I ask gentlemen here who are clamoring to obtain appropriations for public buildings that are needed at home to pause and consider for public buildings that are needed at home to pause and consider the result of their action before they go on and make another lavish appropriation for the completion of this building. When gentlemen go home and are asked why it is that the court-houses, the post-offices, and the custom-houses that are needed all over the country have not yet been built, it would be well for them, if they vote for this appropriation, to acknowledge the truth and say that they preferred to spend money upon public buildings in Washington to making appropriations for public buildings in other parts of the country.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman want this to be a sectional government?

government

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not want it to be a sectional government. I am not one of those whose patriotism is bounded by a river's bank or by my State's line. My admiration and love for the country extend or by my State's line. My admiration and love for the country extend wherever [pointing to the eagle and the flag over the Speaker's desk] that flag floats or that eagle soars. [Cries of "Good!" and applause on both sides.] As gentlemen will bear me witness, I do not come here to throw fire-brands at those who oppose me. I have not therefore followed in the wake of my distinguished friend from Michigan in all respects. Now it crops out that we have already appropriated for the south wing of the building under discussion between three and four million dollars. What the entire building has thus far cost I know not; but altogether it is to cost us between seven and ten million dollars—a building which has on the outside enough banjowork to make a thousand cottages, and on the inside enough beauty to make a hundred palaces, rivaling internally the Taj of the East Indies in beauty and the Alhambra of Spain in magnificence. To continue this extravagant work it is proposed to make another large appropriation, which will necessitate the restriction of appropriations elsewhere. tions elsewhere.

Gentlemen say if we suspend this work there will be loss. How? The building is being constructed of stone; and the material, if it is the sort that should be used in such a work, will not deteriorate with a few months' delay.

The gentleman asks me whether I am sectional. The very fact that I am not sectional makes me stand here and put in a plea in behalf of these court-houses and custom-houses all over the country which are needing appropriations to continue the work upon them, as against this appropriation.

Mr. CONGER. I asked the gentleman the question because he said he was in favor of appropriations for other sections.

Mr. McMILLIN. I know that the gentleman has dwelt upon sectional issues and admired sectionalism so long that when you speak of a section he takes it in a contracted, not a patriotic sense. Here the hammer fell.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw the proforma amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I renew it. Mr. Chairman, I have not very much to say; but I have been "infused" a little with this spirit of the "American flag" and that bird called the "American eagle." [Laughter.] I do not believe with my friend from Tennessee [Mr. McMillin] because an appropriation is asked for a great building in the District of Columbia now in process of construction that for this reason the public buildings throughout the country are going to suffer. I tell my friend who is so patriotic in his thought and so eloquent in his speech that it is not because we are asking a little appropriation here for a building in the District of Columbia that the public buildings throughout the country are suffering. It is because—and I wish to address myself to some of the gentlemen on the Appropriations Committee, more especially to my learned friend [Mr. Blount] who has charge of the public buildings—it is because the Appropriations Committee does not bring forward its bill that we may vote upon it in the House and push forward this necessary work in different sections of the country.

In the great city where I live, and which I have the honor to rep-

In the great city where I live, and which I have the honor to represent, we have a building in process of construction. Three or four hundred thousand dollars have been expended upon it. The Government has made a contract for the stone. That material has come there from Maine and is upon the ground. We are waiting for a little money to put it up; but before this Committee on Appropriations bring in the bill and give us this money the cold of autumn will come, the winds and snow of winter will be upon us, and then we must wait another year. My friend from Tennessee comes from a warm climate, where the bloed runs hot, and he does not imagine that away up in the northern country we can only work four or five months in the year upon our public buildings. Therefore year after year goes around and we do not construct them, because of the delay in appropriating the necessary funds. I say "the delay." Men here are building castles in the air instead of public buildings that the people need. The trouble is not the lack of money. Good God! we have all the money we want.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then, why do you not erect your building?

Mr. BAILEY. Because we cannot get the money appropriated, [laughter;] because you gentlemen here are bringing up your deficiency bills, are bringing up all sorts of political discussion, and making speeches to be read next fall in your political campaigns. You are making presidential candidates and cabinets and all that sort of this action to the property of the property of the property of the presence of the property of the presence of the property of the presence of thing, so that we cannot get a meritorious, non-partisan measure of thing, so that we cannot get a meritorious, non-partisan measure of this kind through the House.

I say again, the trouble is not want of money. We have plenty of money. The people are willing to spend all the money that may be necessary in erecting all needful public buildings. In my judgment the man who thinks he can make capital out of "retrenchment" in the proper construction of public buildings necessary in this country when the proper construction of public buildings necessary in this country. makes a mistake. I believe the people are able and willing to be taxed a sufficient amount to erect suitable, and beautiful, and elegant buildings for the use of our public officers and the transaction of publie business throughout the whole country. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, it is an important inquiry at this time whether or not the Government has money enough to erect this great building in Washington City and at the same time to do justice to the various localities throughout the country. I desire to inquire now of the Committee on Appropriations whether they believe we can afford to make the appropriation demanded for this public build-ing in Washington by the amendment of the Senate, and at the same time make adequate appropriations for buildings in various cities of the country whose necessity and urgency are shown by the evidence before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. And if it be the deliberate judgment of the Committee on Appropriations and the judgment of the House that a sufficient sum of money cannot be appropriated to finish this building in Washington and at the same time construct the necessary buildings throughout the country, then I say let us have the buildings throughout the country and let this

I say let us have the buildings throughout the country and let this work for the present be delayed.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BAYNE. Certainly, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will observe that while all the other public buildings in the country are exactly in the same condition as this, the Secretary of the Treasury has not asked for a dollar for them. This building in charge of the officer controlling the public buildings and grounds of this city by personal importunity has been placed on this bill. It is impossible for us to attempt to construct public buildings throughout the country at the rate this is being constructed in the city of Washington, and the Secretary of the Treasury has never asked for it.

Mr. BAYNE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I say in view of that, and in view of the fact that the accommodations in the city of Washington are adequate to the wants of the Government, let us delay the con-are adequate to the wants of the Government, let us delay the construction of this work and let us make the necessary improvements needed elsewhere.

I wish to call attention to another fact, and I suppose other gen-tlemen will be able to call attention to similar facts in their own localities, that in the judicial district of Western Pennsylvania, which has paid into the National Treasury $84,000,000, which has paid into the National Treasury internal taxes at the rate of $5,000,000 a year, we have no public building adequate to the accommodation of the courts, adequate to the demands of the post-office and the other wants of the Government. And I know whereof I speak when I say that the late judge of the United States district court for the western district of Pennsylvania, a former member of this House, lost his life in consequence of bad accommodations, and the constant din and annovance that beset him and wore away his life in one of the rooms was obliged to occupy as a court-room when the circuit court was sitting. There is but one court-room; there are frequently two courts sitting, and the vast business of one of them at such times has to be done in a side chamber. The lack of accommodations for the post-office, pension, and internal-revenue business is also severely felt. I have not time to explain at length.

When a great crying necessity of that sort exists, appealing to humane as well as business considerations, is it not fair, is it not right, that the million and a half or million and three quarters of inhabitants of Western Pennsylvania who have paid this vast sum of habitants of Western Pennsylvania who have paid this vast sum of money into the Treasury should receive consideration in preference to the city of Washington, whose necessities are not near so pressing? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BAYNE. Just one word in addition. I wish to say, to this very identical building in the city of Washington, Western Pennsylvania has made a large contribution and has paid for many a stone which has entered into it, and I say that, having done so, her claims and her necessities being great should be considered, and if the Committee on Appropriations cannot meet the demands of both, Western Pennsylvania's business center, Pittsburgh, should have the preference over the city of Washington. ence over the city of Washington.

amendments are withdrawn and the question, therefore, recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hunton] that the amendment be concurred in.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 51, noes 84.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

The Clerk read the next amendment of the Senate in which nonconcurrence was recommended, as follows:

Ninth amendment. Insert as follows: Patent Office: To pay for illustrations for the Official Gazette, $3,299.22.

Mr. VANCE. I move concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. VANCE. I move concurrence in that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the Chairman of the Committee on Patents give some reason why that amendment should be adopted?

Mr. VANCE. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that it is essential to the illustration of the Gazette owing to the fact that the type in which the flustration of the Gazette owing to the fact that the type in which the Gazette was printed was very small and, as the type has been enlarged, it costs something more than it otherwise would have cost; and that this amount is lacking to finish the work correctly. That is the information which I received in reference to the matter.

Mr. ATKINS. Is it for purchase of material?

Mr. VANCE. I think not.

Mr. ATKINS. How does he expect to improve the type without additional material?

Mr. VANCE. Larger type was used and more paper, if I understand correctly; but I am sorry I had not opportunity to look further into it. I am informed it is needed to complete the Gazette.

Mr. ATKINS. The Committee on Appropriations has been informed it is needed; but for one I have failed to learn how it is needed. I have made considerable investigation into this Patent Office Gazette, and my opinion is it is an extravagant little luxury. That is my opinion, and unless the chairman of the Committee on Patents can give some good reason why this ought to be allowed, for one I shall vote against it, for I have failed to see any reason why it should be adopted. Mr. VANCE.

Mr. VANCE. I was sorry, Mr. Chairman, I did not have an opportunity to look further into this matter. I should have done so if I had had the time. I understand the reason is such as I have given, that larger type was used in printing the Gazette. It cost more, and consequently there was a deficiency. That is all I am able to say about it, but I have no doubt the facts are as I have stated.

Mr. ATKINS. Until the facts are better known I think we had better non-concur and let the committee of conference take into consideration and decide the question.

Mr. VANCE. This is a very small sum, I think-only $3,209-and hope it will not fail to pass.

The motion to concur in the Senate amendment was not agreed to. The next amendment in which non-concurrence was recommended

No. 10. On page 4, line 9, to strike out the words "to be used" and insert "and,"

The recommendation of the committee was agreed to.

The next amendment in which non-concurrence was recommended

No. 11. On page 4, at the end of line 11, to insert "provided that such commission shall complete the same and make their final report on or before February 1, 1881."

The recommendation of the committee was agreed to.

The next amendment in which non-concurrence was recommended

No. 13. On page 4, line 15, to strike out "the passage of this act and insert "April 1, 1880."

The recommendation of the committee was agreed to.

The next amendment in which non-concurrence was recommended

No. 14. On page 4, lines 16 and 17, to strike out "a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated" and insert "exclusive, $2,325."

The recommendation of the committee was agreed to.

The next amendment in which non-concurrence was recommended

No. 15. On page 4 after line 17, to insert, "Office of the Postmaster-General: For the preparation and publication of post-route maps, $5,000."

Mr. MONEY. I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

When a great crying necessity of that sort exists, appealing to mane as well as business considerations, is it not fair, is it not ght, that the million and a half or million and three quarters of inabitants of Western Pennsylvania who have paid this vast sum of oney into the Treasury should receive consideration in preference the city of Washington, whose necessities are not near so pressing? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MONEY. I move to concur in the Senate amendments. It was cut down to the amount appropriated for the last fiscal year for this purpose was $40,000. The Department recommended $50,000; but N was cut down to the amount which I have stated. But there are some facts connected with the service of that Department which did not come before the Committee on Appropriations; for I am sure that if, they had they would have agreed to the Senate amendment; and I desire now briefly to call attention to them.

In the first place there are twenty-six employes now engaged in the Topographer's Office who are to be paid out of this sum of $35,000 which was appropriated for this year. Out of this fund the Department recovers that if, they had they would have agreed to the Senate amendments.

In the first place there are twenty-six employes now engaged in the Topographer's Office who are to be paid out of this sum of $35,000 which was appropriated for this year. Out of this fund the Department recovered that the service of that Department was connected with the service of that Department that if, they had they would have agreed to the Senate amendments.

In the first place there are twenty-six employes now engaged in the Topographer's Office who are to be paid out of this sum of $35,000 which was appropriated for this year. Out of this fund the Department must pay five draughtsmen, two corresponding clerks, two map mounters and binders, sixteen map-colorers, and a messenger. In addition to this, changes are continually going on which require alterations on these maps. For instance, last yea the case may be. This necessitates the publication of three or four different editions annually with all the necessary work in their preparation. Intermediately the sheets require to be corrected and added to by hand. The necessity for this work being kept up constantly is well known, because these maps are in constant use by the officers and clerks of the Department in preparing the advertisements and and clerks of the Department in preparing the advertisements and annual lettings, &c., and to enable them to keep up with all the details of the service. When it is considered that, in addition to all this, this sum of $35,000 must pay all the expense of stone lithographing, mapping, photo-lithographing, engraving, mounting, coloring, and all the other minute details of that service, besides paying the twenty-six employés, it will strike every one that the amount appropriated is entirely inadequate. The work must be done, and done promptly. It must keep up with all the changes in the postal service. These employes are constantly engaged in their work. They have no holidays. In hot weather and at all other times they must be at their work, because these changes must be kept up with and the maps prework, because these changes must be kept up with and the maps prepared. Then the Department must be prepared to meet the demand for these maps from all quarters. For instance, in 1879, 6,933 maps were issued by the Department. Of that number 544 went to officers and clerks of the Department; 823 went to postmasters throughout the country of the second and third class. Special agents of the rail-way mail service received 914 maps; members of Congress 1,185, and for miscellaneous distribution, including the Departments, and many call of members of Congress, 3,467, making the total number of

Now, Mr. Chairman, the amount appropriated last year for this purpose was, as I have stated, $40,000. The $5,000 additional here asked for brings up the amount for this year only to what it was last, notwithstanding the increase of work will be about 14 per cent. of last year's work.

Mr. ATKINS. What was the increase of business last year?

Mr. MONEY. Seven per cent.; now it is 14 per cent. over last year.
Mr. ATKINS. I do not know that I am particularly opposed to the amendment, but I wisk to ask the gentleman this question: As I understand, this is an appropriation made every year; an appropriation of about $40,000 made every year?

Mr. MONEY. Not every year; last year's appropriation was the

Mr. ATKINS. Last year it was $40,000; this year, $35,000; and you ask $5,000 more, which would make $40,000. This is an appropriation every year pretty much for the same business. My question is: Is not each map for any year the groundwork for any additions to it in the succeeding year? In other words, is it necessary to make the map anew each year?

Mr. MONEY. There are additions more than once a year. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will understand these are photo-lithographs upon stone. It takes a new preparation for

Mr. ATKINS. But not a new stone. That is the point I want to get at. It requires additional work upon the same stone, new lines drawn, but a new stone is not required.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. MONEY. I hope, as my time has been taken up by interruptions, I will be permitted to go on a few moments longer.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope so. I did not rise to interrupt the gentleman. was interested in the facts he was stating and desired to understand them exactly. Mr. MONEY.

The cost of the stone is considerable, it is true, but the expense mainly consists in the new tracing and other work required for each map.

Mr. ATKINS. But the point is that the old tracings, the old lines upon the stone, are left there unless the routes have been changed. You only put on the new ones. And why do you want $40,000 every year for that business?

Mr. MONEY. The whole cost of the lithographing is not $1,000 a year.

Mr. ATKINS. What, then, is this appropriation for? Is it for salaries?

Mr. MONEY. There are twenty-six men in the topographer's office who are to be paid out of this. It includes the cost of lithographing, binding, tracing, engraving, printing, coloring, and a thousand other things necessarily connected with the work. For instance, this year we have for Kansas and Nebraska one map of four sheets. There were upon that map 207 new offices; 89 offices discontinued; 71 offices of which the names were changed; making 367 items to be changed. And I could go on indefinitely and furnish similar examples from the several States. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations several States. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations must see this is a constantly increasing business; that it requires a constant attention to every change throughout the United States, and a correspondence involving an amount of labor on the part of this officer that is not exceeded by any other officer in the employ-ment of this Government. He has asked now simply for the amount ment of this Government. He has asked now simply for the amount given him last year.

Mr. ATKINS. I did not rise to oppose the amendment seriously or at all. I only wanted the gentleman to give some explanation.

Mr. MONEY. That is the explanation.

Mr. ATKINS. And I suppose the gentleman himself is perfectly satisfied the amount ought to be appropriated?

Mr. MONEY. I am perfectly satisfied it ought.
Mr. STONE. I rise to support the motion to concur in the Senate amendment.

If this side of the House had heard all that was said by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads on the other side of the House in support of the amendment it would be unnecesside of the House in support of the amendment it would be unnecessary for me to say more. There can be no question about the necessity of this appropriation. I have given it an examination within the last few days as a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and I will state briefly what are the facts.

The appropriation last year was $35,000; but in the general deficiency bill $5,000 more were added. As the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads has said, the work has invested 44 per court last result and the post-Office and Post-Roads has said, the work has invested 45 are not cover last result in this expression of $40,000.

creased 14 per cent. over last year; and this appropriation of $40,000, as that of last year, is intended to be used to cover the salaries of draughtsmen employed on current and new work, the engraving, lithographing, printing, coloring, and mounting maps, the purchase of copper plates, lithographic stones, map paper, technical books and maps for reference, the payment of all the clerical force, and all the incidental expenses incidental expenses.

By the term "current work" is to be understood that which forms by far the greater part of the duties of the employés of the office, namely, the keeping up what are called the working maps in daily use for reference by the officers and clerks of the Department, both those resident here and those in the field on duty; that is, the post-those resident here and those in the field on duty; that is, the postroute officers, agents, and post-office clerks throughout the country.

For use during the preceding year $35,000 had been allowed in the usual Post-Office bill; which however was increased $5,000 in the general deficiency bill. For the present year the topographer of the Department recommended to the Postmaster-General $50,000, which estimate, however, was reduced by the Postmaster-General so that the recommendation was only $35,000. But the experience of the first half of the present year has shown that the original estimate was more nearly correct than the estimate sent in by the Department. This small amount of $5,000 is asked for to enable the topographer to keep his present force. his present force.

There are about one hundred new post-offices being established per week throughout the country. The names of these new offices must be placed upon the maps, and the new names of old offices where they have been changed. The mail lettings which take place July 1 will make it necessary to place on these maps new routes. Therefore it is very important that the work should not be cut down for the present fiscal year. If the topographer has to furlough a portion of the force he has now in the office the work will accumulate and the efficiency of that branch of the service will materially suffer.

I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. Mr. BLOUNT. This seems to be quite a small matter, but I do not think there are any especial reasons to justify this growth of expenditure in the matter of maps. For a period of eight or ten years the expenditure was steadily $20,000, $25,000, and $30,000 a year. In the last Congress we appropriated an unusually large amount for the the last Congress we appropriated an unusually large amount for the purpose of making post-route maps; all that the Department asked. Within the last year or two there has been a very large increase of the number of employés in connection with these maps. We give for this year a larger sum than was given for any other year except the one immediately preceding. I regret that there is a deficiency now. The simple changing of the names of post-offices and increasing the number of the post-offices does not arise particularly just at this time; it is a matter incident to every year. The adding of a few more names on a route does not necessarily involve the expenditure of thousands of dellars in the way of maps.

of dollars in the way of maps.

This whole matter is but in keeping with almost every item of expenditure in the Post-Office Department. I could name a dozen items for the last year or two in which the Department has gone far beyond the expenditures of previous years, and in most of the cases deficiencies have been created where I think there was no occasion for them.

It is not alone in the making of maps. It occurs in the expenditures for their contingent fund, in expenditures for route agents, for postal-car clerks, for the service of the Department in almost every matter of detail, wherever the Department may see fit to make the

Now, that is not true of any other Department of the Government.

But it would seem that in the Post-Office Department, wherever they may see fit, they will go beyond the limits of the appropriations and come into this House for a deficiency.

Now, I say I do not care a great deal about this matter of maps, but I do care about this disposition shown by the Department to go beyond the appropriations in every item of expenditure, wherever they may see proper to do so, and then to come in here and ask for a deficiency or the work must stop.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I desire to say a word on this motion to concur in the Senate amendment offered by the gentleman from Misconcur in the Senate amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. Money.] I regard this as perhaps the most economical disbursement of money in the Post-Office Department. I have had some experience with these maps; I have one myself and I use it; and I have noticed that these maps are used in the Post-Office Department by almost every clerk there. I regard these maps, carefully corrected by the inserting of new offices, and the erasure of those discontinued every week or so by hand for the use of the Department clerks, Government officials, members of Congress, postal railway clerks all over the country, and postmasters in all the large towns and cities of the country, as perhaps the most economic feature for saving time in the whole Department.

time in the whole Department.

This amount of money which it is proposed by the amendment to add to the appropriations for the current year will not increase the appropriations over those of last year for the same purpose, namely $40,000, although the unprecedented increase in the number of offices all over the country necessarily demands more work.

The lithographic work spoken of by the gentleman from Tennessee

[Mr. ATKINS] involves the expenditure of a very small portion of the amount here named. The great expenditure arises from the employamount here named. The great expenditure arises from the employment of twenty-six or twenty-seven employés, whose duty it is, whenever new post-offices are created—and gentlemen very well know that an average of one hundred per week may be, and I think have been, established—it is the duty of these clerks to trace in with pen and ink, upon each map in use by the various Departments and bureaus, in the most careful way, the names of these offices, distances from contiguous offices, &c., so that when any clerk in any branch of the service desires to ascertain the location of any office, the route upon which it is located, and its distance from any other office, all be has to do is to refer to these maps and in two minutes' time he will he has to do is to refer to these maps and in two minutes' time he will obtain the information which it would require possibly a half hour for him to obtain in any other way. In that way you save the time of these clerks, the time of postmasters, of members of Congress, and of all who use these maps; you save an hour's time frequently by a few minutes' observation of these maps. For that reason I think it is the most economical disbursement of money in the Department. It is wisdom to increase rather than to restrict the use of these maps. I hope the House will concur in the Senate amendment and thus allow hope the House will concur in the Senate amendment and thus allow this work to go on. Otherwise it must stop for a couple of months. Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. We appropriated for the fiscal year of 1879 $35,000 for this work; but we made a deficiency appropriation of $5,000 more, making $40,000 for the last fiscal year. For the current fiscal year we appropriate $35,000; so that if we now appropriate $5,000 for this deficiency the amount of expenditure for this year will be just what it was last year. I think the increase of the postal service in all its branches has been such that the Department cannot get along and do this work justice with less money than was appropriated last year. Of course if we do not give this $5,000, the Department can stop the work.

I cannot add anything to what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Stone] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Shallenberger] have said about the importance of this work. With our numerous and increasing post-routes, with the additions constantly made in the railway service, with the new post-offices established and the old ones discontinued, it is necessary that all these changes should be delineated upon the maps. This has to be done by hand, and it occupies the exclusive time of a number of clerks. There are some States and Territories which have to be provided with new editions of these maps; and I believe one or two have never had new maps. My immaps; and I believe one of two have never had new maps. My impression is that this appropriation ought to be made. It seems to me the topographer's office is getting along pretty well if it does not require us to spend any more this year than was expended last year, although there has been a great increase in the business. If you now concur in the amendment appropriating the $5,000 here asked for, the expenditure in this regard for the current fiscal year will be the same

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, when the Committee on Appropriations reported in favor of non-concurrence in this amendment of the Senate, the committee had had before it nothing very definite upon the subject. But since that time I have seen nothing and heard nothing which changes my mind as to the propriety of non-concurrence. I think that the whole matter of deficiencies in the different departments of this Government is a great wrong to the House of Representatives. Gentlemen on the other side of the House may not feel it as we do; but if situations were reversed they would feel it and speak about it. Yet there ought to be no division upon a question like this. Whenever the House of Representatives appropriates a certain sum of money for a particular service during a given year there experts the result of the resul a certain sum of money for a particular service during a given year there ought to be very powerful reasons operating upon this body before an increase should be granted. Now, we have increased the appropriations for this fiscal year very largely. The appropriations in this bill amount to over $6,000,000; but most of them have good reasons behind them. The appropriation for pensions was made absolutely necessary by the action of both Houses of Congress changing the law after the former appropriation was made. The appropriation for the Internal Revenue Department was made absolutely necessary by an unforcessen circumstance—the extraordinary increase of busiby an unforeseen circumstance—the extraordinary increase of busi by an unforeseen circumstance—the extraordinary increase of business. In these respects the increased appropriations have their apology or justification. But so long as this House of Representatives will sit here and take the assurance of the officer having charge of a department that this or that little expense is necessary, that he must have a certain sum or he will be obliged to discharge this or that body of clerks, just so long you will have, as you have now, deficiencies in every department and bureau under your Government, so that the House of Representatives will practically have no control over the amount of money expended.

the amount of money expended.

Now, I do not see why these people cannot wait two months. If this were to be a final shutting down upon all appropriations for post-route maps, I would say let the appropriation be made. But this appropriation is asked only for the current fiscal year, of which there remain but two months. Can we not do without additional post-route remain but two months. Can we not do without additional post-route maps for the next two months? Cannot the Department wait until the next fiscal year for new post-route maps?

Mr. STONE. These corrections have to be made weekly.

Mr. McMAHON. How many of the maps have to be corrected?

Mr. STONE. All of them.

Mr. McMAHON. What does a mail-route agent or anybody else upon a Pennsylvania route want with a post-route map of Colorado?

Mr. STONE. But he wants the corrections for his own State.

Mr. McMAHON. Only a few can be needed in general and these

Mr. STONE. But he wants the corrections for his own State.
Mr. McMAHON. Only a few can be needed in general, and these can be traced upon the maps that they have. I think it very probable that the knowledge of the local officials as to post-routes is every bit as good as, if not better than, the maps we may furnish them. I think this is a pretext. I do not mean to underrate the intelligence of the Department or bureau that asks this appropriation, but these deficiencies have grown to be a common thing, and if the House of Representatives does not confine its appropriations for deficiencies to what are absolutely right and necessary we shall have no control over appropriations. It is with this view that so far as my vote is concerned I want somewhere to put down my foot.

Mr. STONE. Let it be borne in mind that there is no deficiency here at present.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. Money to concur in the Senate amendment, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 79, noes 41.

The next amendment of the Senate in which the Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence was to strike out "two and insert "four," so as to appropriate $4,000 for extra clerk hire and copying in the State Department.

The amendment was not concurred in.

The next amendment of the Senate in which the Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence was to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$3,000," so as to enable the Secretary of State to purchase the manuscript of the revised consular regulations, prepared by A. B. Wood, chief of the Consular Bureau in the Department of State, and approved by the Secretary of State, for such sum, not exceeding $3,000, as shall seem to him a fair price for the work.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Mr. McMAHON. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed The committee accordingly rose; and the speaker naving resumed the chair, Mr. Whitthorne reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1830, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report back the same, recommending concurrence in some of the amendments and non-con-recommending concurrence in some of the amendments and non-concurrence in others.

Mr. McMAHON. As I understand it, we are not compelled to take the yeas and nays on this bill. Therefore, before calling the previous question I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WADDILL] for the purpose of presenting a matter which, I think, will meet with the concurrence of each member of this House. It is a matter of charity, and after it has been disposed of I will then take the floor

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 5523) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate requested the return of the following:

A resolution of the Senate agreeing to the amendment of the House to the joint resolution of the Senate No. 100, to print extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1879;

A resolution of the Senate agreeing to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 2,500 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year

The message also announced that the Senate had receded from its first amendment, disagreed to by the House, to the bill of the House first amendment, disagreed to by the House, to the bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 2787) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed and requested, the concurrence of the House in a bill of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 1315) making an appropriation for the erection of a light-house and fog-bell on Old Gay Rock, at the entrance of Wickford Harbor, Narragansett Bay.

SUFFERERS IN MISSOURI BY TORNADO.

Mr. WADDILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of this House for a few minutes in favor of a resolution for relief, to which I think there can be and will be no objection on the part of any member in this House. Recently in the State of Missouri, and notably in the district which I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor, a fearful tornado has swept over certain sections, and people who, only the other day, were in comfortable circumstances, have been left destitute, and are to-day, themselves and families, without homes, with no place to go to, living in box-cars or stables or wherever they can ind shelter.

Mr. STEVENSON. It is impossible to hear the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will come to order, and the gentleman from Missouri will please speak a little louder.

Mr. WADDILL. Mr. Speaker, I was saying, as gentlemen doubtless have seen by telegrams published in the morning papers, a terrible tornado has swept over a portion of the State of Missouri, which I have the house to represent on this floor, causing the greatest dehave the honor to represent on this floor, causing the greatest destruction to life and property. The town of Marshfield, with twelve hundred to two thousand people and from four to five hundred houses, has been reduced to wreck and ruin, not more than fourteen houses has been reduced to wreck and ruin, not more than fourteen nouses being left standing. People there are left houseless, homeless, without shelter, and they have petitioned the governor of the State of Missouri to send them tents, but there is not a tent at his disposal. The Secretary of War is willing to furnish tents for the purpose of affording relief to these desolate and suffering people if Congress will authorize him to do so. I therefore ask, by unanimous consent, to introduce a joint resolution (H. R. No. 291) authorizing tents to be loaned to the governor of Missouri for the use of the sufferers by the recent tornado in that State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the joint resolution was read a first and second time.

The resolution, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to loan to the governor of Missouri five hundred tents, or so many thereof as may be required, to be used for the benefit of the sufferers by the recent tornado in that State; said tents to be returned when no longer required for the purpose herein specified.

Mr. FROST. I ask permission to have read two brief extracts from the Saint Louis Republican in relation to this disaster which fully explain the necessity for the passage of this joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

NO TENTS.

[Special to the Republican.]

JEFFERSON CITY, April 20. Adjutant-General Mitchell received this morning a telegram from the mayor and citizens of Marshfield asking for one hundred tents as a loan for the sufferers from the cyclone. Unfortunately there are no tents here, and the general was unable to comply with the request.

MARSHFIELD, April 20.

To the mayor of Saint Louis: Cyclone destroyed Marshfield. Over seventy dead, hundreds wounded. Not fifteen sound houses left. Springfield and Lebanon people are here with provisions. Will want money for destitute.

R. D. BLANKENSHIP, Mayor. WILLIAM SMITH, Postmaster. J. R. HEEDNELL, Secretary Relief Committee.

Mr. FROST. I think nothing further need be said. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. COX. Everybody is for it.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time,

Mr. WADDILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMMEDIATE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. McMAHON demanded the previous question on the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the action of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was concurred in.

Mr. McMAHON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged motion which I desired to make yesterday, and that is to call up the bill touching legislation in regard to trade-marks to carry out certain treaties made between this country and foreign governments.

Mr. CONGER. Is this a privileged question?

Mr. COX. It is. The Committee on the Judiciary was allowed to report at any time. I made the motion, I remember, very distinctly.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I ask to call up a bill (H. R. No. 5088) to authorize the registration of trade-marks and protect the same, which was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary as a substitute for House bill No. 2573 and House joint resolution No. 125, in order that it may be considered at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 5088) to authorize the registration of trade-marks and protect the same.

Be it enacted, &c., That cwners of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations, or with the Indian tribes, provided such owners shall be domiciled in the United States, or located in any foreign country which, by treaty, convention, or law, affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States, may obtain registration of such trade-marks by complying with the following requirements:

First. By causing to be recorded in the Patent Office a statement specifying name, domicile, location, and citizenship of the party applying; the class of merchandise and the particular description of goods comprised in such class to which the particular trade-mark has been appropriated; a description of the trade-mark itself, with fac-similes thereof, and a statement of the mode in which the same is applied and affixed to goods, and the length of time during which the trade-mark has been used.

Second. By paying into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $25, and complying with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of SEC. 2. That the application prescribed in the foregoing section must, in order to create any right whatever in favor of the party filing it, be accompanied by a written declaration verified by the person, or by a member of a firm, or by an officer of a corporation applying, to the effect that such party has at the time a right to the use of the trade-mark sought to be registered, and that no other person, firm, or corporation has the right to such use, either in the identical form or in any such near resemblance thereto as might be calculated to deceive; that such trade-mark is used in commerce with foreign nations, or Indian tribes, as above indicated; and that the description and fac-similes presented for registry truly represent the trade-mark sought to be registered.

SEC. 3. That the time of the receipt of any such application shall be noted and recorded. But no alleged trade-mark shall be registered unless the same appear to be lawfully used as such by the applicant in foreign commerce or commerce with Indian tribes as above mentioned, or is within the provision of a treaty, convention, or declaration with a foreign power; nor which is merely the name of the applicant; nor which is identical with a registered or known trade-mark owned by another and appropriate to the same class of merchandise, or which so nearly resembles some other person's lawful trade-mark as to be likely to cause confusion or mistake in the mind of the public, or to deceive purchasers. That every person who fraudulently fills, or causes or procures to be fraudulently filled, any package to which is affixed any trade-mark, registered pursuant to the statutes of the United States, or any colorable imitation thereof, calculated to deceive the public, with any goods of substantially the same descriptive properties as those referred to in said registration, knowing the same to be counterfeit, or not the genuine goods referred to in said registration, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished as prescribed in the fourteenth section of this act.

SEC. 17. That any person or persons who shall, with intent to defraud any person or persons, knowingly and willfully cast, engrave, or manufacture, or have in his, her, or their possession, or buy, sell, offer for sale, or deal in, any die or dies, plate or plates, brand or brands, engraving or engravings, on wood, stone, metal, or other substance, molds, or any false representation, likeness, copy, or colorable imitation of any die, plate, brand, engraving, or mold of any private label, brand, stamp, wrapper, engraving on paper or other substance, or trade-mark, registered pursuant to the statutes of the United States, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished as prescribed in the fourteenth section of this act.

SEC. 18. That any person or persons who shall, with intent to defraud any person or persons, knowingly and willfully make, forge, or counterfeit, or have in his, her, or their possession, or buy, sell, offer for sale, or deal in, any represe shall, on conviction thereof, be punished as prescribed in the fourteenth section of this act.

Sec. 20. That if the owner of any trade-mark, registered pursuant to the statutes of the United States, or his agent, make oath, in writing, that he has reason to believe, and does believe, that any counterfeit dies, plates, brands, engravings on wood, stone, metal, or other substance, or molds of his said registered trade-mark are in the possession of any person, with intent to use the same for the purpose of deception and fraud, or makes such oaths that any counterfeits or colorable imitations of his said trade-mark, tabel, brand, stamp, wrapper, engraving on paper or other substance, or empty box, envelope, wrapper, case, bottle, or other package, to which is affixed said registered trade-mark not so defaced, erased, obliterated, and destroyed as to prevent its fraudulent use, are in the possession of any person, with intent to use the same for the purpose of deception and fraud, then the several judges of the circuit and district courts of the United States and the commissioners of the circuit courts may, within their respective jurisdictions, proceed under the law relating to search-warrants, and may issue a search-warrant authorizing and directing the marshal of the United States for the proper district to search for and seize all said counterfeit dies, plates, brands, engravings on wood, stone, metal, or other substance, molds, and said counterfeit trade-marks, colorable imitations thereof, labels, brands, stamps, wrappers, engravings on paper or other substance, molds, counterfeit trade-marks, colorable imitations thereof, labels, brands, engravings on paper or other substance, metal, or other substance, molds, counterfeit trade-marks, colorable imitations thereof, labels, or other packages, are to be used by the holder or owner for the purposes of deception and fraud, that any of said judges shall have full power to order all said counterfeit dies, plates, brands, engravings on wood, stone, metal, or other s brands, stamps, wrappers, engravings on paper or other substance, empty boxes, envelopes, wrappers, cases, bottles, or other packages, to be publicly destroyed.

SEC. 21. That any person who shall, with intent to defraud any person or persons, knowingly and willfully aid or abet in the violation of any of the provisions of this act, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $500, or imprisonment not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The report submitted by the committee carried with it not only the bill known as the Armfield bill, but the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Mc-Coid,] touching the same subject-matter. The reference covers both, and therefore I made a motion to take up the report and the matter covered thereby, and in the argument I shall make in favor of the bill takel also present the view of the Indicionar Committee in or. bill I shall also present the view of the Judiciary Committee in op-bill I shall also present the view of the Judiciary Committee in opposition to the resolution.

In 1870 Congress passed the dozen sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States, sections 4937 et seq., relating to trade-marks. They prescribed the terms upon which any person in the United States or "in any foreign country which, by treaty or convention, affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States," entitled to a trade-mark, should be protected therein. The remedies thereby prescribed for infringement of one's rights in that regard were injunction and action on the case for damages. In Angust, 1876, Congress passed another act "to punish the counterfeiting of trade-mark goods and the sale of or dealing in of counterfeit trade-mark goods." goods and the sale of or dealing in of counterfeit trade-mark goods." (United States Statutes, volume 19, page 141.) That act made many crimes relating to trade-marks, each punishable "by fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not more than two years, or both such fine and imprisonment."

In November, 1879, the Supreme Court held all that legislation to be unconstitutional and void. See Steffins and others vs. The United States, October term Supreme Court, 1879. Congress had never legislated upon the subject before; nor since has there been any such legislation, unless the registration of prints and labels under the copyright act of 1874 (Statutes 18, p. 79) he so alread. It however is on right act of 1874 (Statutes 18, p. 79) be so classed. It, however, is on a different subject, and, when attacked, may fall under the same condemnation. The United States is therefore without any statutory rules for registration and protection of trade-mark rights.

By some this is thought to be a serious want. Those who think it can be now constitutionally supplied ask Congress to pass the bill called the Armfield bill, "To authorize the registration and protection of trade-marks." That bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce on the 9th of December last, and on the 17th of that month referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

That bill proposed to put trade-marks under the control of a salaried officer, newly made by the bill, and allow an appeal from his decision omeer, newly made by the bill, and allow an appeal from his decision to the supreme court of the District of Columbia. In all other respects it is substantially, indeed almost literally, the legislation of 1870 with this modification only: it is confined to commerce with foreign nations, with the Indian tribes, and among the several States. Its friends claimed that thus all objections on the score of constitutionality would be removed. It will be perceived from the report which I had the beneric approach that the Indianay Committee did which I had the honor to present that the Judiciary Committee did not agree to that conclusion. So far as I am advised, that committee unanimously believed that so much of that bill as applied to commerce among the several States would be unconstitutional. That I may be understood, let me call attention to the points made in that report.

TRADE-MARKS ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE NOT IN CONGRESSIONAL POWER.

Congress has power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes." (Constitution, article 1, section 8.) But is legislation as to trade-marks regulating commerce?

The Supreme Court in the case of Steffins, heretofore cited, avoided any expression of opinion on this point. They said only this, namely:

any expression of opinion on this point. They said only this, namely:

The argument is that the use of a trade-mark—that which alone gives it any value—is to identify a particular class or quality of goods as the manufacture, produce, or property of the person who puts them in the general market for sale. That the sale of the article so distinguished is commerce. The trade-mark is, therefore, a useful and valuable aid or instrument of commerce, and its regulation by virtue of the above provision of the Constitution belongs to Congress, and that the act in question is a lawful exercise of this power.

It is not every species of property which is the subject of commerce, or which is used or even essential in commerce, which is brought by this clause of the Constitution within the control of Congress. The barrels and casks, the bottles and boxes in which alone certain articles of commerce are kept for safety and by which their contents are transferred from the seller to the buyer, do not thereby become subjects of congressional legislation more than other property. (Nathan vs. Louisiana, 8 How., 73.) In the case of Paul vs. Virginia, (8 Wallace, 168.) this court held that a policy of insurance made by a corporation of one State on property situated in another was not an article of commerce, and did not come within the purview of the clause of the Constitution we are considering. "They are not," says the court, "commodities to be shipped or forwarded from one State to another, and then put up for sale." On the other hand, in the case of Almy vs. The State of California, (24 How., 169.) it was held that a stamp duty imposed by the Legislature of California on bills of lading for gold and silver transported from any place in that State to another out of the State was forbidden by the Constitution of the United States, because such instruments were a necessity to the transaction of commerce, and the duty was a tax upon exports.

The question, therefore, whether the trade-mark bears such a relation to commerce in gener ber term, 1879.

Let us examine the question. A trade-mark is property but is not the subject of commerce. It is not bought or sold. In itself it is worthless. It is only valuable when attached to merchandise which worthless. It is only valuable when attached to merchandise which is to be sold. In the license cases it was argued that diseases, &c., attended commerce, and therefore disease-breeding commerce was beyond State control and within the Federal jurisdiction. But Chief-Justice Taney said no; "they are not things to be regulated and trafficked in." (5 How. U. S. R., 576.) Trade-marks are not essential to commerce. Out of the myriads of things trafficked in by the people of this country, less than eight thousand are under trade-marks. Every manufactured article trafficked needs, for protection and shipping, a barrel or cask, a bottle or box or wrapper; and yet who would have ever supposed them subject to congressional control if the decision in United States vs. Steffins had omitted to say they were not?

A policy of insurance is sold and sent from one State to another, A policy of insurance is sold and sent from one State to another, and may be transferred again and again. But in no fair sense is it an article of merchandise. "They are not commodities to be shipped or forwarded from one State to another and then be put up for sale," said the court in Paul vs. Virginia, and they are "mere contracts of indemnity against loss by fire," said Justice Field in the telegraph case, (96 U. S. R.,) and therefore they were under State jurisdiction, and not Federal control.

When affixed to merchandise to identify its origin or quality or the like, what is a trade-mark but "a contract of indemnity against loss" by fraud or deceit? It is but the owner's guarantee. It is weaker in this regard than the policy of insurance, for the trade-mark is never sold. Possibly it is stronger than the policy, because attached to a thing sold. But I think not. A merchant in Georgia shipping his cotton to New York or Liverpool wishes to guarantee its quantity and quality, and writes such paper to whom it may concern in his office. It is a contract controlled wholly by State laws. Congress cannot legislate to punish any one for counterfeiting that paper, or using that paper to defraud another. Surely the wildest decamer would not call such legislation regulating companies. not call such legislation regulating commerce. Now how is the case changed, if that paper be pasted on the bale of cotton? But when so pasted on it would be just such a contract as a trade-mark attached to an article; no more and no less.

True, the court has held that a State may not tax a bill of lading.

But why? Not because Congress had power to legislate as to them, but because the States were prohibited from taxing exports, &c., and taxing such contracts was virtually taxing exports. They said:

A bill of lading, or some other instrument of the same import, is necessarily always associated with every shipment of articles of commerce from the ports of one country to another. The necessities of commerce require it. It is hardly less necessary to the existence of such commerce than casks to cover tobacco or bagging to cover cotton, when such articles are exported to a foreign country, for no one would put his property in the hands of a ship-master without taking written evidence of its reception on board the vessel and the purpose for which it was placed in his hands. * * * A bill of lading, or some equivalent instrument of writing, is invariably associated with every cargo of merchandise exported to a foreign country, and consequently a duty upon that is in substance and effect a duty on an article exported.—Almy vs. California, 24 Howard, R. 170.

In United States vs. Steffins you observed the court said that decision was "because such instruments were necessities of commerce." yet in Steffins's case they also said not even such necessity would make congressional control complete. For surely the box or barrel or other receptacle of the thing sold is as necessary to commerce as a bill of lading, and they are not in congressional control. Nor can the opinion of the divided court in Pennsylvania Telegraph Company vs. Western Union Telegraph Company, 96 U.S.R., 9, be used against this view. It rather strengthens it. The court there said the electric telegraph has become "one of the necessities of commerce. It is indispensable as a means of intercommunication, but especially so in commercial transactions." * * * "Goods are sold and money paid upon telegraphic orders; contracts are made by telegraphic correspondence; cargoes secured and the movement of ships directed." But in no fair sense can trade-marks be likened to telegraphic communication. They are not yet in Steffins's case they also said not even such necessity would make trade-marks be likened to telegraphic communication. They are not sent forward to secure contracts and the like. And it took both the commerce clause and the post-office clause to support that opinion. I repeat, trade-marks are but a convenience of commerce. They are no more necessary to commerce than are the photographed or engraved euts of manufactured articles, nor more numerous. And if this legislation would be constitutional, Congress may engage in regulating the picture business.

But valuable as are the opinions of the Supreme Court they should not be the measure of the power we shall exercise in Congress. They pass upon State laws said to conflict with the supreme law, and may give the benefit of doubts in favor of the Federal power or the States as they like. But Congress is co-ordinate with the court and the legas they like. But Congress is co-ordinate with the court and the legislative body of the Government, whose ermine they wear. They must therefore hold Congressional legislation valid unless manifestly and plainly unconstitutional. The only safety, then, is for Congress to solve its doubts against the exercise of power. If it will not, the result is Congress can do all things not plainly forbidden. This is at war with the plan of our fathers. That plan restricted Congress to the exercise of certain delegated powers. One of them was regulating commerce. That power was delegated to the United States that the States might not crimbe commerce. the States might not cripple commerce

The sixth article of confederation declared:

No State shall lay any imposts or duties which may interfere with any stipula-tions in treaties entered into by the United States, &c.

By article 9 the States reserved the power of "imposing such imposts and duties on foreigners as their own people are subjected to" and the power of "prohibiting the exportation or importation of any species of goods or commodities whatsoever." The Constitution gave Congress the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States and with the Indian tribes" (article 1, section 7) and (by article 2, section 10) put the States under this disability:

No State shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws: and the net produce of all duties and imposts, laid by any State on imports or exports, shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of the Congress.

Freedom from State constraint was the thing sought and secured. The right to regulate the commerce, thus freed from conflicting State control, was not to grant such control as is here claimed. Grant this demand and who can deny the right of Congress to prescribe the weight and size of a bale of cotton, the form of a package for wheat or tobacco, to be shipped from one State to another?

I know that Congress has undertaken to control the shipment of cattle and nitro-glycerine from one State to another. But if that legislation be constitutional it may rest upon that defensive power inherent in all governments to protect their subjects or citizens from disease and death. On that ground the Supreme Court of the United States, in the License cases, sustained the power of the States to legislate against intoxicating drinks, even though such legislation touched imports, &c. Besides, cattle and nitro-glycerine are things sold while trade-marks are not. Thus the Committee on the Judiciary found itself compelled to strike interstate commerce from the bill.

FOREIGN TRADE-MARKS.

The next question was, can we constitutionally legislate as to for-eign trade-marks? The President of the United States has "power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur." (Constitution, article 2, section 2.) Congress has "power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof." (Article 1, section 8, Constitution.) Congress, though powerless in this regard, under the commerce clause, may so legislate in aid of the treaty-making power. This idea is fully illustrated and sustained by the Supreme Court in United States vs. Coombs, 12 Peters's Reports, 78. The question was, whether certain obstructions to commerce, not at sea nor within tide-marks, but on land, could be punished by Congress? The court said:

Any offense which thus interferes with or obstructs or prevents such commerce and navigation, though done on land, may be punished by Congress under its general authority to make all laws necessary and proper to execute their delegated constitutional authority.

I do not enter into the extent of the treaty-making power. The contest between that power and the control of all commercial questions by Congress, which began with the treaty with the Creek Indians in 1790 and remains unsettled to this day, is not involved in this issue. Sufficient for present purposes is the decision of Marshall, Chief-Justice, in Foster & Elam vs. Neilson, 2 Peters: "A treaty is to be regarded in courts of justice as equivalent to an act of the Legislature whenever it operates of itself, without aid of any legislative provision," which language was adopted in United States vs. Forty-three Gallons of Whisky, (96 United States Reports, 146.) This being true, all that is desirable in this regard may be done by the treaty-making power alone, or by it and Congress together. The treaty-making power has entered into certain obligations as to trade-marks with various foreign nations. That the exact nature of these obligations may be understood, I quote them even at the expense of being tedious.

TREATIES AS TO TRADE-MARKS.

We had many commercial treaties prior to the trade-mark act of 1870. But in three of them only were trade-marks mentioned or considered, namely, those with Russia and Belgium, made in 1869, and with France, made in 1869. That with Russia was as follows:

with France, made in 1869. That with Russia was as follows:

The high contracting parties, desiring to secure complete and efficient protection to the manufacturing industry of their respective citizens and subjects, agree that any counterfeiting in one of the two countries of the trade-marks affixed in the other on merchandise, to show its origin and quality, shall be strictly probabiled and repressed, and shall give ground for an action of damages in favor of the injured party, to be prosecuted in the courts of the country in which the counterfeit shall be proven.

The trade-marks in which the citizens or subjects of one of the two countries may wish to secure the right of property in the other, must be lodged exclusively, to wit, the marks of citizens of the United States in the department of manufactures and inland commerce at St. Petersburg, and the marks of Russian subjects at the Patent Office at Washington.

Subsequently in Marks 1874, the serves position (they in marks of security).

Subsequently in March, 1874, the same parties "having recognized the necessity of defining and rendering more efficacious" said stipu-lations, "agreed upon the following arrangements:"

ARTICLE I.

With regard to marks of goods, or of their packages, and also with regard to marks of manufacture and trade, the citizens of the United States of America shall enjoy in Russia, and Russian subjects shall enjoy in the United States, the same protection as native citizens.—Coddington's Dig. of Trade-Marks, 484, 485, 486.

The treaty of 1868 with Belgium was the same as that with Russia, except that the words "and repressed" after "shall be prohibited" were omitted, Brussels was substituted for St. Petersburg, and this was added: "It is understood that if a trade-mark has become public property in the country of its origin, it shall be equally free to all in the other country." This treaty was renewed in hace verba in 1875. (1b., 488, 489, 490, 491.)
The French treaty was:

ARTICLE I.

Every reproduction in one of the two countries of trade-marks affixed on the other to certain merchandise to prove its origin and quality is forbidden and shall give ground for an action of damages in favor of the injured party, to be prosecuted in the courts of the country in which the counterfeit shall be proven, just as if the plaintiff was a subject or citizen of that country.

The exclusive right to use a trade-mark for the benefit of citizens of the United States in France, or of French subjects, in the Territory of the United States cannot exist for a longer period than that fixed by the laws of the country for its own citizens.

"If the trade-mark has become public property in the country of its origin it shall be equally free to all in the other country." Paris is origin it shall be equally free to all in the other country." Paris is named as the place for recording trade-marks of our citizens, the Patent Office in Washington for Frenchmen. (1b., 491, 492.)

Those treaties made after the act of 1870 were with Austria, the German Empire, Great Britain, and Brazil. That with Austria, proclaimed in 1872, is exactly like that with France, except that after declaring such reproduction of trade-marks "is forbidden" the language is:

And shall give to the injured party ground for such action or proceedings to prevent such reproduction and to recover damages for the same as may be authorized by the laws of the country in which the counterfeit is proven just as if the plaintiff was a citizen of that country.—Ib., 494.

That with the German Empire, proclaimed on the same day in 1872, simply declared:

With regard to the marks of labels of goods or of their packages, and also with regard to patterns and marks of manufacture and trade, the citizens of Germany shall enjoy in the United States of America, and American citizens shall enjoy in Germany, the same protection as native citizens.—Ib., 496.

The treaty with England proclaimed in 1878 declared:

The subjects or citizens of each of the contracting parties shall have in the dominions and possessions of the other the same rights as belong to native subjects or citizens, or as are now granted or may hereafter be granted to the subjects and citizens of the most favored nations in everything relating to property in trademarks and trade-labels.

And it obliged the claimant only to "fulfill the formalities required by the law of the respective countries." (20 U. S. Stats., 703.)

The treaty with Brazil proclaimed in 1879 gives "the same rights as belong to native citizens or subjects in everything relating to property in marks of manufacture and trade," and declares that "any person who desires to obtain the aforesaid protection must fulfill the formalities required by the laws of their respective countries." 1879.)

Those treaties undertook to secure to the citizens of those foreign nations with respect to trade-marks all the rights which our own citizens enjoyed; no more, but no less. What those rights were was fully stated by Judge Story in 1844, in Taylor vs. Carpenter:

When the plaintiffs were manufacturers in England of "Taylor's Prussian thread," and the defendant, in America, imitated their names, trade-marks, envelopes, and labels, and placed them on thread of a different manufacture: held that it was a fraudulent infringement by the defendant of the right of the plaintiff, for which equity would grant relief, whether other persons had or had not done the same. In the courts of the United States alien friends are entitled to claim the same protection of their rights as citizens.—3 Story's Reports, 458.

ame protection of their rights as citizens.—3 Story's Reports, 458.

That "aliens have the same rights as citizens in respect to the protection of their trade-marks" was decided as to "Chinese Liniment" in 1849 by Judge McLean. (See Coffeen vs. Brunton, 4 McLean, 516.) And so Davis's "Pain Killer" was protected in Canada in 1867, "L L" whisky in Ireland in 1863, and others which might be cited. And at the date of the treaties with France, Belgium, and Russia, and long before, besides the protection given in the United States courts and all our State courts by injunctions and actions for damages, many of the State courts punished infringement of trade-marks by fine and imprisonment. It was so in Connecticut, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, Nevada, New York, Ohio, Oregon, and Pennsylvania. And many others since then have enacted such penal statutes.

All these rights were acquired by such treaties for the foreign subjects because possessed by our citizens. The treaties proprio vigore gave those rights. Our Patent Office, the place designated in the treaties for depositing those trade-marks, was established already.

treaties for depositing those trade-marks, was established already. Many foreign trade-marks were lodged there before the act of 1870 Foreign manufacturers and traders and our officers regarded these treaties as self-executing.

But as the treaty with Russia declared that counterfeiting of trademarks "shall be strictly prohibited and repressed," as that with Belgium said it "shall be prohibited," and as the common law was not in force in Russia, Belgium, or France, the legislation of 1870 was urged upon Congress. It is plain from the debates that it never could have passed had it not been thought important in aid of those treaties.

(See the remarks of Senators Summer and CARPENTER on this point, Congressional Globe, volume 80, page 4821.)

And now petitions from the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, and from some of the largest and most influential manufacturers of New York, ask for such legislation. And they urge no reason therefor but York, ask for such legislation. And they urge no reason therefor but our treaty and commercial relations with foreign nations. No other petitions on the subject have been presented to Congress, so far as the Committee on the Judiciary is advised, except one from Boston in favor of a constitutional amendment hereafter mentioned. The Committee on the Judiciary recognized the importance of maintaining not only every treaty obligation of the United States, but of doing so in such manner as to keep the confidence of the world. They know the benefits of foreign markets for the products of the brain and muscle of our people. They confess to a feeling of pride that we not only minister to the comfort and pleasure of our neighbors, but that they dig their wealth from the bowels of the earth with Yankee picks, and keep it away from thieves with Yankee locks. And, therefore, they directed me to report Mr. Armfirially's bill for passage, striking out only the new office and new salary because we the well they are reported to the product of the salary because we thought them unnecessary, and interstate commerce because it could not be constitutionally retained.

thought them unnecessary, and interstate commerce because it could not be constitutionally retained.

If the foregoing position is true, the whole subject of trade-marks with those in treaty relations to us is eliminated from this discussion. What else may be eliminated? Many articles which bear trade-marks are patented. The patentee must fix thereon or on the package containing the same the word "patented," stating the day and year of the patent. He may put that in any form which will give notice, and sign it by his name. Should any one in any manner "mark upon anything made, used, or sold by him for which he has not obtained a patent the name or any imitation of the name " of the patentee without his consent, or if such person puts "patent," "patentee," or "letters-patent," "or any word of like import with intent to imitate or counterfeit the mark or device of the patentee" without such consent, he shall for each offense suffer a penalty of not less than $100. (Revised Statutes, section 4900.) If this statute is not now broad enough to protect all such trade-marks as may be affixed to patented articles, it can be made so by an amendment of the patent laws.

The Committee on the Judiciary have omitted to say anything in the bill on this subject. They doubt whether such an incongruous medley as a civil punishment for infringing a patent or the mark thereof as is now provided by law, with a criminal proceeding to punish such infringement of the same mark if registered as a trademark, could do any good. It might do harm, and we are not aware that patentees are asking any further protection than is given by present laws.

present laws.

THE PENAL SECTIONS OF THIS ACT.

Thus far I am in full accord with the Committee on the Judiciary on the bill reported for passage. But here I part from them, and pur-suant to notice given in committee, at the proper time, will move to strike out all the penal sections. The report of the Committee on the Judiciary shows that they added to the Armfield bill the penal enactments of 1876, (19 Statutes, 141, 142,) being all of the reported bill after section 14. Those sections punish every person who deals in or sells or keeps or offers for sale or procures the sale of goods covered by a colorable imitation of a trade-mark, or puts a trade-mark on goods made to imitate trade-mark goods, or fills a bottle or box, &c., covered by a trade-mark with an imitation of its intended contents, when plates &c. to make false trade-marks, or imitate a trade-marks. overed by a trade-mark with an imitation of its intended contents, or has plates, &c., to make false trade-marks, or imitate a trade-mark, or sells a bottle, &c., having on it a trade-mark which he can erase without destroying it. If he do either with intent to defraud, the punishment is a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not more than two years, or both such fine and imprisonment. It punishes aiders and abettors with one-half of said fine and one-half of the imprisonment.

To those sections I cannot assent. Mark it! No treaty obligation demanded this act of 1876. The bill was introduced into the Senate and demanded this act of 1876. The bill was introduced into the Senate and passed there without discussion. It was so carelessly written that the language covered commerce wholly within the States, as well as without. It was so hastily gotten up that its short title is ungrammatical and the Supreme Court did not know what Congress intended to express by the act. One of its friends sought to pass it in the House without a reference, claiming it was a bill to "protect honest merchants and manufacturers." (17 RECORD, 4493.) It was referred, not to a law committee, but to the Committee on Patents, who had nothing to do with crimes. They reported it back saying for hundred. to a law committee, but to the Committee on Patents, who had nothing to do with crimes. They reported it back saying four hundred manufacturers, merchants, and dealers, in New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, had petitioned for its passage. They gave no other reason therefor, but called the previous question. At the last moment Mr. Hewitt of New York tried to protest for the thousands of small dealers in New York who might be entrapped by its provisions, but it was forced through. It is not strange that a creature of such hasty and violent birth languished, and, languishing, died in less than three years. The eight eminent doctors who tried to save its life said they knew not what was its ailment except that it was stuffed with incongrous food, and that it might have died anyhow even if it had not swallowed the States.

Shall we resurrect the corpse? Shall we give to those owners of Shall we resurrect the corpse? Shall we give to those owners of trade-marks, protected by treaties which pledged only such protection as our own citizens have for theirs, this high right which our citizens cannot enjoy in this country? It would be at least decent to wait till we could put our own citizens on the same plane with foreigners and Indians. Wait till the McCoid amendment becomes a part of the Constitution—von who are its passage. Do not exact this could of the Constitution—you who urge its passage. Do not enact this and then urge McCoid's amendment because the foreigner and Indian is better protected than our citizen, amend the Constitution to make it fit a statute.

Have gentlemen thought of the severity of this punishment? He who fraudulently imitates a mark or device on a patented article commits no crime. He may be sued for $100 for each offense. (Revised Statutes, 4900.)

Take another case. On an American vessel in mid-ocean is a young girl returning home. In charge of the master, she has the right to giri returning nome. In charge of the master, she has the right to be secure against even discourtesy. But forgetful of his duty as a man, despising his sacred trust, in the darkness of night he attacks her, alone, friendless, helpless, and with threats seduces and deflowers her. In Georgia we could put one at hard labor for twenty years for such a crime. Death would be too good for the scoundrel. But see that man at the bar of a United States court, convicted of thus violating section 5349 of the Revised Statutes, and hear the judge, havening with virtuous indication propugates on him the extreme thus violating section 5349 of the Revised Statutes, and hear the judge, burning with virtuous indignation, pronounce on him the extreme penalty of the law, a fine of $1,000 and imprisonment for twelve months. And imagine him adding, "I regret that you are not found guilty of fraudulently putting a false drink in a bottle having on it the trade-mark of LL whisky; for then I could punish you at least double as much as I can for this diabolical crime."

But not only is the punishment too severe, but it is bad policy to increase the criminal jurisdiction of the United States courts, unless it be necessary in order to maintain the power, dignity, or purity of the Government or some of its departments. Before the war it was rare to see a prisoner before such courts. Violations of the postal laws were almost the only crimes then known to its practice. now the business is changed. The criminal dockets occupy the whole time of the courts. The swarm of consequent officers are a burden to the people, and the penalties inflicted are often unjust to the crim-

This punishment means more than like punishment inflicted by State authority. It means pursuit by men who arrest not to vindicate the law, but to be paid for releases. It means a system of spies in every neighborhood. It means arrest by military and not civil officers only. It means indignities to prisoners. It means trial away from home and without convenient counsel and witnesses. It means conviction and banishment to distant prisons, far off from the aid and sympathy of friends and children and wives. Under a forced construction of the statutes by the Attorney-General, all the prisoners of the United States are sent to Albany or Detroit, upon the pretext that they are "convenient" and the State prisons are not "suitable" or "available." (Revised Statutes, section 5546.) It means a life broken by disease or death in a felon's cell. I do not overdraw the picture. Four men, convicted of illicit distillation, left the bar of a United States court for the penitentiary in Albany simultaneously. One was rescued by a pardon; death relieved the keeper of the custody of the other three.

It is not mercy nor a desire to reform the prisoners which has caused the United States courts to allow hundreds of men to plead guilty of violating its revenue laws and then to go away without bail and without punishment, save a threat of severity if caught again. This ridiculous farce has been carried on for years under orders from the law head of this Government. Why? Because the punishments are so ill-suited to the crimes that the country staggers when called upon to execute their sentences. Let us not only make no more such severe penal laws, but have the manliness to denounce those already of force and wipe the disgrace forever from our statute-books.

I am told the laws would not be enforced, but are needed to prevent the crimes. The advocates of the bill would invoke the majesty of the United States to frighten citizens. No such spirit breathes from the Constitution. If you would not have laws despised, pass none which you will not enforce. Make laws to provoke love, not to excite terror.

I will not weary the House by a critical notice of the twentieth section of the bill. Let me call attention to two things in it. It gives about the same right of search for fraudulent trade-marks and plates, &c., for making them, as the Government uses to protect its currency. It authorizes seizures of private property and its destruction by a judge. The citizen is convicted of fraudulent purposes without trial by jury. The mention of these things will condemn that section. that section.

M'COID'S CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

But another important question remains. The report shows that the friends of trade-marks seek to enlarge the powers of Congress that it may legislate thereon. The proposition is to amend as fol-

ARTICLE I.

Section 1. Congress, for promotion of trade and manufactures and to carry into effect international treaties, shall have power to grant, protect, and regulate the exclusive right to adopt and use trade-marks.

It was introduced in the House on the 2d of December, 1879, and referred to the Committee on Manufactures, of which its author is a member, and on the 11th of December, 1879, that committee reported in favor ber, and on the 11th of December, 1879, that committee reported in favor of its adoption. (See Report No. 3, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.) On the 17th of December, 1879, its author sought to pass it in the House, without discussion, under the operation of the previous question. He said there could be no objection to its passage. Mr. Arm-FIELD, thinking it unnecessary, opposed its passage. Finally the House awoke to the awkwardness of amending the Constitution thus hurriedly, and it was proposed to refer the resolution and Mr. ArmFIELD's hill, then before the Committee or Committee to the Committee of t bill, then before the Committee on Commerce, to the Committee on the Judiciary. The chairman of the Committee on Manufactures, Mr. Horr, of Michigan, begged that the only bill which his committee had ever had (as he said) should not be taken away. But the proposition to refer was carried with the quasi pledge that the Judiciary Committee would report early. It has redeemed the pledge as soon as the importance of the Subject justified a report. It is fair to soon as the importance of the subject justined a report. It is fair to assume that the report of the Committee on Manufactures presented all the reasons for this amendment. They were not convincing to the Committee on the Judiciary. Their report touched not the form of the proposed amendment; not because that was unobjectionable, but because they opposed the substance of the change. Nor did their report elaborate the reasons which induced the conclusion. Suffer me, therefore, to present my views in answer to the original report in its favor.

The first reason therein given is that, under the invalid legislation of 1870 the United States has registered 7,785 trade-marks, taken from their owners therefor $211,750, gave them in law nothing therefor, as the pretended protection was void, and that that money must be paid back or the trade-marks made good by amending the Constitution and then passing a ratifying law. To say nothing of such awkwas reasons for amending our organic law, let us content ourselves by saying it is cheaper to pay back the money than to have Congress and three-fourths of the States talk over and pass the amendment.

The second reason is that this is necessary, that we may keep our treaty obligations. It appears what those treaties are, and that they required no legislation on the part of the United States, that foreign manufacturers and merchants so understood, and that the act of 1870 manufacturers and merchants so understood, and that the act of 1870 was passed because it was thought best to systematize in statutory form the common law on the subject. Up to this day only three hun-dred and seventeen foreign trade-marks are registered in this coun-dred and seventeen foreign trade-marks are registered in this country. This number hardly justifies the high-sounding periods used by the trade-mark advocates about keeping treaty faith.

But suppose it was all otherwise, suppose the treaties were not authorized by the Constitution. Is it not an astounding proposition that it is necessary to amend our Constitution to carry out a treaty? Who makes treaties on behalf of the United States? The President, by and with the advice of the Senate, two-thirds of those present concurring. He and all of them are bound by eath to support the Constitution, and a treaty not authorized by the Constitution is no treaty; it is ultra vires and void. Every foreign nation contracting with our Government knows that our President is not our sovereign but our servant; that neither he nor any other constitutional officer of our Government has any authority beyond that granted in the Constitution, and they all recognize the rule as expressed by Story on

Constitution, and they all recognize the rule as expressed by Story on Agency, section 307a, namely:

In respect to the acts and declarations and representations of public agents, it would seem that the same rule does not prevail which ordinarily governs in relation to mere private agents. As to the latter (as we have seen) the principals are, in many cases, bound, when they have not anthorized declarations and presentations to be made. But in cases of public agents the Government or other public authority is not bound unless it manifestly appears that the agent is acting within the scope of his authority, or he is held out as having authority to do the act, or is employed in his capacity as a public agent to make the declaration or representation for the Government. Indeed this rule seems indispensable in order to guard the public against losses and injuries arising from the fraud or mistake, or rashness and indiscretion of their agents.

If any one has treated with us under a mistaken notion of the power of the President in this regard, all such a one can ask is to be released from the contract made by mistake, and we will, on request, released from the contract made by mistake, and we will, on request, consent to such release without question. But the doctrine that if the treaty-making power has exceeded its authority we must enlarge the power of attorney or be faithless is monstrous.

There is no necessity for such legislation. Mr. Cleveland, of New Jersey, while discussing this bill in 1870, admitted that the courts of England and this country had "so construed the law (common law) as to protect manufacturers as well as the public." (Globe, 91, page 2857.) When the bill went before the Committee on Patents in the Senate they ordered all this matter stricken out as unnecessary and "a new departure" not fit to be made. Mr. Willy, in reporting the bill, said his committee had "thought that under the common law every man had a right to his own trade-mark and could protect himself." (Globe, 83, page 4821.) Mr. Sumner said the bill had "put into the text of a statute rules and principles which have been matured at the common statute rules and principles which have been matured at the common law and recognized by our courts, but which have new character and value and explicitness by being set forth in the statute." (1b.)

Mr. CARPENTER said:

They are wholly unnecessary at the common law, and so far as the rights of our citizens are concerned in England [and of course here] they are mere surplusage, the common law covering all that would be covered by these sections.—Ibid.

It is claimed that the States cannot adequately protect trade-marks. Why not? Their judges are as honest and as learned in the law as those upon the United States benches. The jurors, if different in the two courts, are not better in those of the Federal courts; in some parts of the country they are much below the State standard of intelligence and virtue. States' officers are more numerous, and equally faithful; their courts more numerous and more accessible; justice can be had cheaper and quicker in the State courts.

But it is said the State laws are inharmonious and conflicting. Is that true? Certain States have special industries. The manufactthat true? Certain States have special industries. The manufacturing States protect their wares by patent-rights and State statutes suitable to their condition and peculiar circumstances. How many using trade-marks are also covered by the patent law I know not. The examiner of trade-marks could not inform me. He writes me that "the medicine, tobacco, and whisky trades have registered, perhaps, one-third of the whole number;" and the States noted for these industries may, he thinks, be credited with the larger proportion of the registration, thus far effected. tion thus far effected. Massachusetts specially protects watches. Some of the Western States do the like as to beer, &c. With these exceptions examine the following statement of the statutes. The dates sometimes do not go back far enough, for they come from the codes and not from the original acts:

Punishment in jail or by fine, showing extent of, in each.

Date.	State or Territory.	Number of months and amount of fine.
1872 1875, (1847) 1877 1873	California	6 months or $500, or both. 6 months or $100, or both. 12 months or $300, or both. 6 months or $200, or both. 13 months (not less.)
1859	Massachusetts Michigan Missouri Nevada New Jersey	6 months or $500, double on watches. 6 months or $1,000, or both. 3 to 12 months and $500 to $5,000 fine. 5 to 30 days and $25 to $500 fine. 6 months or $100.
1859 1864	New York Ohio Oregon Pennsylvania	12 months or $5,000. 12 months or $500, or both. 6 months or $30. 3 years and $100.
1876	Utah Nebraska Illinois Illinois* Indiana*	6 months or $300, or both. 1 to 20 years in penitentiary and $500. $300 fine.
1874	Kentucky†	$5 each.

*Counterfeit beer-kegs, &c. †For cheating by false brand, $200.

And in many others, doubtless cheating by false marks, &c., may and if many others, doubtless cheating by faise marks, &c., may be reached by the criminal laws against cheating generally. In over half of these the date is since the act of Congress of 1870 was passed. Who will undertake to say why Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Maryland, Minnesota, Mississippi, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Texas, Tennessee, Virginia, Vermont, Wisconsin, and West Virginia have not passed such statutes? In all probability, but for believing the acts of 1870 and 1876 sufficient, many of them might have made such laws. But they might not have thought the matter very important; for it appears (by absence of reported cases) that no one has ever sought to protect himself at law as to trade-marks in either of the States just named except Georgia. In the States which have statutes on the subject is a fixed purpose to punish such crimes, and uniformity in the character of punishment and but little variety in its quantum.
